Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am glad of it; and that is just what I want to maintain. But I can not see how it is to be maintained if the situation is changed in the manner in which it is proposed to change it.

Mr. LIND. You approve of the condition of affairs that makes the price high?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I approve of it; and I will explain later why I approve of it.

Mr. LIND. Let me ask my colleague another question. Does he not think it is because of the milling demand at Minneapolis that the price is higher there?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no doubt in my mind that the existence of the mills at Minneapolis does tend to raise the price; it can not be questioned that those mills have done a great deal toward building up the price. The same effect was noticed in the Southern States with reference to cotton when they undertook to build cotton mills there. The tendency was to raise prices.

Mr. LIND. It being the fact that the price of wheat is higher in Minneapolis, and it likewise being desirable that the mills should continue to maintain that price, does my friend believe it would be good policy to follow a course which tends to cripple and to eventually destroy those milling interests?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is only by having intense competition for the wheat that we maintain that price. Otherwise it would not exist. I contend that there is an abundance of wheat not only in the Northwest but within almost as easy reach from the South as from Canada. They have lately bought millions of bushels of wheat from Kansas City, and I would rather that they should get that wheat from Kansas City on this side of the line than up in Canada. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As I was just saying, it is not disputed that local conditions, the intensity of local competition, have raised prices from 4 to 5 cents per bushel. This would mean to the farmers of Minnesota and the Dakotas an increase in the value of the wheat crop for 1902 of some eight or nine million dollars, but I do not believe that sum measures even by half the real increase in prices.

In connection with the complaint made by the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce of the fact that the millers are compelled to pay an extra price to secure a sufficient quantity of wheat, they say:

> There is an immense field north of the border that is especially adapted to wheat growing. That promising field lies in Manitoba and the Provinces of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. By railroads already in operation a great part of the vast field in the provinces named lies nearer to Minneapolis than to any lake port. It follows that this great tract of wheat land may be made available to the Minneapolis mills if the fictitious theory of a tariff at the border can be overcome.

This tariff is not nearly as fictitious as they try to make us believe. That is, they recognize and say in almost so many words that if the tariff now imposed against the importation of Canadian wheat should be removed this great demand for wheat would be supplied and there would be no necessity of paying the extra price.

Mr. LIND. I will ask my colleague whether it is not true that under existing law our millers can import all the wheat they desire from Canada and mill in bond?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am coming to that.

Mr. LIND. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. I am glad they can. I am perfectly willing that American labor should have the opportunity to mill every bushel of it. I am perfectly willing that American railroads should carry every bushel through this country, but I am not willing that they should leave any of it here for consumption in this country unless they pay the tariff, and they can not as the law stands.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. Do you not believe that so long as the United States is an exporting country of wheat and flour that for every barrel of flour, and the wheat producing that barrel of flour, that comes from Canada and is ground at Minneapolis—that or another barrel of flour will be exported from some section of our country? In other words, is not this true, that every barrel of flour manufactured in the Minneapolis mills which is now consumed at home instead of being exported simply results in the export of another barrel of flour from some other section of the country—probably winter wheat? The ultimate question is its effect upon the foreign trade.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No, sir. Canadian flour left in our market will depress prices here and satisfy the intense local demand, which is much more potent than the world's demand in raising prices. Canadian wheat ground in our mills and shipped to foreign countries does not materially affect the local markets.

This chamber of commerce refers to the same Canadian territory so eloquently described by my friend from the Minneapolis district. He says that it is larger than Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio, and New York, and capable of producing more grain than those States. Here, then, is a territory capable of producing, if the gentleman is correct, more wheat than is produced by the United States, and it is claimed that all this territory is naturally tributary to the Northwest and that its products, if permitted, would come through their channels of trade. This country is now developing very rapidly, and for years to come will depend upon wheat raising as its principal crop. Winnipeg this year received more than 51,000,000 bushels from this territory, an amount largely in excess of that received by Chicago. If my friend is right in his estimate of the amount that can be produced by the Canadian Northwest, and he is supported in his view by the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, then millions upon millions of bushels of Canadian wheat would each year be placed upon the American market in competition with that raised by our farmers.

As soon as the tax upon the foreign product should be removed the railroads entering Minneapolis, Duluth, and other American cities from the Canadian Northwest would, in competition with the Canadian roads, cut freight rates north of the Canadian line, so as to secure as large a share of this crop as possible. This wheat would come into our markets at a freight rate little if any higher than that allowed North Dakota and northern Minnesota. The wheat would be bought at a less figure than it could on this side of the line, as this part of Canada is essentially new and an undeveloped country, where competition would necessarily be very small. In the past grain in the Canadian Northwest has usually been 8 to 10 cents per bushel lower than on this side of the line. This fact comes to me from people living along the Canadian line whose word I have no right to doubt.

While my colleague practically recognizes that the demand in the Northwest has raised prices, and that this demand could readily be satisfied from Canada, he justifies his position by contending that the wheat in the American Northwest is rapidly deteriorating in quality, and that unless we are able to obtain from the Canadian Northwest a supply of wheat strong and rich in gluten, such as is now raised in the Northwestern States, the millers of Minneapolis will not be able to maintain the reputation of their flour, and he asks with a great deal of earnestness what will become of the farmers of Minnesota when Pillsbury's "A" flour loses its reputation in its world-wide market. This contention has no merit. According to this same report of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce the three Northwestern States produced in 1902 about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat. Nearly all of this was of the quality described as strong wheat, rich in gluten. About twenty million of this would be retained as seed and some thirty to forty million consumed in other mills, leaving approximately 140,000,000 bushels available for the Minneapolis mills. Nearly eighty-nine million reached Minneapolis, out of which more than twelve million were reshipped. Forty-two million bushels of the very best of this wheat were shipped to Duluth and Superior, and from there reshipped farther east, not to mention that large quantities of this wheat went to Chicago, Milwaukee, and other markets. It is idle to contend that the wheat is not there. Even this year, with a crop somewhat less than last year, there is an abundance for the mixing process. The real meaning of this complaint is not that there is any real scarcity of wheat. It is not to maintain the standard of the Minneapolis flour in the so-called world's market, but it is to secure wheat cheaper than it can now be obtained and for the purpose of selling the flour at a less price in competition with the American product. The market for Pillsbury's "A" flour is not to any great extent in foreign countries. The market for that flour is in the United States. Out of 16,216,105 barrels produced in 1902 only 3,410,400 was exported, a decrease of 1,300,000 barrels in two years, and I am unable to ascertain that any was exported last year—perhaps a little to the Orient. It is not for foreign export that millers ask for Canadian wheat. They know full well that they can obtain and grind in bond all the Canadian wheat they desire for export. The law allows that now, and these mills avail themselves of the privilege. What they want and what they are pleading for is to sell this Canadian flour in our market in competition with the product of the American farmer. They do not want to pay the price paid the farmers whose wheat is shipped to Duluth, but they want to go farther north, into the Canadian market, where it can be bought cheaper, and haul it right through the fields where Duluth gets its supply.

If it is true that the Canadian wheat is of better quality than ours, and that there is in prospect an inexhaustible supply, as is contended for by my colleague, then it behooves the American farmer to insist upon protection. To admit free such wheat could have but one result. The people of this country will not be satisfied by getting any mixture; they will demand the best, and there will be hundreds of mills ready to supply that demand. Instead of a demand for American wheat there will spring up a demand for Canadian wheat. This is the market where the highest and best grades can always be sold. This Canadian wheat would take the place of our wheat, and ours would be compelled to seek another market.

To-day the products of the northwestern mills are largely sold in America, and the farmer is getting an extra price on that account. The proposition is to largely deprive him of this market. Do you think the farmers of the Northwest are ready to do this without a murmur? To do it would be absolutely unfair. They have in times past been compelled to pay as high as 50 cents per bushel to place their wheat on the Liverpool market, and have patiently waited and hoped to secure a market nearer home. To that end they have submitted to a tariff on lumber, coal, and a thousand other articles which they greatly need, and now when the day has come when this market has been created and the tariff on wheat is of some value to them it is proposed to repeal it and destroy the value of this market, and if the tariff on wheat can not be repealed, to change the law in regard to shipping in bond, so that wheat can be ground here for reshipment, but allowing the bran and shorts to remain free of duty in competition with like products in this country, and with corn, oats, and other feed products. The people of Minneapolis have received in full measure the benefit of protection, and it is nothing but fair that they should allow the farmers their share. Labor will not begrudge their coworkers on the farm a living profit. The reason for the shrinkage in wheat areas of this country is not the lack of suitable soil and climate, but it is the fact that it does not pay, and if there is any class of people that needs the fostering care of a protective policy it is the farmer engaged in raising wheat. The sneer indulged in against the tariff upon wheat as of no value since we produce a surplus does not do away with the admitted facts; the tariff does shut out the Canadian crop for domestic consumption, and it does have a tendency to strongly intensify the competition in the Northwest. Let me apply the logic of that sneer to the argument against the steel schedule. My colleague says that schedule is unnecessary, as we produce a surplus in steel goods almost as great as our surplus in wheat. He complains bitterly against the schedule on steel and denounces it as a graft schedule, raising prices. No doubt this schedule has some effect in maintaining prices, but the raise can no more be measured by the schedule in one case than the other. The object in each is to preserve the American market for the farm or factory.

Mr. LIND. But is it not true, if my colleague will permit, that we import steel? We are an importing country so far as iron is concerned, but we are an exporting country so far as wheat and agricultural products are concerned.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We imported some grain. The relative difference between the import and export of wheat, as compared with the import and export of steel, is not so very great.

I shall pass by as worthy of practically no consideration the contention that it would help the American farmer to have the Canadian wheat come into this country, so that it could be offered in European markets as part of our crop instead of having it offered by the Canadians in competition with ours. There is no law which prevents the Americans from purchasing and shipping free of duty through the United States to foreign markets every bushel of Canadian wheat. Then, again, our crop is not offered as one crop. Hundreds of dealers are offering American crops. It it the visible supply which has the largest effect upon the foreign markets, whether that supply be on this side of the line or in Canada.

It is claimed that there is no difference in the character of the people or in the industrial conditions of the United States and Canada that requires a tariff to shut out Canadian products. In this claim I believe my colleague is greatly mistaken. I believe there is a vast difference, which not only justifies but requires a protective tariff. In the first place, Canada produces no agricultural products that we do not also produce in sufficient quantities for home consumption. I would challenge anyone to name a single agricultural product that we need to import from Canada. The importation from Canada of any agricultural product simply takes away from the American farmer an opportunity to sell for consumption the same article.

Canada is essentially an agricultural country. It has very few cities, and what cities it has are readily supplied from the local territory surrounding them. The situation on this side of the line is vastly different. Along the Great Lakes and in the Northeast Atlantic States are, as I have said, 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 people dependent in a large measure for their subsistence upon the agriculture of distant States. Canada can see south of her, moving along upon the Great Lakes and railway systems, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of agricultural products seeking a market in the great industrial centers of this country. It is, as I have said, one of the greatest markets in the world. It is this market that I desire to preserve for the farmers of the Northwest. Canada has nothing like it to offer. The proposition made is to trade this immense market for what? For nothing. To do so would certainly be the height of folly. Canada has nothing to offer that could even in a slight degree compensate us for this opportunity. We already supply Canada with a very large share of her manufactured products. She will not and can not afford to withdraw protection to her factories. Canada has a surplus for export of oats, barley, rye, hay, butter, eggs, poultry, and cheese, and is in a position to rapidly and enormously expand its surplus if given a market in which to dispose of it. In none of these articles do we produce much of anything for export. As to these items, no one can seriously contend that the very small proportion of the total products which we export would show that the tariff is ineffectual.

To give some idea of the vast importance of these items let me call your attention to a few facts. This country produces almost a billion bushels of oats annually. About 165,000,000 bushels enter the channels of trade. Chicago alone handled 90,000,000 bushels in 1901. Canada could supply a large share of that. We produce about 135,000,000 bushels of barley, of which Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas raised about 70,000,000 bushels. Very little of the barley produced in the Northwest is exported. Some is exported from barley raised on the Pacific coast. Canadian barley would create a surplus and depress prices. The flax of the United States is largely raised in the three Northwestern States, and is consumed there and in points along the Great Lakes. Only a small amount is exported. Hay is one of the important crops. Chicago received of this crop 191,000 tons in 1901, nearly all of which was consumed there. Chicago received the same year almost 8,000,000 bushels of potatoes, of which it reshipped 2,000,000 bushels. It received the same year about 3,000,000 cases of eggs, of 30 dozen to the case, and consumed 2,000,000 cases, worth between twelve and fifteen million dollars. Chicago received that year almost 254,000,000 pounds of butter, most of which was shipped East for consumption. Practically no butter is exported. Chicago the same year received 116,000,000 pounds of cheese. About one-half was reshipped. Chicago alone consumes 10,000,000 bushels of wheat annually. These are a few of the items that would be affected by Canadian competition. In many localities the Canadian Northwest could readily and at a greater profit supply the demand than could the farmers of the United States who are now supplying it. Over the Great Lakes the Canadian Northwest can reach the American market for these products easier than can the farmers of the Southwest. Then, again, the farmers of the Canadian Northwest can afford to produce these things for sale at a less figure than can the people of the United States. Most of the wheat which reaches Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior is raised on land worth from $25 to $50 per acre, while the land in the Canadian Northwest is worth from $5 to $10 per acre. Interest alone upon the excess valuation of our land above that of Canada will almost equal 10 cents a bushel on wheat.

By an economic law the price of a product naturally tends toward the lowest limit of profitable production. This law tends to eliminate from the field of competition sections not favorably situated for the production of an article. We have a striking illustration in this country of the effect of this law. The East was originally agricultural like the West. Its lands were worth as much and generally more than western lands are at present; but the development of the West drove eastern farmers out of business, their lands fell enormously in price, and thousands of farms were practically abandoned. The newer and richer quality of the western lands made it possible for the West to successfully compete with the East despite the handicap in freight charges. It is claimed that the land in Canada has this same advantage over our western land. Are we going to repeat the experiment? I tell you, sir, I have no ambition to build up Canada, and I am not going to do it at the expense of this country. Open the markets of this country to the Canadian agricultural products and that country will build up very rapidly. People will go there by thousands and tens of thousands where they now go by hundreds. They would increase exports of agricultural products very rapidly; but leave them alone and let them build their own markets as we have been compelled to do, and we will retain our own people, avoid ruinous competition, and help develop this country. We do not owe Canada anything; she pays us no taxes, owes us no obligation, and there is no reason why she should be favored. All appeals for sympathy with Canada appear unnecessary. My sympathy is with this country.

It is perfectly evident that the question of free trade in wheat is not local in character, but one that affects agriculture through the whole country. Turn, if you please, to the statistics on agriculture, and you will find in the years past that whenever the price of corn or wheat has been low there has in the years following been a decrease in acreage of the low-priced crop and a corresponding increase in the acreage of other crops. A high price rapidly increases the acreage and a low price decreases it. Allow the Canadian Northwest to produce our wheat and the American Northwest will go into stock raising and dairying. Nearly all of this country can now raise corn successfully.

Minneapolis and Detroit are the two great exponents of Canadian free trade, and see in Canada great possibilities for the future. In almost the same language they condemn the tariff and argue that trade is naturally along lines of longitude north and south instead of east and west. They seem to think that we are violating nature's law and committing a crime against its decrees. This is one of those generalities which has in it enough of truth to be deceptive. Trade must of necessity be between sections of country that have products for exchange. The people who produce and consume nearly all of the exchangeable commodities live in the temperate zones, which extend east and west around the world, and trade as a consequence is naturally east and west.

The market for the surplus agricultural products of the United States and Canada have got to go east to Europe or west to the Orient. The surplus wheat and farm products of the great interior basin of this continent seeks the ocean over the shortest and cheapest routes. The Northwestern States find the Great Lakes and the northern railroads, running east and west, the highways for its commerce. The Canadian Northwest is accessible to the same lakes and has railway systems similar to ours over which its commerce can be moved. As a wholesale or jobbing center Minneapolis can not expect to retain Canadian business. As soon as Canadian business in the Northwest assumes any large proportions distributing centers will be established there against which Minneapolis can not compete, for they will have the advantage of cheaper rates. A rule now fixed in railroading grants a very cheap rate to these distributing centers as compared with the local rate. It is this law that necessarily limits the territory of each city, no matter how ambitious. These centers are found scattered within three or four hundred miles of each other all through the old settled communities. The same rule will apply and build in Canada large towns that will reach out for trade, even in territory now controlled by Minneapolis people. The factory for building farm machinery will do there just as it has done here. It will find a location in some of their wheat fields. The loss in the home market would be infinitely greater than the gain from the Canadian market.

In view of the attitude of Chamberlain in reference to a protective tariff against the importation of our wheat into England, it would seem the height of folly to open up our markets for the importation of Canadian products. Should the policy succeed, we may have to depend very largely upon our own market to afford the farmers a living profit.

Mr. HITT. I yield the gentleman whatever time he may need to conclude his remarks.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The time has come when there are practically no new areas of agricultural land open for settlement. Nearly every foot of land less than 2,000 feet above sea level has been settled. In the future our increase will depend upon what we shall accomplish by irrigation. The Secretary of Agriculture, in the Yearbook for 1902, calls attention to this fact. The increase in population and in the demand for wheat is more rapid than the increase in the supply. For twenty years prior to 1897 there was practically no increase in the United States. This may seem strange to people living in the great wheat belts of the West so recently developed, but while the people in this newer country were breaking up the virgin soil people in the older States were turning their wheat fields into pastures, corn, or other crops. During that twenty years the wheat area was approximately 38,000,000 acres, occasionally reaching 40,000,000 and dropping almost to 34,000,000. The acreage rose and fell as the price of grain rose and fell. During the last few years the development in the West has considerably increased the acreage; still the situation is such that unless wheat prices allow a living profit the acreage will shorten up so as to leave no surplus. The increase in the wheat acreage in the last six years of 10,000,000 acres has been largely in the semiarid region. It is this increased acreage that raised the 150,000,000 bushels or thereabouts that we exported last year. Cattle raising will no doubt be found a much safer industry upon this class of land, and the change is likely to come very soon. Still there is no danger of any real shortage of crop. England and Germany produce almost twice as much wheat to the acre as we do, and there is no doubt that we can largely increase the production whenever there is any real demand for it, but so long as wheat remains as cheap as it is farmers can not afford to expend the necessary sums for labor and for fertilizers needed for that purpose.

I feel that I have already trespassed upon the good nature of this House much longer than I ought to, and must make amends by closing in a few minutes.

This is not a question of Canadian reciprocity, though I find it is called such by persons who are anxious to conceal the real issue. It is an effort on the part of local interests to hide under the name of reciprocity their demand for free trade for certain Canadian products, and I find them cracking the party lash with great vigor, evidently to prevent discussion.

I notice in the St. Paul Dispatch, one of the largest Republican newspapers in my State, an editorial in which it makes an attack on me personally. It sneeringly suggests that I am going to defend my farmer constituents against "that avalanche of wheat," which the late Hon. C. K. Davis predicted would come from Canada in case the tariff was removed. This paper promptly reads me out of the Republican party if I oppose what it chooses to call "Canadian reciprocity," and suggests that the day of retribution is at hand should I have the temerity to oppose it. I am not disposed to be driven. In the discharge of my duties I am not going to allow the St. Paul Dispatch to dictate my course. In this very remarkable editorial the paper clearly shows its ignorance not only of my attitude but also of the real question at issue. It claims that all the protection the tariff affords the farmers is one-fourth of 1 cent per bushel. This one-fourth of 1 cent is what is paid for the privilege of milling in bond for foreign export, and has nothing whatever to do with importation of wheat for home consumption. It is well aware that there is a duty of 25 cents per bushel imposed on wheat imported for home consumption and that it is against this duty that the millers and their friends are contending. No one objects to have Canadian grain come through the American market or to have it ground there, provided it is exported to foreign countries for consumption, but we do strenuously object to have it brought here for home consumption in competition with the home products of our own people, and it is not fair to mislead the public as to the real issue.

The St. Paul Dispatch does not determine what is Republican doctrine in Minnesota. No Republican convention has ever declared for its so-called reciprocity. When this question was submitted to the last legislature in the State, which, by the way, was overwhelmingly Republican, it refused to agree to it, and I can see no good reason why it should have indorsed it. The State as a whole is largely agricultural. Its cities and villages depend for their growth and for their prosperity upon the agricultural classes. No one can point out how the agricultural element of the United States can be benefited by having free trade with Canada. They can not obtain from Canada agricultural implements or manufactured products to any extent, as Canada does not supply its own markets, but are dependent upon the United States and England to supply them. Almost the only articles Canada has to offer that we need are coal and lumber, and I shall be glad to vote for free lumber and free coal. I do not believe any duty should be levied upon those articles. Lumber is now eight to ten dollars per thousand higher than ten years ago, though the saw logs pay no tariff duty and lumber pays but $2 a thousand. Coal is largely a monopoly, and it is perfectly evident, from last year's experience while free, that it needs no protection. There are other schedules that I would like to see reduced and adjusted to suit present conditions. But I am not going to discuss the tariff at this time. If reciprocity with Canada can be had that will afford fair treatment of all classes, I shall be glad to support it at any time. If we can do anything toward building up trade with Canada without doing ourselves more harm than good, I shall be glad to see it done. I believe in the reciprocity of Blaine and McKinley, reciprocity in noncompetitive goods, but not in reciprocity in competitive goods, which is simply free trade. I believe in the beneficent policy of Republican protection under which this country has prospered so marvelously, and under which the farm has secured this immense home market, but I do not want that market traded away for the benefit of the milling and jobbing interests of a few cities on the border. To take from the farmer this market without giving him anything in return, as is proposed, is absolutely unfair and unjust.

I now want to thank the House for the kind indulgence it has shown me. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a few minutes to discuss at this time a subject which is somewhat germane to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. I refer to the insulting treatment by the Empire of Russia of American citizens who are Hebrews and who come to that Empire with American passports.

Now, I have asked for but a brief time in which to discuss this subject, not because I fail to recognize the importance and gravity of the subject, but because it will be presented to you later in this session, with much more ability and much more eloquence than I can summon, by my distinguished colleague, Mr. GOLDFOGLE. He has introduced a resolution which is now before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and which I wish to incorporate in my remarks. For that purpose I should like to have it read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the people of the United States that uniform treatment and protection should be accorded to every American citizen, regardless of race or creed, when traveling or sojourning abroad, and that every earnest effort should be made by the executive department of this Government to secure from the Imperial Government of Russia such uniformity of treatment and protection, especially in the recognition and honoring of the passports held by our citizens, to the end that there be no discrimination made by the Government of Russia between American citizens on the ground of their religious belief or faith; and the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to take such steps and cause such diplomatic negotiations to be set on foot as may tend to secure, through means of treaty or otherwise, the honoring and the uniform recognition by the Russian Government and its authorities of American passports, irrespective of the religious faith or denomination of their holders, to the end that every law-abiding citizen provided with a passport duly issued by this Government shall, regardless of what may be his race, creed, or religious faith, have freedom in traveling and sojourn in the territory of Russia, subject to such provisions in any treaty between the United States and Russia as are not inconsistent with the spirit and intent of this resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we can all see that there is here no question of partisanship. I think, further, that this is not a question of race or of religion, but simply a question of Americanism. It has always been so regarded and so treated by the Administrations, both Democratic and Republican, which have taken up this question in the past with more or less energy.

I have no desire to criticise the present administration in the State Department upon this subject. Nor do I believe that the Hebrews of this country have anything but gratitude for the courtesy and attention that they have received when bringing this subject before the Department; but, at the same time, to an American citizen who applies at our State Department for a passport to journey in Russia it is a striking thing to be confronted with a circular, of which I am going to read one clause:

The laws of Russia also exclude from Russian territory, except by special permission, all people of Jewish faith, and while this Government has been endeavoring for some years past to secure a relaxation of this enactment, it is only proper to warn those who are within the category to which they refer that it has not yet been able to secure from the Russian Government a promise of uniform treatment for all American travelers in Russia without regard to their religious faith or place of birth.

That is a very weak admission on the part of a sovereign power, the United States of America, that they can not secure equal recognition for all of their citizens while traveling abroad.

I am informed that the present Russian ambassador has expressed his willingness to aid as well as he can in the solution of this vexatious problem. But we might as well wait for an iceberg to drift complacently across the equator or for the bear to change his bland and child-like nature as to wait until Russia shall take the initiative in a foreign policy entirely contrary to the internal administration of that Empire.

What we need is another example of the new diplomacy—the American diplomacy which always tells the truth; goes straight ahead and gets what it wants.

I would like to read a clause from the treaty which was concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of all the Russias in 1832:

ARTICLE I.

There shall be between the territories of the high contracting parties a reciprocal liberty of commerce and navigation. The inhabitants of their respective States shall mutually have liberty to enter the ports, places, and rivers of the territories of each party wherever foreign commerce is permitted. They shall be at liberty to sojourn and reside in all parts whatsoever of said territories, in order to attend to their affairs, and they shall enjoy to that effect the same security and protection as natives of the country wherein they reside, on condition of their submitting to the laws and ordinances there prevailing, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether anyone in the Government at the time of the negotiation of this treaty knew anything about the internal affairs of the Empire of Russia. I should judge not, from a small piece of history that has come down to us in connection with my distinguished but erratic kinsman, John Randolph of Roanoke. Some two years before this treaty was negotiated he was sent as minister to Russia, but after he had spent three weeks there he came back in disgust because, as he complained, the people on the streets of St. Petersburg laughed at him. I suppose he had as much idea as anybody at that time in America of the internal affairs of the Empire of Russia.

Moreover, we had at that time no considerable body of Jews living in the United States as American citizens who could safeguard the interests of that race in the treaty. Since that date matters have changed very much, and we know now, if we did not know then, that in Russia the Jew is not a citizen; that he only exists; that he is not allowed to live except in certain circumscribed places; that he is not permitted to enter into certain occupations; that he is not allowed to have his children educated, except in a very small proportion at each university.

We know that they are crowded along the border in poverty and abject distress in many places. In spite of all that, I believe the treatment of this unhappy race is due to fear on the part of Russia that if they were to take the Jews into the body politic, assimilate them into their Empire, and make them a part of their citizenship, within two generations the Jews would be the owners of all the Russias.

Now, it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the whole Jewish question here. That is entirely extraneous to the subject of the remarks that I wish to make. But I wish to merely say that from extensive travel myself in Russia—and I have no desire to abuse Russian hospitality—I have myself seen some of the conditions as to which the Jews of the United States of America make complaint. I have myself fortunately escaped from witnessing those scenes which shocked and filled all the civilized world with horror.

I refer to the massacres at Kishenef—outrages upon the Jews—where men were stricken down before their families, where women were violated and torn to pieces, and where babes were dashed against the nearest doorpost—all simply because they were Jews and had invited the religious antipathy of the self-styled Christians of Russia. I do not refer to this to create any strained feeling between the two countries, but simply to illustrate the fact that under the treaty which now exists American citizens of the Hebrew faith in Russia have no more protection under the law than those people who suffered the massacres at Kishenef. If they have any protection at all it is from a little respect for the American battle ship, or perhaps I might say their desire for the political friendship of America; and that is all, so far as the law is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible to realize that here in the twentieth century a man may start forth from this land of religious liberty, equipped with a passport ornamented with the great seal of the Department of State, and when he gets to the borders of Russia, a nation with which we are at peace and for whom we have a traditional friendship, he is stopped, he is questioned, he is humiliated, and in all probability he is excluded admission to the Empire.

Whatever may have been his reasons for going there, whether a tender feeling of affection for his family there or a desire to have business relations with the Russian Empire, or whatever his circumstances in life, whether he be of American stock which took part in the Revolutionary war or whether he be the once simple peasant returning now to visit his native village in Russia, he is still an American citizen, and we ought to demand that he receive equal recognition with all other American citizens when they reach the Russian Empire. [Applause.]

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a matter of partisanship. I wish to amend that in so far as I believe it is the Democratic party that has always accorded the most favorable and equal treatment to foreigners when they transport their lares and penates into this country. Ever since the days of Thomas Jefferson, the father of religious liberty in this country, we have been devoted to the cause of foreigners who arrive here. Up there upon the historic mountain at Monticello beneath the trees is the simple monument under which lies the body of Thomas Jefferson, containing a few plain words on it summing up his career in life.

The chief among those, I believe, he himself would have considered the fact that he was the father of religious liberty in Virginia. Ever since his day our party has welcomed to this country and assimilated within our ranks all foreigners of every race and of every religious belief. We have learned from each one of them some lesson of patience or industry or economy or virtue or patriotism.

And that is why, Mr. Chairman, I hope that when this resolution, which is now before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if it receive their favorable consideration, comes before this House, every Member of the House of Representatives, irrespective of what religious belief he himself may have, will unite upon the common ground that American citizens, whatever their religion, whatever their race, whatever their creed, are entitled to equal representation and equal recognition when abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service is in such able hands that I shall not say anything on this subject.

On this occasion, however, I desire to address a few words on the subject of pensions. I have heard the criticisms of the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON], Indiana [Mr. MIERS], and other States on the management of the Bureau of Pensions. While I admit there are grounds for the same, I am forced, in common justice to the present Commissioner of Pensions, to differ from my colleagues on this subject.

In an experience of more than a year, and with a large number of cases, I have had the greatest courtesy and kindness shown me at all times. It is therefore a duty as well as a pleasure to place myself on record as to the Bureau and to commend it for the facilities afforded to secure final action on cases presented.

I also desire to express my gratitude to the head of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department for the courteous and efficient manner in which the public business of that office has been dispatched.

Now, a few thoughts on the matter of pensions. Aside from the justice of the Government caring for those who saved the nation, who sacrificed their health and faced death on the battlefield, is the fact that the amounts paid in pensions yearly is a great and lasting benefit to the country. These small sums go into hundreds of thousands of households, and every community is benefited by these quarterly payments. Much of the prosperity of the country is doubtless due to this wide distribution of nearly $140,000,000 annually. It is all put into circulation and is of incalculable advantage to the business interests of the Republic.

The payment of $2,844,649,626.56 war debt, with an interest, counting the premium on greenbacks, all in gold, was an act of good faith on the part of the Government. Of this vast debt, $461,616,311 was represented by greenbacks and bore no interest, leaving $2,381,530,294 as the interest-bearing debt of the civil war. On this it is fair to assume that the Government did not receive in excess of 60 cents on the dollar.

The high-water mark in which interest was paid by the Government was in 1866, when it reached $150,970,697.87, almost $3,000,000 weekly in gold, a tax per capita of $7 on the population of that period. Up to June 30, 1902, the Treasurer had paid out $2,705,453,886.41 in gold for interest alone.

To this must be added the premiums paid in gold of $125,698,013.65, making a total of $2,831,151,900.06. This, with the face value of the bonds, which cost the holders originally about $1,250,000,000, the lenders received the sum of $5,500,000,000.

It is estimated that the Government has paid for pensions to the men who served in the Union Army during the civil war and to their widows and dependent children $3,200,000,000.

The first named loaned the Government the money to carry on the war, while the latter offered their lives and sacrificed health and limb to perpetuate the Union and make good the promises of the Government to those who loaned the money during that critical period. But for the sacrifices of the men in the field both principal and interest would have been lost.

While I am not criticising anyone, I want it clearly understood that the credit of saving the Government and making the nation a world power with a contented and prosperous people is largely due to the men now on the pension roll. Too much honor can not be given to these brave, unselfish, self-sacrificing men who in the dark days of 1861 to 1865 stood loyally by the flag and the Government. When this nation becomes so mercenary and its people so selfish as to forget what is due to its heroes, its soldiers, and its patriots, I fear the days of the Republic are numbered.

The pension roll is indeed a roll of honor, and no one who served his country in the wars in which the nation was engaged and who needs the little help cheerfully given by a patriotic people should hesitate to apply for the same. Indeed, in my judgment, the time has arrived when he should not be asked to apply for this merited boon, this needed relief, but Congress, representing a grateful people, should pass a service-pension law. This must come, and the sooner the better for all concerned.

My associations with the veterans of the civil war have been of so intimate a character and my field of observation so wide for many years that I can speak with authority on this matter. Congress should pass a service-pension law, making the age limit the same as for the retirement of officers of the Army and Navy. Perhaps the age of 62 would be better.

In my judgment the time of which President Cleveland spoke some years since has arrived for action. The ranks of the old soldiers of the civil war are thinning rapidly. A few years more and their numbers will be largely decreased. Fifty thousand died last year—almost 1,000 a week.

Now is the time for such action. Let Congress act now and do its duty to the old soldier. No time should be lost if the brave men who are left are to receive common justice.

I desire to read an editorial from the National Tribune, of Washington, bearing on this subject and to have it printed in the RECORD.

[From the National Tribune, Washington, D. C., Thursday, January 14, 1904.]

WHY LONGER DELAY?

A thousand times more impressive than any speeches made in Congress, any arguments, any editorials, is the simple fact that over 50,000 veterans are dying every year.

That is, the setting of every Saturday's sun is noted by the eyes of fully 1,000 fewer veterans than greeted his rising the previous Sunday morning. Every churchyard in the loyal part of the country receives weekly additions to the new-made mounds which dot its surface, and these rise above gallant breasts that once stood in the front of battle when the nation's life was assailed.

Every day in the week hundreds of church bells, somewhere in the land, toll out the sad announcement of the passing of one of the nation's heroes.

The wail of the bereft widow rises hourly somewhere. The tears of the orphans fall in perpetual rain.

This, above all other reasons, is why Congress should waste no time in passing a service-pension bill to give to these dying men and to those on whom Death has set his fatal seal some measure of the nation's gratitude and justice.

Every week sees a full regiment of men that were once the pride and hope of their country mustered out by that fell sergeant, Death.

Every month the country loses a full, strong brigade of men who in their prime were unequaled soldiers. Every year sees pass away a stronger army than that with which Rosecrans breasted the rebel hordes on the sanguinary hills of Chickamauga, a larger army than that with which Grant attacked Vicksburg or Sheridan cleaned up the Valley. Nearly twice the army that Grant commanded at Shiloh or Rosecrans at Stone River yearly passes into "Those low, green tents whose curtains never outward swing."

That between 50,000 and 60,000 veterans die every year is the very best possible index of the physical condition of those who survive. The living are physically but little better off than those who die. From the living ranks must be every year drawn the immense levy of from 50,000 to 60,000 more to die the next year.

Therefore, to reach these men, to do them the justice for which they have long waited, Congressional action can not be too speedy. Its tardiness has left 55,000 to die the past year, going to their graves bereft of that which was rightfully theirs. In their windowless palaces of rest, under the sighing pines, under the tearful willows, they lie far beyond the nation's justice or the nation's gratitude. With the green sod above them, they reck nothing whatever of the "progress of legislation" or the fervid appeals of their friends to the dull ear of the money-seeking age.

In the sickness of heart they have died the death of despair, and Congress can do as little for them as for the dry bones rotting in Valley of Golgotha.

Now it is for Congress to determine how many more myriads of such men, of the men who in the very flower of their young manhood gave everything to the rescue of the country, shall be allowed to perish before it comes to their relief in the fulfillment of promises made in the extremity of the nation's danger. Congress can not give pensions to the more than 50,000 who died last year, to the hundreds of thousands who died in the years immediately preceding last year; it can not give them the food, medicine, shelter, and support which would have in some degree solaced their dreary passage to the grave, but it can do this for the hundreds of thousands who are following their comrades the selfsame way down the valley which leads to the beyond.

It can not diminish the sin of its forgetfulness to those who have already gone, but it can prevent an exaggeration and aggravation of that sin by immediate provision for those who remain.

There are hundreds of thousands of veterans and their widows who see before them only the dark prospect which has closed the career of their predecessors. Every one of them needs the food, medicine, fire, and shelter which their little pensions will provide.

To them this recognition of the value of their services by the Government will bring more cheer and comfort than anything else possibly can. They are old, needy, prematurely broken by reason of what they did for the Government. In their day of strength they supported its weakness and made it the strongest of the powers of the earth, believing that in the days of their weakness, out of its abundant richness and strength, it would care a little for them.

Will the Congress yet do it? It should hasten to perform a gracious act of justice for which there is now the opportunity; but opportunity will quickly pass. Let us have, then, a service-pension bill passed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11287, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SNAPP was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that permission be granted for five days to those Members who have spoken upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for gentlemen who took part in the debate on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD. For how long?

Mr. HITT. For five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. For five legislative days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me that there are two or three gentlemen who would like leave to print aside from those who have already addressed the House. I would like for leave to be extended so as to include them.

Mr. HITT. General leave to print on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks that leave to print be extended to the membership of the House to print remarks upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for five legislative days.

Mr. HITT. Can we agree upon the time when general debate shall close?

Mr. DINSMORE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I shall want two hours more on this side. We could not anticipate the discussion that we got into this morning.

Mr. HITT. Then we will try and agree upon that in the morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, we have hitherto several times had confusion when the word "days" was used by itself. I suppose the request is for calendar days.

The SPEAKER. "Legislative days" is the way the request was put.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not particular about it, Mr. Speaker, but I want it put one way or the other.

Mr. HITT. Is it not true that when a motion is put for so many days it is construed as legislative days and not calendar days?

The SPEAKER. That is a mooted question, but the House deals in legislative days. The Journal deals with legislative days, and the RECORD appears only on legislative days.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to modify the request, making it calendar days. If I can be indulged in a moment, I want to say that I have a resolution before the Committee on Ways and Means to define what the word "days" by itself does mean. It has never been defined thus far. There was a case where a gentleman got leave to print for two or three days before the adjournment on Christmas, and he printed two days after we came back, after everybody had ceased to look for anything of that sort. There ought to be a limit to matters of that kind. I do not care which adjective is put in, but I shall insist that one adjective or the other shall be used, either legislative or calendar days. If the gentleman wants the request for legislative days, I have no objection providing it goes in.

Mr. HITT. I will ask that the request be for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modified request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for expenses of participation in exposition at Liege, Belgium—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Henry Cooper, administrator of estate of Samuel Cooper, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Horn Island Pass, Mississippi—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting volumes 1 and 2 of the Revised and Annotated Statutes of Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Territories.

COMPILATION OF NAVAL LAWS.

Mr. HALE. I move that Senate Document No. 100, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, being a compilation of the annual naval laws from 1883 to 1903, including provisions for the construction of all vessels of the new Navy, together with additional matter, be reprinted.

The motion was agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION IN ALASKAN WATERS.

Mr. NELSON. I have an important letter from the Light-House Board, inclosing a copy of the joint report of the inspector and engineer of the thirteenth light-house district, relative to the need of additional aids to navigation in Alaskan waters. I move that the communication and accompanying report be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that House Executive Document No. 247, Fifty-first Congress, first session, being a message from the President of the United States transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, be printed as a document, as there is but one copy left in the document room.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3427) to authorize the Williamson Coal Company (Incorporated) to bridge the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River near Williamson, W. Va., where the same forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10418) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1257) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George F. Harter, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1419) to fix the salary of the collector of customs of Omaha, Nebr., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2817) to remove the charge of desertion against George W. Posey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 907) to establish on the coast of the State of California a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine fishery interests of that region, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3456) to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2916) fixing the salary of the collector of customs at Portsmouth, N. H., to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As it is a bill that it will take but a moment to consider, and it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 2659 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking therefrom the words "to the collector for the district of Portsmouth, N. H., 1½ per cent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2659 of the Revised Statutes, relating to compensation of collectors of customs."

CENSUS STATISTICS OF MANUFACTURES.

Mr. QUARLES. The Committee on the Census authorize me to make a favorable report on the joint resolution (S. R. 39) directing the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures; and in view of the importance of speedy action, the committee having reported a bill as a substitute, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill so reported by the committee.

The bill (S. 4122) to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and instructed to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, the results of which may be accepted by the United States as its census of manufactures for that State for the year 1905: Provided, That the expenditures incident to this cooperation shall not exceed $20,000, such expenditures to be paid from the fund appropriated for the expenses of field work of the census for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. And the Director of the Census in such work shall cooperate with the State of Michigan and in like work may in his discretion cooperate with other States which take a like census at a different time from that provided by the Federal census.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to have information from the Senator in charge of the bill. Why the necessity for it?

Mr. QUARLES. The ninth section of the act creating a permanent Census Bureau requires the Director of the Census to collect statistical information regarding manufactures in the year 1905. The constitution of Michigan requires that State to collect the same information during the latter half of 1904. The secretary of state of the State of Michigan made application to the Director of the Census, saying that inasmuch as precisely the same collection of information was to be made by the State within a few months of the time when the Government was required under the act to gather the same information, it would be better and more economical to have a practical cooperation between the State and the Federal authorities, each agreeing to share one-half of the expense.

It was explained furthermore that by that means we would get much more ample information from the manufacturers. There are certain local difficulties and friction in the State of Michigan regarding the taxation of corporations which make the manufacturers very reluctant to give out certain information, and they would give that to the Federal authorities readily, while they might withhold it from the State authorities.

Then it was thought by the Director of the Census that if within a few months of the time the Michigan authorities made this collection the Government should go to collect the same information over the same field, the Government would not obtain as thorough information as it would obtain by this practical cooperation. So, in short, we concluded that we would get a better census of manufactures for less money by such practical cooperation.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the question has been called to his attention or that of his committee as to whether there are any other States which may be in the same condition? I have not had occasion to look up the matter lately, but we shall take in Massachusetts a census in the year 1905, and we have heretofore always had some provision for cooperation with the Government to some extent in that business. I dare say that is already provided for.

Mr. QUARLES. It is provided for, Mr. President; and in this very bill the Director is authorized in his discretion to cooperate with other States that take censuses at a different time from that prescribed in the act.

Mr. HOAR. I said that we had heretofore cooperated in the census. I think I was mistaken in saying that. I think the cooperation I had in mind was cooperation with the Coast Survey and other branches.

Mr. QUARLES. We have anticipated the very case suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad if the bill would go over for a day. I see that it is a bill applicable to the State of Michigan alone.

Mr. QUARLES. The Senator from Iowa will permit me to suggest that he is mistaken in that regard. The last clause of the bill, having in mind Massachusetts and two or three other States, provides that the Director may in his discretion cooperate in like manner with other States that take this midway census.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator what has become of the statute which provided, some years ago, for this cooperation? Was that repealed by the census act of 1900?

Mr. QUARLES. I understand so, Mr. President. I understand that that act now occupies the field entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this is a very excellent arrangement, but I do not see why it should be applicable to any particular State. The State of Iowa had an intermediate census in 1895, and it will have one in 1905. There was a statute which authorized its cooperation and also authorized some division of the expenditures. Under our State law, and under the constitution, I believe, we take this census in the middle period between the national censuses. If the bill covers the case, very well; but I do not see why it should be made applicable to a particular State without embracing all the States in the same way. This bill is not in print. I do not desire to make any objection to its consideration, and if there is pressure about it so that it should pass this morning, I shall not object to it.

Mr. QUARLES. There is. The authorities of Michigan are very anxious to know whether Congress will favor this scheme. Their time is very short and they instructed me if possible to get this measure through the Senate this morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a specific appropriation here?

Mr. QUARLES. I assure the Senator that Iowa and Massachusetts were in the minds of the committee when the bill was considered; and in my judgment it covers the case fully.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be; I do not know that it does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALLISON. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I will look at it later.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed as it has been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed under the rule.

Mr. ALLISON subsequently said: This morning I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed Senate bill 4122. I should be glad to have the motion reconsidered now. The Senator from Wisconsin has an amendment to offer to the bill which settles the question I have in my mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was read a third time and passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. QUARLES. I offer the amendment which has been agreed upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following words:

or at any time during the current year 1905 and decennially thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (S. R. 39) directing the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures was indefinitely postponed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4099) granting an increase of pension to James Hassan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4100) to acquire certain ground for a Government reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 4101) granting an increase of pension to James H. Cate; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4102) for the relief of Louisa McCall, administratrix, and so forth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4103) granting an increase of pension to John W. Rulette;

A bill (S. 4104) granting a pension to Annie G. Norwood; and

A bill (S. 4105) granting an increase of pension to Josiah B. Ross (with accompanying papers).

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduce two bills, one of them drafted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the other handed me by a citizen of the District.

Mr. President, I wish simply to make the statement that in introducing such bills I do not want to have it understood by the citizens of the District that I always indorse them. The Commissioners draft a very large number of bills and send them to me as chairman of the committee, and of course I present them to the Senate. The idea goes out in the District that they are my bills, and I am flooded with requests for hearings and letters concerning them. I wish simply to disabuse the minds of the citizens of the District on that point.

The bill (S. 4106) to regulate the operation of street railways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 4107) to establish a public park on Columbia Heights and to make a new street on its western boundary was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4108) granting a pension to Elvira M. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4109) granting a pension to Solomon F. Wehr; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4110) for the relief of John M. Follett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 4111) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Smith, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4112) for the relief of the estate of Charles Wood, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4113) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railway Company for transporting the United States mails; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PATTERSON introduced a bill (S. 4114) granting an increase of pension to John Wilder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4115) granting an increase of pension to Charles Church; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 4116) for the relief of the estate of Rudolph Lobsiger, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4117) to pay the members of the plumbing board of the District of Columbia from April 27, 1893, to July 1, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 4118) authorizing the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to establish in connection with the immigrant station at Ellis Island an information and display bureau, for the purpose of aiding in the distribution of immigrants, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. BALL introduced a bill (S. 4119) to refer the claims for the Saugus and Napa to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 4120) for the relief of Thomas J. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEARNS introduced a bill (S. 4121) granting an increase of pension to James D. Beasley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 4123) granting an increase of pension to George Simms; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 4124) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Wanbliska, in Burleigh County, and Morton County, in the State of North Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 41) to provide for the printing of a digest of the decisions of the Court of Claims, together with the rules of practice of and the statutes relating to that court; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 42) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause a survey and examination to be made of the harbor at Oconto, Wis., with a view to securing a depth of 18 feet of water and the necessity for providing an interior basin at the mouth of the river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 43) to provide for the printing of 3,500 copies of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9548) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment providing for the payment, out of any available fund of the Cherokee Nation of Indians in the Treasury of the United States, to R. O. Evans & Co., of Green Bay, Wis., of the sum of $3,780, said amount being in full payment for maps furnished said tribe of Indians at the request of the council of said Cherokee Nation, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the amendment submitted by myself on the 18th ultimo proposing to appropriate $20,000 for experimental telephone delivery of special rural mail matter, intended to be proposed to the post-office appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE IN PARIS, FRANCE.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That there be printed 500 copies of Senate Document No. 398, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, 300 copies for the Senate document room and 200 copies for the use of the State Department, together with the maps and illustrations.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3905) to establish aids to navigation in Delaware Bay and River.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is very desirable to finish the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. We almost finished it last night. There is only one amendment remaining over.

Mr. PENROSE. I will withdraw my request, then.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will wait until we get the appropriation through, I shall be very much obliged.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to lay before the Senate the resolutions offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 114, by Mr. TILLMAN, instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to send to the Senate information in regard to the appointment of William D. Crum as collector of the port of Charleston, S. C.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the other resolution, instructing the Judiciary Committee, be also laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is being laid before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 120, by Mr. TILLMAN, authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary to report what constitutes a recess of the Senate, etc.

Mr. HALE. Before the resolution is proceeded with, I will state that the Senator from South Carolina yesterday very indulgently gave way to the appropriation bill, which we expected to finish and which was entirely finished with the exception of one amendment. Does the Senator want to go on with this matter, which has the right of way, undoubtedly?

Mr. TILLMAN. If I could have any assurance that the appropriation bill would be disposed of without any considerable loss of time, I would not hesitate for a moment to give way, but I have no idea that it is going to get through in the morning hour, and then I would be out of place again. I have given way so often, and have been so long-suffering in this matter, that I hope the Senator from Maine will let us take it up and get through with it. The appropriation bill is not so urgent but that it can wait until it comes up as the regular business.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has the right of way, and I shall not importune him in the matter. He very kindly yesterday gave way. I should like to go on and finish the appropriation bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I gave way the day before, the Senator will recollect, for two speeches. In fact, I have given way so often that I have not kept track of the number of times.

Mr. HALE. Everybody has to give way to a speech. The Senator understands that that is always the case. That not only has the right of way, but it is ever present with us.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly. I have a speech now that I want to get off which I have been preparing for some time. So under that rule I would have the right of way doubly.

Mr. HALE. I shall not urge the Senator. He has the right of way undoubtedly. I will get the deficiency appropriation bill up just as soon as I can after he gets through.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PROCTOR. I have a letter from the Secretary of War bearing on this resolution in regard to the recess, and which I ask that the Secretary may read, and that it may go into the RECORD and may also be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont to just withhold that request for a little while until I have laid a framework or presented the real issue involved here. As I understand it, this paper is in the nature of an explanation and a defense of his action by the Secretary of War, and it would come in much better after the indictment or the statement of facts is presented to the Senate. At least I prefer that course rather than that it should come in now.

Mr. PROCTOR. It strikes me that the reasons for this action naturally are the affirmative and should properly come in first. I wish to oblige the Senator, but——

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall object to its being read now, and will permit the Senator to present it later.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. TILLMAN). Let it be read.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I do not want to have it read now.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will take the ruling of the Chair upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor and did not yield it to the Senator from Vermont. Although the Chair recognized the Senator from Vermont, it was done without yielding on the part of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is very anxious that this shall go in now, I do not care. It is one of the exhibits in the case, and while I am not used to trying causes in a court—but as the Secretary is under indictment, so to speak, as a prisoner or criminal—I am perfectly willing that he shall have his say so before the indictment is read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield for the reading of the communication.

Mr. HALE. After it has been read, I do not know, but my impression is that there will be no objection to the passage of the Senator's resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Possibly there might not be, but the Senator does not like for his baby to come into the world without some clothes on.

Mr. HALE. Oh, I am entirely willing; I do not object.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has already made a speech on the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. But there are many new lights I have that I want to add to the stock of wisdom that you gentlemen learned in the law do not seem to have availed yourselves of.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the paper be read, and let us proceed with business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1904.

DEAR SIR: I am about sending to the Senate an answer to their resolution calling for information regarding the recess appointments to military office which are involved in the question, somewhat discussed in the Senate, whether there was what is called a "constructive recess" between the extraordinary session, convened on the 9th of November, and the regular session, beginning on the 7th of December last. It may facilitate any further consideration of this subject if I state to the Military Committee the views of the War Department regarding these appointments.

On the 7th of December there were 169 nominations for military office pending in the Senate without action, and as to 168 of these it was well known that there was no objection and that the Senate was prepared to confirm as soon as they had disposed of the objections to the confirmation of General Wood, who stood at the head of the list. It seemed very desirable to avoid, if possible, the legal complications and questions which would result from throwing these 167 officers back into the positions from which they had been promoted, or possibly excluding them altogether from office in the Army—a result which nobody wishes and nobody intends, but which might be brought about upon purely technical grounds.

It was apparent that, as the Senate was about to pass from the extraordinary session to the regular session without any appreciable change, without the Senators or their presiding officer leaving the Senate Chamber, two different views might be taken in applying the provision of paragraph 3, section 2, Article II, of the Constitution, which provides as follows:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session."

(1) If that provision of the Constitution were to be applied to the actual facts and in accordance with the reality of things, it would be held that the session of the Senate had not ended, and that the extraordinary session had merely merged into the regular session, without any such end of a session as the Constitution intends to terminate a recess commission.

If this view were taken, then these officers would still continue to hold under the recess commissions issued before the 9th of November.

(2) If, on the other hand, a technical view were taken and the Constitution were applied in accordance with the theoretical idea, which had no real basis in existing facts, it might be that on the 7th of December one session of the Senate constructively ended and another session constructively began, within the meaning of the Constitution. In that view the recess commissions issued prior to the 9th of November would expire on the 7th of December.

This view, however, involves not merely the proposition that there was an end of a session of the Senate, within the meaning of the Constitution, but also the proposition that there was a recess of the Senate, within the meaning of the Constitution, for there can be no end of a session until a time is reached when there is no session, and the time when there is no session is a recess. The recess may be called "constructive," but it is no more constructive than the end of a session which is assumed to happen.

A constructive end involves a constructive recess. A real end involves a real recess. Necessarily, a vacancy caused by the expiration of a commission at the end of a session happens in the recess caused by the end of the session, and it is within the constitutional power of the President to fill up such a vacancy. My own mind leaned strongly toward the opinion that the Constitution did not intend to deal with any fine-drawn distinctions between sitting one hour under one call and the next hour under another, but that the end of a session that the constitutional provision meant was when the Senate really stopped sitting and adjourned.

Inasmuch, however, as there were two views possible, it was considered that it was appropriate to give commissions in accordance with the second view above specified, to the end that whichever way the authorities, upon whom would rest the duty of determining the legal question involved, should decide that question, the well-understood intent of the appointing power, including both the President and the Senate, might receive effect. For this reason it is understood that the second set of recess commissions were given.

It is considered quite probable that these appointments, unless it be determined that the original recess commissions still hold upon the theory of an actual continuous session of the Senate, will be subject to the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

"No money shall be paid from the Treasury as salary to any person appointed during a recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate."

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Acting Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask also that the letter may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now I ask that resolution 120 be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolution No. 120 will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on the 2d instant, as follows:

Whereas Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States provides:

"The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and he shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law;"

And further:

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the session;"

And

Whereas it is known that certain officers appointed during the recess of Congress from March 4 last to November 9, and whose appointments were not confirmed by the Senate, are now in possession of and exercising the powers and functions of said offices: Be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized and instructed to report to the Senate—

First. What constitutes a "recess of the Senate," and what are the powers and limitations of the Executive in making appointments in such cases.

Second. What legislation is necessary to prevent the holding of an office by any person or persons whose commissions issue or are held by Executive exercise of unlawful authority, if any there be.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. HOAR. I did not know the Senator had taken the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; I have the floor; but I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to suggest that there are a good many considerations affecting the resolution which I do not care to enter upon now one way or the other, but it occurs to me that the Senator might gain his object without using the precise language which he uses at the close of the resolution.

It seems to me that it is hardly respectful to the executive branch of the Government, when the Executive has taken some action which seems to him, according to the communication just read from the Secretary of War, in accordance with his lawful and constitutional duty, to pass a resolution asking what legislation is necessary to check an unlawful exercise of power.

Mr. TILLMAN. If any there be.

Mr. HOAR. I know; but I think, if the Senator would strike out those words, leaving the resolution to ask what legislation is necessary to prevent certain officers from holding office, he would accomplish his purpose. I do not think, under the special circumstances, that the supposition can be supported by the Senate without an implication of disrespect. It seems so to me. I suggest that the Senator can accomplish the substance of what he desires without doing it in that way.

Mr. TILLMAN. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts has one idea of what I desire and I have another.

Mr. HOAR. I presume the Senator from South Carolina desires to get the opinion of the committee and perhaps afterwards to have the opinion of the Senate on the question of constitutional law. I did not suppose, and I do not now suppose, that the Senator has any desire to exhibit any disrespect toward another branch of the Government.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts was absent when this question was presented some ten days ago and rather extensively discussed, when some of the purposes and motives which actuated my bringing the attention of the Senate to it were presented. I claimed then, and I claim now, to have no other purpose than to try to get the Senate to demand that the Executive shall respect its prerogatives and rights—its clearly defined constitutional rights. That is all.

If my language is subject to the criticism of disrespect, I want to disclaim any disrespect; but I want to make myself understood. If the President has been guilty of lawlessness, of usurpation, and of an invasion of the prerogatives and rights of the Senate, I do not see why I can not, in the most respectful language which I can employ, if I believe that, say so, and have the Senate itself determine whether or not it agrees with me by passing the resolution. That is all I had in view. But we will discuss the substance and form of the resolution after we have put the facts before the Senate. Let us understand just what is involved in this issue.

Mr. President, in order to get the case, if I may so term it, clearly presented, I should like to read the letter of the Secretary of War of January 29, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, so as to put it in the RECORD. Though many Senators have read it, I shall have to quote it unless it is read, so that they themselves can hear it. He goes on in express terms to speak about the issuance of commissions.

I will read the part of the letter which I want to comment on right here, and I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to it. I want him, if he will be kind enough, to give me close attention while I am endeavoring to marshal the facts. Possibly he is as well or better acquainted with the fact that I am going to state than I am myself, but for fear that his absence from the Senate has left him somewhat in ignorance of the progress of this matter, I ask his attention to the closing paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of War of January 29 in answer to the Senate resolution of inquiry:

(3) All the officers specified in Schedule B have been reappointed, and recess commissions, of the character specified above, have been issued to them. It is the understanding of this Department that the authority of law therefor is Article II, section 2, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows.

I will not read that article of the Constitution, because it has been read and everybody knows what it is.

Mr. E. R. Hills, Acting Adjutant-General, makes an addition to this letter of the Secretary of War, in which he more fully sets forth what has been done. He says:

Commissions, signed by the President, were issued to all of these officers of the character usually designated "recess commissions," each of which specified: "This commission to continue in force during the pleasure of the President of the United States for the time being and until the end of the next session of the Senate."

Then there is something at the end of the entire exhibit, to which I direct the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Secretary did not act on his own volition, although I have understood that it was under his advice that the President had assumed this attitude. I will now read what the President said:

WHITE HOUSE, Washington, December 7, 1903.

The persons above named—

Meaning the 167 officers who have been mentioned—are hereby appointed to the offices set opposite their respective names, to rank respectively from the several dates specified in the recess commissions heretofore held by them, which expired at the end of the extraordinary session of the Senate convened on the 9th day of November, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President:
ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

This is the order of the President instructing these commissions to be issued.

I ask Senators to note that the President himself declares that the "commissions expired at the end of the extraordinary session of the Senate convened on the 9th day of November, 1903."

Now, Mr. President, an examination of Schedule B discloses this fact: The first appointee was Leonard Wood, to be major-general, and then follow nineteen officers, to be brigadier-generals, who have since been retired. So we have the condition further complicated by the fact that the President has issued a so-called recess commission to an officer who has not been confirmed by the Senate and who is now retired as a brigadier-general, although his real rank is that of colonel. The question as to what these nineteen officers shall receive as their retired pay is involved.

Next I want to have the Secretary read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to the Senate inquiry in regard to the appointment of William D. Crum to be collector of the port of Charleston. The letter is dated January 27, 1904.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 27, 1904.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to Senate's resolution of January 25, 1904, I beg to advise, William D. Crum was appointed collector at the port of Charleston, S. C., March 20, 1903, and a temporary commission issued. Mr. Crum qualified by executing bond for $50,000 and took oath of office March 30, 1903. Mr. Crum was again appointed December 7, 1903, and has given bond in the sum of $50,000 and took the oath of office on January 9, 1904. There has been no third appointment and no fourth appointment. The same information is contained in a letter to Hon. B. R. TILLMAN, under date of January 8, 1904, and which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 25, 1904.

The resolution also asks: "Is Mr. Crum now in office; and if so, under what authority of law?" William D. Crum is de facto collector at the port of Charleston, S. C. Whether he holds his position under authority of law is determinable not by the executive department of the Government, but by the judiciary, and by that only. He is not receiving pay, because of the provisions of section 1761.

Very truly, yours,

L. M. SHAW.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, that last document is such a remarkable one that I must, before leaving it, call attention to the statement that Mr. Crum is now the de facto collector of the port of Charleston and that his tenure is determinable only by the judiciary; that the President, having appointed him in recess last March, reappointed him on the 7th of December, commissioned him and maintained him in the office, and we are coolly informed by the Secretary of the Treasury, no doubt under the general, if not specific, instructions of the President, that the Senate has nothing more to do with the matter, and that the judiciary department or the judicial officers of this Government will determine whether Mr. Crum is lawfully in office or not.

I have here a copy, made for me by the executive clerk of the Senate, of the various steps taken in regard to Mr. Crum:

William D. Crum, to be collector of customs at Charleston, S. C. First nominated January 5, 1903 (57th Cong., 2d sess.); referred January 5, 1903; adversely reported February 18, 1903. No further action.

Second nomination March 5, 1903 (58th Cong., special session of Senate), referred March 5, 1903. No further action.

Recess commission March 20, 1903.

Third nomination November 11, 1903 (58th Cong., 1st sess.), referred November 11, 1903. No further action.

Fourth nomination December 7, 1903 (58th Cong., 2d sess.), referred December 7, 1903.

But we are informed also that he has not only been nominated on the 7th of December, but that he has been appointed on the 7th of December. Now, I want to ask my honorable friend the Senator from Massachusetts whether or not such a case has ever been known? I have been examining pretty closely, but so far I have been unable to discover a precedent for a nomination and appointment the same minute to any office subject to the approval and confirmation of the Senate. Can the Senator recall one?

We have, then, this state of facts, Mr. President: During the recess of Congress, when we were not here, the President nominated and issued temporary commissions to 167 army officers and one collector for the port of Charleston, and he notified us when Congress met in extra session on the 9th of November of his action. The Senate had these nominations under consideration, but it did not confirm any one of them.

Then, when the two sessions merged, the President pro tempore rose from his seat at 12 o'clock on December 7 and said—I quote the words from memory—"The time having arrived for the assembling of the regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, I therefore declare the extra session adjourned sine die." Then he struck his mallet on his desk and said, "The Senate will come to order," and the roll was called. I want to ask anybody, anywhere, if there can be, under such conditions, a recess?

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the President of the Senate on the 7th of December, when he declared the extra session of the Senate adjourned without day, left the chair and returned with the Chaplain. Then we had prayer—the regular opening of the session.

Mr. TILLMAN. The President pro tempore did not go 3 feet from his seat.

Mr. LODGE. He left his chair, went down on the floor, and came back with the Chaplain.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right; I do not want to quibble, and I am not splitting hairs here. I am endeavoring to get somebody to stand up here in the light of common sense and declare that there was a recess of the Senate in the view of the Constitution during that proceeding.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Well, Mr. President, if there was no recess, then is it not true that the recess appointments, which had been theretofore made, ran over into the so-called regular session?

Mr. TILLMAN. Why, Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut is too good a lawyer to ask me a question like that. The Senator from Connecticut must understand that our record shows that there was the end of a session. We are not discussing the question of recess. Do not mix the two words, as the Secretary of War has endeavored to do in his special pleading.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator will let me give an illustration. Precisely at 12 o'clock midnight on the 31st of December last the year 1903 died, and in one second afterwards the year 1904 was born. Does anyone claim that there could have been a recess in time then? A session is a sitting, and a recess is to withdraw from work, to retire, to quit.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator asks any Senator to say whether, under the circumstances described, he would be willing to say that there was a recess. Well, it seems to me to follow that if there was no recess there was a continuous session, and therefore the old nominations held over.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is a very attenuated thread for a great constitutional lawyer to hang a commission on. I am afraid it is like that bridge which Mohammed says souls must cross to get into Heaven, so attenuated and so slender—well, like the thousandth part of the spider's web, for instance, or something like that, I believe he describes it—but let me ask the Senator if he undertakes to make that contention, what becomes of the Constitution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator desire me to answer now?

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say what I think is the real construction of the Constitution in view of these facts; but I say that I incline to the belief, inasmuch as the purpose of the Constitution was that offices should not be vacant when a recess occurred, that the "end of the next session" may mean the end of a session, at the end of which nominations may be made.

I incline to the belief that under the circumstances "the end of the next session" meant by the Constitution is the end of this session in which we are now engaged, inasmuch as there was no appreciable lapse of time between what is called the "extra" session and what is called the "regular" session. I do not speak positively on that subject, but my mind inclines in that direction.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have gone into this subject somewhat exhaustively; and, so far as my investigations have led me, I find this to be the condition: There has been contention and straining for power by the Executive under this clause of the Constitution from the very beginning of the Government. There are numbers of opinions by the various Attorneys-General, who wrote them in pursuance of that well-known and well-recognized feeling of the human breast that men are always straining after power. Power always seeks its own aggrandizement, and any executive officer wants to use as much executive authority as he feels able to.

I find that while these various legal advisers of the President have strained to give the President more power in regard to appointments in one particular, which I shall speak of a little later, there has never been one up to this time who has ever undertaken to say that there was such a thing as a constructive recess and that a man could be appointed to office, a commission issued to him, and be inducted into office or maintained there between 12 o'clock and 12 o'clock of any one day. It is a brand-new thing; it is absolutely the first instance on record of any such idea having ever entered anybody's brain.

Hitherto all the contention has been over the question whether the President had the right to appoint after the Congress had adjourned and there was really a recess to fill a vacancy which had existed when the Senate was in session previously.

I have here a very interesting report, and if the Senator from Massachusetts has not examined it—I know he has had it in his hand before and has read it in the past—I want to ask him to refresh his memory by getting a copy of this report and considering the arguments that were presented and the facts that were adduced in relation to this subject in 1863.

Mind you, now, we all remember that there was a desperate war or battle between the Senate and the House of Representatives on one side and Andrew Johnson on the other, resulting, as I shall show presently, in the enactment of the tenure-of-office law, under which the power of the President to make appointments was practically annulled, and he was forbidden to remove men from office after the Congress adjourned; in fact, he was absolutely handcuffed, and that law remained on our statute books from 1867 to 1887, twenty years, before it was repealed.

I will read some of the sections of that act presently, because it looks very much as though, under these strenuous constructions of the Constitution which we are now having and the facility with which some legal lights are endeavoring to make excuses and explanations and furnish reasons why they are permissible, we will have to do something, or the Senate had just as well quit having anything to do with appointments and turn the President loose. But I want to read now out of this report. It was made by Mr. Howard, from the Judiciary Committee, January 28, 1863. If Senators have not got it, they might do very well to send up to the document room and obtain it, so that they can examine it as I go along.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 16th ultimo in the following words, to wit: "Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether the practice, which to some extent prevails in some of the Departments of the Government, of appointing officers to fill vacancies which have not occurred during the recess of Congress, but which existed at the preceding session of Congress, is in accordance with the Constitution; and if not, what remedy shall be applied."

That is the resolution under which this committee acted. They treat on that very point which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] made or attempted to make.

If it be true that the substantial purpose of the Constitution was to keep these offices filled, it is equally true that its substantial purpose required that they should be filled by competent and fit persons, and that to insure this result the opinion of the Senate must be appealed to and taken in all cases except vacancies which occur during the recess, when, of course, they can not act or be consulted. The language of Mr. Wirt—

The Attorney-General, whose opinion had been quoted—leaves it to be inferred that the filling of the office was the only great and paramount purpose. In this we think his argument casts out of view the qualifications of the incumbent, or at least treats them as mere incidents without special importance and entitled to no weight in interpreting the provision.

We, on the contrary, hold these qualifications to be of the highest and gravest importance, weighing heavily against the artificial interpretation he gives to the language. Why were the advice and consent of the Senate required at all but for the purpose of ascertaining and passing judgment upon these qualifications? And why, especially, was the giving of this advice and consent made a condition precedent—a sine qua non—to the appointment?

So the idea which the Senator from Connecticut advances, that the law contemplates keeping the offices filled, is brushed aside by this Republican committee of able lawyers in 1863, when that great man, Abraham Lincoln, was here and had the undivided support and love of his party and of the Northern people. They thought it was an absolute piece of nonsense that the necessity for keeping an office filled should weigh against the equal necessity and the constitutional right of the Senate to pass upon the qualifications.

Mr. PATTERSON. Who composed the committee?

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, Mr. Howard, of Michigan, a distinguished lawyer, made the report for that committee. I do not know who the other members of the Judiciary Committee were at the time. It is so far back that we have only one man here, I believe, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who was then a Member of Congress, but the Senator can send up and get the names of the other members of the committee. I dare say he will find they were of that able galaxy of men who illustrated that day as lawyers and have never been surpassed, even by the present satellites or—what shall I say?—planets. We have got planets and asteroids here now, and one of them has just left the office of Secretary of War.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the date of the report?

Mr. TILLMAN. January 28, 1863, Senate Report No. 80, Thirty-seventh Congress, third session.

Now, here is something more along the same line of the relative powers and duties and rights of the Executive and the Senate in making appointments under this clause of the Constitution:

It is obvious from the language we have quoted that the responsibility of the Senate in respect to the fitness of a person to be designated by the President for an office differs in no respect or degree from his own responsibility, for it is clear from the language that to authorize such person to enter upon and take possession of the office there must be a concurrence of the Senate in the designation. This concurrence, in contemplation of the Constitution, is just as indispensable as a nomination by the President, and both are plainly made conditions precedent to the exercise of the right of the President to appoint.

The Senate, should they see fit, might, doubtless, give in advance their advice and consent to a particular nomination, and the President might afterwards make the nomination, and then the appointment; though it would seem from the language that the President is first to nominate, and the Senate then to act; and such we believe to have been the general practice. But it is entirely clear that neither the President's nomination nor the Senate's advice and consent thereto can of themselves confer upon the person any right to the office—a right which accrues only when the President has made the appointment.

And it is quite plain that this preliminary action of the Senate upon a particular nomination was regarded by the framers of the instrument as an important safeguard and essential protection against the induction into office of an unfit person. It was presumed by the framers that the Senate, made up of members from each of the States, would possess local and personal information touching the qualifications of persons for office, enabling them to correct any error the President might commit in his selections, and they are therefore charged with the duty of examining and passing upon the fitness and propriety of his selections.

They were set as a check upon him, and in this respect possess a power of precisely the same nature and the same necessity as that of one House of Congress upon the other in the enactment of laws, and we can not hesitate to regard this power and duty of the Senate as one of the high conservative principles of the Constitution for the protection and security of the public interests and the purity, intelligence, and integrity of persons charged with the administration of the Government in its various branches.

And we do not suppose there has ever been or ever can be any serious denial that such was the object of the clause. It would, indeed, be difficult to conceive of a different object. And so important in the judgment of the convention was the attainment of this high object, that, so far as language was capable, they prohibited an appointment to be made until it should first have been advised and assented to by the Senate—with the single exception of cases of vacancy happening during the recess of the Senate.

These gentlemen even denied, and it was not disputed then by the Executive or by the Attorney-General, that it was within the power of the President to make an appointment to a vacancy that had occurred in recess if, having been submitted to the Senate, it had not been acted on.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Whatever that report may have said in 1863, I do not think that has been the view the Senate has taken of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state right now that it has been so long under contention, and the various Presidents, one after the other, have taken the view that they had the power, whether a vacancy happened during a recess or should be found to exist after Congress had adjourned, having been submitted once, that the Presidents have exercised the power to fill it and the Senate has acquiesced, but always by a temporary appointment, and it was submitted to the Senate at the next session, but never by a direct appointment, such as the one we are now considering.

I have the very strongest case here of the kind. It was possibly the most urgently pressed case which has ever come before the Senate, and it was in the life of the late President Mckinley. I will give you the facts as I have them from the records of the executive clerk's office. Hamilton G. Ewart was nominated as district judge January 27, 1898, and failed of confirmation; on the 13th of July he was given a recess appointment; his second nomination was dated December 13, 1898, and he again failed of confirmation. Congress adjourned. He was given a second recess appointment April 13, 1899. He was nominated again on the 19th of December, 1899, and for the third time failed of confirmation. June 7, 1900, was the end of the Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and on Jully 11, 1900, James Edmund Boyd was given a recess appointment to succeed Ewart.

Here is a case in which a district judge in North Carolina received recess appointments, was inducted into office, held it under temporary commissions until the Senate convened, but never did Mr. McKinley undertake to give him an appointment while the Senate was in session and say to us: "It is for judicial determination. He is de facto judge. You are referred to the judiciary to settle the question whether he is in office legally or not." That has remained for the strenuous days of the lamented McKinley's successor.

I have already pointed out what appear to me to be unanswerable reasons quoted from the report I have just read why the power of Congress and the right of Congress to participate in appointments and to see that none but good men are put on duty in office is explicitly and carefully guarded in the section of the Constitution from which I have read.

The idea of the Secretary of War that inconvenience might result and the idea of the Senator from Connecticut that the paramount purpose was to keep the offices filled are of too slight and inconsequential a nature to permit the Senate for a moment to yield up its constitutional rights and powers to have a say so in the matter of the character and fitness and qualifications of an appointee of the President who has been given a recess appointment under a temporary commission and has been inducted into office. Such an appointee can be perpetuated in office if we surrender our contention.

Let me ask the Senator from Connecticut what would be the result if we go on to the end of this session and General Wood is not confirmed or Mr. Crum is not confirmed? In the first place, Crum is in office. Let me show you just what the law provides in that regard. Here is the plain statute:

SEC. 2625. In the case of the disability or the death of a collector—

the duties and authorities vested in him shall devolve on his deputy, if any there be at the time of such disability or death, for whose conduct the estate of such disabled or deceased collector shall be liable; and, if there be no deputy, they shall devolve upon the naval officer of the same district, if any there be; and if there be no naval officer, they shall devolve upon the surveyor of the port appointed for the residence of such disabled or deceased collector, if any there be; and if there be no such surveyor, they shall devolve upon the surveyor of the port nearest thereto and within the district.

Now, there was no vacancy in Charleston which necessitated any straining of the powers of appointment to keep a man in office who had been rejected by the Senate in one sense. I mean he came here with an unfavorable report in one instance. The Senate had him up before it a second time and did not act, and he received his recess commission, which was all in accordance with law, as I understand it. He was put into office on the 7th of December, after Congress had met in extraordinary session, which was the next session, and had failed to confirm him. Under the law and the Constitution as they have been understood heretofore he should have retired and turned over his office to his deputy and waited for the action of the Senate to confirm him or reject him.

But the President says, "This man is in office." In order that there may be no vacancy, notwithstanding that the law provides how the duties shall be performed during a vacancy, the President issues him a commission and sends his nomination to the Senate at the same time—a double-barreled gun. Who ever heard of such a proposition as this in the history of our Government?

General Wood was promoted, and by that means vacancies were created below. Then other officers were jumped into the vacancies. They depend on Wood's confirmation. Else there would be no vacancies. Yet, to prevent inconvenience to somebody or to secure a salary which is not lawfully to be claimed now under present conditions, we have the President ignoring the statute in the Crum business, ignoring the Constitution and the precedents in the Wood business, and when Senators on the other side have their attention called to it they answer with fine-spun theories; but I have not heard anybody yet who is ready to father the idea of a constructive recess.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My trouble about it is that if there was no recess, constructive or otherwise, I do not see why the original appointments do not run into this session. Perhaps the Senator will answer that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would rather answer you with facts than with my own lame exposition of the law, but I will give you some facts and then I will give you some reasons.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me? I should like to answer that question from my present view.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should be very glad to have it answered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the answer is this: The recess appointment, an appointment which we all agree is proper, was one which, if not confirmed, would last only until the end of the next session. That is the provision of the Constitution, as I remember it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not say anything about a recess, however.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, there was an end of the "next session," I think. I may be wrong about it. That is to say, when the regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress commenced it certainly was an end of the extraordinary session, which was the next session after the recess appointment was made. That is the way it strikes me now. I may change my mind on examining the matter further.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My mind is not fully made up, but it will be observed that the Constitution does not say anything about a regular session——

Mr. MITCHELL. No; not a word. It says "next session."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Or an extraordinary session. It says the "end of their next session."

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, if the session of Congress which convened on the 9th day of November ran without end or recess into what is called the "regular session," then the original recess appointment would hold over. If it did not, if that which is called the "extra session" came to an end, then was there not some kind of a recess between that and this appointment—if that session came to an end before this began? If it ran into this session, so that there was no moment of time between the end of that session and the beginning of this, then why do not the appointments hold?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to call attention to two or three facts, one of which is that our officers here, who make up the records and who have been trained for years and years as to what constitutes the end of a session, have published all our documents. They have taken it for granted, as a matter of common sense, that the extraordinary session ended at noon of December 7, and that while the Senate did not abstain from business, except for possibly three or ten seconds and that the two sessions merged, the session of the extraordinary session ended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not if they merged.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, look here! Nineteen hundred and three and 1904 merged on the midnight of December 31, and you can not mix them together because they did not separate. Was there a cataclysm in which there was a vacancy in time? That is too fine spun for the Senator from Connecticut to hang an argument on.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. I have a decided sympathy with the Senator from South Carolina on this general proposition, but, if he will allow me, I desire to call his attention to a section which has been overlooked in this whole matter. I started out to investigate this case as a law question.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is purely a law question and nothing else.

Mr. PETTUS. I found the statutes to which the Senator refers, one providing that if the collector's commission expires the deputy shall occupy the office, or that some other man shall, four or five of them being named. The Senator has read that statute. But I went on with the examination, and I desire to call his attention to a statute which he seems to have overlooked. I agree with him perfectly that the President can not commission a man newly during the session of Congress, and it does not make any difference what sort of a session it is; but here is a statute, the act of August 23, 1894; it is contained on page 261 of the second volume of the supplement. I can do no better than to read it.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all officers of the customs whose terms of office have expired, or shall expire, before the appointment and qualification of their successors, and who have been performing, or shall peform, the duties of their respective offices after the date of such expiration, the salaries, compensation, fees, or emoluments authorized or provided by law, in each case, for the respective incumbents of the offices: Provided, That no such payment shall be made for any services rendered by any such officer wrongfully holding after the appointment and qualification of his successor.

Now, this statute evidently does make this collector a collector de facto. He was appointed, as I understand, last spring after the Senate adjourned. That appointment put him in office at all events, and he continued in office. His commission expired at the adjournment of the next session of Congress, according to the provision of the Constitution which has been read.

The President can not give him a new commission, but he is in office and continues in office even after the adjournment of Congress, holding the place, though not legally entitled to the office. He could not be appointed during the session of Congress, but he could be lawfully appointed last spring after the adjournment of Congress, and being so appointed, he was lawfully in office, and he has continued in office ever since. Now, the commission could not issue during the session of Congress, of course, but he is authorized by this act to continue in the discharge of the duties and to receive the pay.

Mr. SPOONER. The bond would be good, too.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the Senator from Alabama through?

Mr. PETTUS. I have concluded all I care to say.

Mr. TILLMAN. With all due deference to the Senator from Alabama, that statute does not apply in this case. The trouble about the whole thing is that he never has been collector, and he can not be collector, and he can not do anything more than hold his position temporarily. The Constitution is higher than any statute; at least I have always thought so, and the statute the Senator has just read hinges on the question whether or not he ever was a collector. I say he has not been collector.

He has only had a temporary commission to fill the place until the Senate met in its next session and either confirmed or rejected him. He never was collector. He is not collector now, except de facto. He has no authority to be in office now under any interpretation or construction of the law that has been handed down to us and as all of the decisions have hitherto maintained.

There is a statute here which has been referred to by the Secretary of War and by Mr. Shaw, too. I wish to call it to the attention of the Senator from Alabama. I hope the Senator from Alabama will let me give him some law, too, from the statutes. If he will turn to section 1761 of the Revised Statutes, he will see the case we have in point here directly and positively and clearly taken up:

> No money shall be paid from the Treasury, as salary, to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate, to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate.

There is a provision clearly and explicitly declaring that no money shall ever be paid to this man until he is confirmed; and yet the Senator has read a statute which provides that he shall receive compensation. But that means that after he has been confirmed and had his commission issued and is not only de facto but de jure a collector. These things obtain and follow, but not before.

Mr. President, in regard to the question as to what is involved in the constitutional provision itself, I want to read from the report which I have been quoting so liberally. After quoting from Mr. Wirt, who had contended that the word "happen" was intended to mean "happen to be existing," Mr. Howard goes on to say:

> Now, it is the vacancy that is to "happen." Certainly any event which has begun and become complete must be said to have happened. But if a vacancy once exists, it has in law happened, for it is in itself an instantaneous event. It implies no continuance of the act that produces it, but takes effect and is complete and perfect at an indivisible point of time, like the beginning or end of a recess. Once in existence, it has happened, and the mere continuance of the condition of things which the occurrence produces can not, without confounding the most obvious distinctions, be taken or treated as the occurrence itself, as Mr. Wirt seems to have done.
> The words "during their recess" are plainly intended to qualify and limit the term "happen." The vacancy is to happen during their recess. Now, if the vacancy the President is authorized to fill may (as Mr. Wirt and his successors contend) take place indifferently during the recess or during the session, is it not evident that no meaning or effect whatever is given to the words "during their recess?" Are not those words practically expunged from the Constitution?
> Again, we see no propriety in forcing the language from its popular meaning in order to meet and fulfill one confessedly great purpose (the keeping of the office filled), while there is plainly another purpose of equal magnitude and importance (fitting qualifications) attached to and inseparable from the former. In such a case the argument ab inconvenienti has no force, because the anticipated evils on the one hand are counterpoised by those on the other.

Now, here is what I want Senators to consider, for it is the gist of the whole matter:

> But this forced and unnatural interpretation becomes more manifest in its results. Those results would quickly open the way to a practical deprivation of all power of the Senate over Executive appointments. For if the President may in the recess appoint to and fill an office which during a session of the Senate was vacant, he may omit to make any nomination at a subsequent session, and at the close of it again appoint him under the idea of filling a vacancy, and so on from session to session.
> In the hands of an ambitious, corrupt, or tyrannical Executive this use of the power would soon bring about the very state of things which the Constitution so carefully guards against, by requiring, in express terms, that the advice of the Senate shall first be taken, and its consent obtained, before an appointment shall be made. We do not hesitate to say that this great safeguard of the public rights, interests, and peace is practically prostrated and destroyed by the insidious, and, to our minds, totally unfounded construction which has been forced upon the clause.

Mr. HALE. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am reading from the report of Senator Howard in 1863. He was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I think, or on that committee, and he made a most able and conclusive and exhaustive report. The whole subject of the relation between the Executive and the Senate in the matter of appointments is set forth here so luminously and so conclusively that I do not see how anybody can find any argument to controvert the position he takes.

But, Mr. President, we are face to face with a condition and not a theory. The present Executive has not only created a constructive recess in his own mind, but has acted upon that theory, and has not only nominated men here, but at the same moment has appointed them, given them commissions; and under this constructive recess idea these commissions hold until the present session of Congress expires. Then under this power which he has claimed and exercised he can appoint them again; and so on we go indefinitely. The Senate is eliminated as a factor in the matter of appointments upon which the Executive has set his heart.

Mr. McCOMAS. That report was made in the third session of what Congress?

Mr. TILLMAN. In the third session of the Thirty-seventh Congress, Reports of Committees, No. 80.

Mr. HALE. What year?

Mr. TILLMAN. In 1863, before the controversy which resulted in the tenure-of-office act had arisen with Andrew Johnson. It was made in Lincoln's Administration, and it was purely a presentation of the views of that committee in regard to appointments, after the Senate adjourned, to vacancies which had existed while it was in session.

As to this idea which now obtains and which has been acted upon, that was not in the dream of the wildest revolutionists who might have existed at that time. Here are the members of the committee which made this report: Mr. Trumbull was chairman; Mr. Foster of Connecticut, Mr. Ten Eyck of New Jersey, Mr. Harris of New York, Mr. Howard of Michigan, and Mr. Powell of Kentucky. I thank the Senator from Colorado for handing me the list of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. It was a strong committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have said about all I care to say, Mr. President, as I do not care to enter into any apparently partisan discussion of this question or any effort to give it any political coloring. I have sedulously and earnestly endeavored to appeal to Senators as Senators and not as Republicans or Democrats, merely trying to uphold the power and rights and dignities of this body in dealing with these matters.

I do not even care to do more than allude in passing to the fact regarding this little, measly position in my State, the collector of the port of Charleston, which is no more, you might say, as far as its importance is concerned, except the principle underlying it, than a gnat. We have not only had the President disobey the direct statutory provisions in regard to who shall perform the functions of that office when a vacancy occurs, but we have had him put into office, holding in office, nominated and issued a commission at the same moment to this man, notwithstanding the fact that the entire business community who have to deal with that office have protested and protested and protested against his unfitness and his utter disqualification for the position.

As far as General Wood is concerned, with that I have nothing to do other than to say that the two are together. They are on all fours. The one is an invasion of the rights of the Senate in regard to the Army and the other an invasion of the rights of the Senate in regard to a collector of the port.

If the President, as I said the other day, can make appointments of this kind and hold the man in office de facto in Charleston, contrary to the will of the Senators, he can do it in Boston, or in New York, or in Chicago, or any other place in the Union.

A little blaze is sometimes easily stamped out, but if you let it go on it spreads into a conflagration which sweeps away millions of property and devastates and destroys vast areas. This seems to be the little beginning of a line of—well, I do not like to use so harsh a word as usurpation, but I do not know what else to call it. The Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Massachusetts has appealed to my respect for the Executive not to use language in the resolution which would be considered disrespectful. I want to get at the result; I want to accomplish the purpose; and that is to have the Senate declare through its Judiciary Committee that such a thing as a constructive recess is nonsense and that any appointments made in this manner are unlawful. That is what I am after.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think this request of his would in any way be limited or hampered by striking out the second clause?

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean the last clause?

Mr. HALE. Yes. It is marked "second." It is not my suggestion. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggested that amendment, and he is absent. I do not see but that the Senator will accomplish what he wants done and what I think most of us want done, that there should be an expression by the great law committee of the Senate, representing the Senate, upon a subject in which the Senate is very greatly interested. I think the Senator will accomplish all that he desires by leaving off the second clause, which perhaps throws some unnecessary reflection.

Mr. CULLOM. Where is that second clause?

Mr. HALE. It is on the second page of the resolution, the last clause.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can understand, I think, that Senators are not willing to commit themselves to an assertion, by a resolution of this character, that the Executive has exercised any unlawful authority. They know it and they want possibly to correct the evil, but still they do not want to do it officially. If they are very anxious that the resolution shall pass without those words, I will consent to expunge them. But I want to read this.

Mr. HALE. I can not speak for anyone else, but I shall certainly vote for the resolution when that clause is struck off. I am in full accord with the Senator. I do not think, as I have said before, that the Constitution is made as a pitfall for the unwary to fall into. It is an open, clear document, made by open, clear-minded, frank men; and I have no idea that they contemplated any such constructive recess. I would be glad to have the Senate direct the Judiciary Committee to report, or request them to report; but I have no doubt about the final result when it comes around under the section which has been read already this morning, that the Comptroller will make short work of this business.

Mr. TILLMAN. The trouble about that is that Crum is in office and we are calmly told by the Secretary of the Treasury that there is no way to determine whether he is there lawfully or not. He says he is there de facto, and unless we should pass some resolution which might make it possible to determine a question of this kind in the future, I would feel that a mere announcement by the Senate of its views would have little or no weight. It, of course, might be worth something.

Mr. HALE. I think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me read the Senator a statute here that was thought necessary once and that I should like to see enacted again, because it was repealed in 1887. I am reading section 1771 before it was repealed:

Every person who, contrary to the four preceding sections—

You might strike out "the four preceding sections" and say "contrary to law"—

Every person who, contrary to law, accepts any appointment to or employment in any office, or holds or exercises, or attempts to hold or exercise, any such office or employment, shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

Now, our difficulty is this: The Secretary of the Treasury tells us candidly Mr. Crum is de facto collector of the port of Charleston; that he holds the commission, and he is also here under nomination, and whether he will be confirmed or not it is for the Senate to determine. The Senate has refused to confirm him twice, and it may refuse to do so again.

But suppose it does or suppose it does not; if we would enact a law to make it unlawful for him to occupy that office and put it in the power of some citizen to go to the court and get out a warrant and get this man jerked out of there, we could stop the President from filling offices unlawfully in this way. As it is, I know of no remedy. I am willing to take out the last clause of the resolution and let the Judiciary Committee wrestle with the subject and do what it pleases with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator modify his resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. I modify it by striking out the last clause.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I desire to ask the Senator one question before he takes his seat.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the resolution to come to a vote.

Mr. MCCOMAS. As the hour is near 2 o'clock——

Mr. TILLMAN. I want it to come to a vote.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. What becomes of the other resolution? Does that go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. TILLMAN. The other resolution has gone to limbo. It will not be necessary any more here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to have it removed from the Calendar.

Mr. TILLMAN. Take it off the Calendar and put it in the waste basket.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be indefinitely postponed, and also the resolution on the same subject submitted by the Senator from South Carolina December 11, 1903.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6331) granting an increase of pension to James M. Dickey.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8889) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TATE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 892) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 958) granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3776) granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3903) granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6022) granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Now let the urgent deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the point of order raised by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, when I entered the Senate a few months since it was my intention to conduct myself with that unobtrusiveness that is usually expected of novitiates elected to this honorable body, and to adapt my course to the traditions of the Senate, which seemed to require a gradual method amalgamating new members with the debating force of this body.

Only a short time ago, however, I sought to introduce into the Senate a resolution inviting Cuba to become a State in the Union. I did this simply for the sake of consistency, carrying out the line of conduct which I had marked out for myself regarding this great question when the question of reciprocity was before the House of Representatives, and intending to present my individual view that if Cuba wanted commercial union with us it would be better for her, as well as better for us, to admit her to political union, which would involve the best kind of commercial union—the freedom of trade of the Republic. I expected that that resolution would go to a committee and would there sleep.

To my great surprise, however, it was pounced upon by the "big four" of the dominant party in the Senate; was seized, taken away from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and put upon the table here for debate, analyzed, criticised, attacked, as an evidence of attempted bad faith upon the part of the Republic of the United States toward a weak sister Republic recently admitted to the family of nations.

I was told that it was an insult to make this invitation. I was told that the invitation invited Cuba to scuttle her ship; that it was an invitation to suicide, and all this regarding an invitation to a small, weak, and dependent Republic to become a great State, a sovereign State of an indestructible Union of States bound together for the general welfare and common defense. I was compelled to make a defense of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada will suspend one moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to satisfactorily adjust and determine all differences between the United States and Colombia growing out of the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. BACON. Let it lie over.

Mr. HALE. Let it lie over with the same right it has now.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was compelled, Mr. President, to make a defense of that resolution, to insist that it did not violate the spirit of the Teller resolution, that it maintained Cuba as a free State, simply admitting her to the Union of States, and admitting her to the incomparable advantages not only of political union but of free commercial union with these States.

I was compelled to meet Senators upon this floor who, whilst they claimed that it was an insult to invite Cuba into the Union, an insult to Cuba herself, insisted upon it that it was entirely consistent with our friendly relations with the Colombian Republic to bring the armed forces of the United States into her territory, to surround that territory with ships of war, to aid in the dismemberment of that Republic and the segregation of her insular from her continental territory.

And so yesterday I was again brought into the debate by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who, in the debate regarding the St. Louis Exposition, saw fit to allude to some utterances of mine at Omaha in the early part of January; utterances which were addressed to party associates at a Jacksonian banquet. The Senator from Wisconsin insisted upon it that there I repudiated one of the cardinal doctrines of the Democratic party in the last campaign.

When I explained what I said at Omaha by stating that I had there declared that the issue of imperialism had been presented to the American people in the last campaign with rare and splendid eloquence, but that the conscience of the American people had been blunted by an intense commercialism and that the appeal fell upon their ears in vain, and that whilst I trusted that the Democratic party would never fail to place in its platform the repudiation of the doctrine of controlling subject peoples against their will, I did not believe that that issue, from the experience of the last campaign, would gain many votes, the Senator arraigned me for my alleged indictment of the American people; declared that he could not understand how a Senator of the United States could impute to the people of the United States that their eyes had been closed by dollars to the demands of liberty or the traditions of the Republic; that it was a bold thing to thus impeach a majority of the American people; and then, proceeding, insisted that the ideals and traditions of the American people are cherished by them and that they will not be forsaken.

The Senator seems to think that these ideals have been uniformly maintained by this country. Mr. President, I admit that the ancient ideals of the Republic were maintained throughout the entire history of the Republic until recent years; and I claim that it is only within the last six years, years of Republican domination, that these ideals have been abandoned.

Now, what were those ideals of the Republic? The great and prominent ideal of the Republic was voiced in the words of Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence that all men were created free and equal; that Government rested for its just powers upon the consent of the governed; that taxation and representation were inseparable. This was the new gospel of popular rights voiced by our country—the Messiah of the nations.

Would the Senator from Wisconsin, would the Senators of the dominant party subscribe to that doctrine now? Are the rights of men now equal when under this new theory of government we have under our flag two classes of people, part citizens and part subjects? Does our Government rest upon the consent of the governed when it embraces subject peoples desirous of national life, but governed by us without their consent and against their will?

Are taxation and representation inseparable when we have under our flag two classes of people—those who through representation participate in taxation, and those who without representation are taxed? What has become of this ideal, declared for over a hundred years by every patriot and orator in the land as the essential element of just government?

And then, later on, the great apostle of liberty, Lincoln, in the memorable debate preceding our civil war, declared that this nation could not live half slave and half free, half citizen and half subject. Would the Senator from Wisconsin subscribe to that doctrine now?

And so, later on, Mr. McKinley, unlike our present Executive, in a memorable document, submitting the entire controversy of this country with Spain to the judgment of the representatives of the people whether for peace or war, declared, after months of painful and arduous negotiation upon this subject, that forcible annexation would be criminal aggression.

I ask whether the Senator from Wisconsin subscribed to that ideal; and if so, how he reconciles the declaration of that ideal with the policy of the Republican party within the past six years, which in a war, declared for humanity and humanity alone, intended to free a people who had been oppressed from the cruelty of Spain, sought whilst freeing that people to subject another people, equally suffering from cruelty and aggression, equally capable of self-government, equally desirous of national life, to the unrestrained and uncontrolled will of our people and by criminal aggression forcibly annexed their country to ours as a colonial dependency?

I ask how he can reconcile the ideal of the lamented McKinley, that forcible annexation is criminal aggression, with the long and bloody war we had, in which an entire province was swept with fire and sword, and in which the liberties of a people desirous of freedom and of maintaining a national life were taken away?

And so it is with other ideals that had been declared by the fathers of our country. In this body, on Washington's Birthday, it is the custom to read the Farewell Address of that exalted patriot. I believe the custom is still pursued here, though of late years every word of it contains an indictment of the existing policy of the Republican party.

Let me quote a few words from Washington regarding the ideals of this country as declared by him. In that farewell address he urged that we should—

> Avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which under any form of government are unauspicious to liberty.

And enjoining upon those intrusted with the administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, he added:

> Avoid encroachments upon other departments. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

How do these utterances apply to existing conditions? Why, Mr. President, under the Constitution of the United States the power to declare war is vested in the Congress of the United States. Under other governments, despotic in form, monarchical in character, that power belongs to the executive; but the fathers of this country, realizing that an Executive of violent and unrestrained temper might easily involve the country in war, determined to submit this great question to the deliberation of the representatives of all the people in Congress assembled, to subject it to the criticism and analysis of debate, and make the process of war necessarily slow and deliberate.

Congress alone can declare war. Yet in the face of this constitutional enactment the President of the United States has recently waged—not only declared, but waged—a successful war, ordered the armed forces of the United States to the territory of a power with which we were at peace, placed them on that territory, lined her shores with war ships, and gave notice to the Government of that power that it should not land its troops upon its own territory for the purpose of suppressing disorder, and by this display of force so overawed a weak people that they suffered dismemberment and spoliation of territory.

Yet when we witness these encroachments of power by the Executive, so carefully guarded against by the Constitution, encroachments against which Washington warned us so solemnly, Senators of the United States, the Senators of the dominant party, instead of jealously guarding the powers conferred upon them by the Constitution, stand here in abject servility and praise the Executive, who has encroached upon one of the most important functions conferred upon them by the Constitution, for his energy in despoiling them of their constitutional power and Colombia of her territory.

And so Washington, forecasting the future, insisted that the Constitution should not be changed by encroachment; that it was better to employ the slow process of constitutional amendment if a good sought for by the country but prohibited by the Constitution was desired, and added:

But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

And so in this case the defense is made that the ultimate purpose of this war, thus waged in violation of the Constitution, was beneficial to this country and beneficial to collective humanity. This is the justification for the encroachment of the Executive upon the exclusive power of Congress; but Washington guards us against the argument which would lead to such an usurpation of power, and declares:

But this in one instance may be the instrument of good; it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

So these ideals of Washington, to which I have referred, have been the traditional ideals of the Republic shattered by this Administration during the past six years. How is it with other nations? Washington, regarding our relations with other nations, said:

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind that magnanimous and so novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence.

Where is that ideal to-day? Where was the justice and benevolence which controlled us in our relation to the people of the Philippines?

Where was the justice or the benevolence of our action toward the Colombian Republic, where we, having attained certain rights under a treaty of amity, mere privileges of free access and free transit through a country, privileges terminable upon a notice of one year, took advantage of them as so-called property rights and made them the base of an offensive war, an aggressive war, against Colombia, which deprived her of her most valuable territory?

Where was the justice, where was the benevolence of our action regarding that country?

Then Washington says, in speaking regarding a liberal intercourse with foreign nations:

But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive preference; consulting the natural course of things, but forcing nothing.

"Our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand." How has that ideal, declared by Washington as the ideal of the Republic, been vindicated by the action of the Republican party? Within the last two months a treaty has been made with the Republic of Cuba under the stipulations of which she is to raise her tariff wall against every other country from 25 to 35 per cent higher than it exists against our country, the very purpose being to drive out of that island the English, German, and French trade, which belongs to them of right to-day, because they sell their wares cheaper than do the producers of the United States.

We propose by this treaty, under an ideal which declared for equal and impartial treatment, to drive friendly nations out of the commerce of Cuba, to appropriate it for ourselves; and this we call "impartial trade!" This the Senator calls "cherishing the ancient ideals."

Why, Mr. President, the true policy of this Republic is that in this great Union of forty-five States, which embraces over 70,000,000 people, free trade should exist everywhere and that there should be no commercial restraint, no imposition of duties at the boundary lines of the States in order to restrain domestic trade and commerce; but the ideal of the Republic, as declared by Washington, in regard to its relations with other countries was that we should seek harmony with all the nations of the world by impartial trade—free trade within the Republic, impartial trade outside of the Republic. But we seek exclusive preferences, though Washington urges as the ideal of the Republic—

Neither seeking nor granting exclusive preferences; consulting the natural course of things, but forcing nothing.

That was the ideal of Washington. Simply because we can not sell to the Cuban people as cheaply as England and Germany and France, because as a result of the tariff, we have built up trusts and monopolies here which have raised our domestic prices beyond and above the international prices, therefore we are unwilling to sell abroad for less than the domestic price.

We seek by a favored and partial arrangement—by forcing things, as Washington says—to drive friendly nations, whose friendship it should be our effort to insure, not to destroy, out of territory which they have won through all the honest and impartial methods of trade.

Let us see what other ideals have been declared by the great men of this country—great men belonging to the party which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] represents. In a message of Benjamin Harrison, received and read here December 3, 1889, he said, speaking of the Pan-American conference:

It is believed that the crowning benefit will be found in the better securities which may be devised for the maintenance of peace among all American nations, and the settlement of all contentions by methods that a Christian civilized country approves.

This was relating to the Pan-American Congress, which was held for the purpose of promoting friendly intercourse and relations between this country and our sister republics of Central and South America. What principle was most discussed there? The principle of peace and the principle of friendly arbitration as securing peace.

Benjamin Harrison properly voiced the ideal of the Republic when he declared that the crowning benefit would be found in the maintenance of peace among all American nations, and the settlement of all contentions by methods that Christian civilization approves.

What has become of that ideal within the last six years of Republican rule? We have within the last three months been embroiled in a war with a sister republic over the construction of a treaty, under which it was claimed that the spirit, not the letter, of the treaty demanded of that country in a contract, which was terminable with one year's notice—that the spirit of that contract demanded that Colombia should make to us any concession intended for the advantage of the commerce of the world which the United States might dictate, and that it must concede it in the very terms laid down by the United States without modification, alteration, or amendment.

So, upon the construction of a treaty with a friendly American republic, after the declaration of this ideal by Benjamin Harrison regarding the maintenance of universal peace upon this continent and the invocation of arbitration for that purpose, we have summoned our armed forces, under the order of the Executive, sent our armed ships, with their men and their guns, aimed at the forces of a friendly republic about to land upon their own territory for the suppression of domestic disorder, and then we say, in the language of the Senator from Wisconsin, "the American people are preserving and cherishing the ideals of the Republic."

The American ideals have been asserted by other prominent Americans. The present Executive has declared himself upon this subject. In a message of rare excellence addressed to Congress upon taking the seat of the lamented McKinley, he said regarding the Monroe doctrine:

It is no wise intended as hostile to any nation in the Old World. Still less is it intended to give cover to any aggression by one New World power at the expense of any other. It is simply a step, and a long step, toward assuring the universal peace of the world by securing the possibility of permanent peace on this hemisphere. * * * We have not the slightest desire to secure any territory at the expense of our neighbors.

And yet this very Executive has inaugurated the scheme of war against and spoliation of a sister republic, which I have outlined. Then, also, regarding The Hague tribunal, he says:

Peace can only be kept with certainty when both sides wish to keep it; but more and more the civilized peoples are realizing the wicked folly of war and are attaining that condition of just and intelligent regard for the rights of others which will, in the end, as we hope and believe, make world-wide peace possible. The peace conference at The Hague gave definite expression to this hope and belief, and marked a stride toward their attainment.

Here was another ideal of the American people voiced by an American President—world-wide peace. The Hague Tribunal had been organized as a tribunal of the nations for the peaceful settlement of their contentions, just as in our domestic affairs tribunals decide the rights of man in his relations toward his fellowmen.

So, instead of permitting the nations of the world to march like swashbucklers along the international highways with sword in belt and pistol in hand, an effort was made to submit their contentions to the great international tribunal of peace organized by the treaty-making powers of the various nations of the world.

And yet when it comes to a practical application of this ideal, what does your present Executive say in response to the inquiry of General Reyes, the representative of the Colombian Government—General Reyes, who in all matters has conducted himself with rare discretion and moderation; who, mindful of the obligations of the treaty of 1846, is seeking in an orderly way to present under that treaty Colombia's complaint and grievance against the United States for injuries done and a wrong accomplished, and who asks that this treaty contention expressly provided for in the convention regarding The Hague tribunal as one which a country can honorably submit to arbitration?

Read the reply of the Secretary of State denying the appeal; and I ask, then, what has become of this ideal of the American people, this ideal which has been voiced by the present Executive, for international peace, for peaceful adjustment of contentions between nations.

So the present Executive in that message adds another word for peace. He says:

> Possibly no other great nation in the world is so anxious for peace as we are. There is not a single civilized power which has anything whatever to fear from aggressiveness on our part. All we want is peace, and toward this end we wish to be able to secure the same respect for our rights from others which we are eager and anxious to extend to their rights in return.

Not a single nation has anything to fear from aggressiveness on our part, the President says. Ask Colombia. The President wants peace even if he has to fight for it. His way of securing peace is to send the armed forces of the United States to attack and despoil a friendly power whose sovereignty over the spoliated territory we had by solemn treaty acknowledged.

Now, Mr. President, so much regarding the ideals of which the Senator from Wisconsin says:

> I have but an observation to make as to the reply of the Senator from Nevada, or rather his speech, as he states it. I can hardly understand how a Senator of the United States can impute to the people of the United States that their eyes have been closed by dollars to the demands of liberty or the traditions of the Republic.
> It is a very bold thing, Mr. President, for anyone in this country to impeach a majority of the American people in that way. The ideals of the American people and the traditions of the American people belong to them, are cherished by them, Mr. President, more keenly than by any of their representatives, perhaps.
> I believe in the American people. I believe the sober second thought of the American people comes as near to the perfection of human wisdom as any standard among men can come; and I think no Senator may safely say to them that they have forsaken their traditions and ideals in a blind, heedless pursuit of the dollar.
> No, Mr. President—and I did not intend to refer to this when I rose—the traditions of the American people may safely be left to the guardianship of the American people. When the excitement of the campaign has passed away, the American people think, and what they think is right.

Mr. President, I assent to the proposition urged by the Senator from Wisconsin that the traditions of the American people may safely be left to the guardianship of the American people, but I assert that they can not be safely intrusted to the guardianship of the party in power. There is not a single tradition of the Republic, not a single ideal of the Republic, that has not been shattered by the dominant party here.

It is true that you appear to have the sanction of the American people; it is true that the question of imperialism has been submitted to the people at a popular election; it is true that their verdict has been against us and for you, and so far as appearances go your policies seem thus far to have been sanctioned by the American people; but I believe, with the Senator from Wisconsin, in the sober second thought of the American people.

I believe, with him, that when the excitement of the campaign has passed away and the American people think, they will think right. May Heaven grant that this second thought, the sober thought of deliberation, may come to the American people before the conclusion of the coming campaign.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, an extension was given to the somewhat casual remarks which I made yesterday by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. This was something which I did not anticipate, because I had no desire when I spoke to do anything more than touch on the question of the St. Louis appropriation and the general economy which has been preached in various quarters during this winter. But the Senator from Maryland thought it necessary to infer that I had admitted the failure of our policies, because I had alluded to the fact that we had been told that there was likely to be a deficit in the revenue this year.

Mr. President, for the seven months of the year which have already passed there is, if I am correctly informed, no deficit; we are about $4,000,000 ahead in income. There is no doubt, however, that the revenues and expenditures are very nearly on an equality, which I do not think an undesirable situation at all.

I believe myself that there is plenty of money for all proper, and even for reasonably liberal, expenditures; but, Mr. President, so far from our policies having been failures, I think that the figures will show the exact reverse, and I do not care to leave what I said yesterday with the possibility of any other inference being drawn from my words.

In the first place, the fact that the revenue is very near, or perhaps less than the expenditures, is principally owing to a fact which the Senator from Maryland, no doubt through inadvertence, omitted to state, that within the last three years we have reduced taxation by something over a hundred million dollars. We have removed taxation to that amount. I do not now recall that during the four years of Democratic ascendency there was any reduction of taxation or that any taxes were removed. I recall, however, very distinctly that a new tax, an income tax, was imposed during Mr. Cleveland's last Administration, which, of course, was an entirely new form of taxation.

The Senator from Maryland referred also to the decline in the excess of exports over imports. The amount of that excess no doubt has fluctuated, but I think it was an unfortunate subject to open for purposes of comparison— I mean unfortunate for the Democratic party.

I have drawn up, stated in millions, the amount of imports and the amount of exports since 1893, which I will ask to have printed with my remarks; and I find that the excess of imports in 1893 was $35,000,000; the excess of exports in 1894, $215,000,000; the excess of exports in 1895, $61,000,000; the excess of imports, that is, the adverse balance of 1896, $84,000,000.

Mr. President, I think it is worth while to compare those four years, in two of which there was an adverse balance and in the other two a favorable balance, with the years which have followed. The excess of exports in 1897 was $268,000,000; in 1898, $594,000,000; in 1899, $606,000,000; in 1900, $521,000,000; in 1901, $647,000,000; in 1902, $452,000,000; in 1903, $395,000,000.

The table referred to is as follows:

Year.	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of imports.	Excess of exports.
1893	$866,000,000	$831,000,000	$35,000,000
1894	654,000,000	869,000,000		$215,000,000
1895	732,000,000	793,000,000		61,000,000
1896	779,000,000	863,000,000	84,000,000
1897	764,000,000	1,032,000,000		268,000,000
1898	616,000,000	1,210,000,000		594,000,000
1899	697,000,000	1,303,000,000		606,000,000
1900	849,000,000	1,370,000,000		521,000,000
1901	823,000,000	1,460,000,000		647,000,000
1902	903,000,000	1,355,000,000		452,000,000
1903	1,025,000,000	1,420,000,000		395,000,000

Mr. LODGE. There never has been in the history of the country a period of an equal number of years or of all the years together which has approached the years since 1897 in the favorable balance of trade to the United States. There has been a decline in the last two years from the great balances of 1901 and 1899, but in order to find a comparison which shows a falling off in the excess of exports over imports in the last two years the Senator from Maryland is obliged to compare them with other years of Republican ascendency. In this last year, which he pointed out as so bad, the excess of exports over imports was far larger than in the two favorable years of Mr. Cleveland put together.

As for the revenue, even after the great reductions which we have made, I think it is well for the Senator to remember that in order to meet the deficit incurred during Mr. Cleveland's term they found it necessary to borrow, in a time of profound peace, $250,000,000, adding that amount to the permanent debt of the country.

We were charged with the expenses of a war. We met the war. We met those expenses. We met the great loan which was rendered necessary. Yet we have a balance in the Treasury to-day more than equal to that loan, and we have been steadily reducing the permanent debt ever since. We have had no deficit and we have issued no bonds to meet current expenditures. I do not think, Mr. President, it is possible to make a comparison more in favor of the wisdom of Republican policies than those figures show.

Mr. President, I was not aiming at any party question when I was speaking. The point which I desired to make was in regard to the economies which we were urged to observe during the present session. From one point of view I was very glad to see that the Committee on Appropriations, who have charge of our expenditures, and administer them with great wisdom, felt we were able to undertake this additional gift or loan to the St. Louis exposition. The point I desired to make yesterday was that if we could do that there were important branches of the public service which certainly ought not to be sacrificed, and the Senator from Maryland was kind enough to illustrate exactly what I was trying to bring out. He thinks it is more important to make this appropriation for the St. Louis fair than to undertake the immediate building of the canal. He said we had better let that wait rather than sacrifice the fair in any degree or not make this appropriation. On that, Mr. President, I do not agree.

I think the building of the Panama Canal is a greater and more immediate need of this country than any other at this moment. I think it far outweighs in importance any proposition now before the people of the United States. I think its advantages to the entire people of the United States will be greater even than our imagination can picture at the present time. If it is a question of celebrating the great Louisiana purchase, how can we celebrate it so well as by beginning on that great work across the Isthmus which is going to open a waterway to the East for all the products of that vast region which Jefferson bought, and enable them to pass north and south, instead of compelling them to go, as they have always hitherto gone, by eastern and western routes? If we must choose in expenditures, the Senator from Maryland would have us give to this exposition and let the canal wait, and I would do exactly the reverse. In a word, Mr. President, in the matter of economies, if economies must be made, I should prefer to make them on such a matter as the fair rather than on those subjects which enter immediately into the Government service.

I do not agree, and I think all the facts will sustain me in the position, that other matters of great public importance have been sacrificed to what are called the "military expenditures." It is only two years since we passed the largest river and harbor bill ever passed in this country. We have in previous Congresses been liberal to public buildings. I approve most heartily of all those wise expenditures, and they were not stopped by the expenditures in what are known as the "military departments;" but, Mr. President, if I have to pick and choose and save in one place rather than in another, the very last place where I would economize would be on the Navy or in the defenses of the United States. Self-protection and self-defense are more important than anything else. To be rich, aggressive, undefended, and weak in a military point of view is a very sorry position for a great nation to occupy.

I regard the Navy of the United States as the one great guaranty of peace as well as of the Monroe doctrine. I believe it is more important, and that the money spent on the Navy is more vital to the country than any other money we spend. I know from past experience that the Senator from Maryland takes no new position in his hostility to naval expenditures. They seem to me to outweigh every other in their importance to the United States.

I think we ought to have a fleet which puts the protection of our coasts beyond every peril, which puts the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine beyond a doubt. And the Monroe doctrine, so near to the hearts of the entire American people, so essential to our peace and our welfare, depends absolutely upon the Navy of the United States. Therefore I think the last place to economize and the first place to spend is on the Navy and the defenses of the United States. If we are to have economy, if we are to be careful in our expenditures, let us be careful in regard to things like expositions and fairs and not undertake to sacrifice the defenses of the United States.

Mr. President, I did not call attention to this expenditure, as I said yesterday, because I am hostile to the fair, but because I do not want later and elsewhere to be met with the objection that we can not afford the essential expenditures which this Government needs in other directions, and to be told that the condition of the revenue is such that we can not make a proper authorization for the Navy of the United States; that we can not make a proper authorization for the defenses of the United States or for the harbors of the country; or that we can not make proper continuing appropriations to carry on the river and harbor works already authorized. I do not think it is wise economy to hold back on those great objects of general public interest. If it is necessary to save, let us save on the things which are not essential. Let us not by an unwise, unpatriotic parsimony endanger the Navy, the Army, and the forts which protect the very life and honor of the Republic.

Mr. President, in pointing out as I did what I thought wise economies I did not in the least intend to bring up any discussion of party policies. But if they are to be opened up for discussion I think nothing can be more desirable for the Republican party, nothing can be more strengthening, more instructive than to look back over the past and to compare the eight years now closing with the four which went before; to compare our stable currency to-day, the best in the world, with the threatened and tottering fabric which we had under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland; to compare this period of rest and security in the finances with the days when a Democratic President had to appeal to a Republican minority in the Senate to enable him to repeal a law which threatened the stability of our currency and the very existence of business; to compare the balances of trade; to compare the condition of our manufacturers; to compare the total volume of trade; to go into the entire history of the four years of Democratic supremacy and contrast them with our eight years of supremacy, and not only in matters of money and finance, but in the standing of the country abroad as well as at home.

It is a comparison, Mr. President, as I said in speaking before, that I hope we shall have the opportunity of making with direct application in the next campaign. It is a comparison that has never yet been thoroughly entered into and one Republicans would rejoice to undertake. I hope that it is coming, so that we may enter into it, as I said, with direct application to the Democratic candidate. No, Mr. President, I had no desire in what I said about economies and expenditures to open up anything like a party debate, but if that is desired I can conceive of nothing pleasanter to do, either here or before the people, than to contrast the four years from 1893 to 1897 with the eight years that have since elapsed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who states he does not desire to introduce political questions into this discussion, has gone very far in the direction of bringing them prominently before the Senate. I do not intend to follow the Senator from Massachusetts in any comparison of the Administration of Mr. Cleveland, either in expenditures or in the matter of revenue, or in exports and imports, with any subsequent Administration. It can not be made fairly. It can not be made with profit in this discussion. But it is due to say that Mr. Cleveland, when he was inaugurated in 1893, met a condition somewhat similar to the present one, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, only more acute, with the condition of the Treasury far less satisfactory than it is to-day, and where the outgoing Administration, under General Harrison, through his Secretary of the Treasury, had informed Congress and the country that the revenue laws which had been enacted by the Republican party, owing to the changed conditions in trade, had practically bankrupted the Treasury of the United States.

With that old discussion those of us who participated in it, as well as others, are perfectly familiar. We know that bonds for the purpose of relieving the Treasury had been ordered to be printed, and that there was upon the statute books a law in regard to the purchase of silver which had been passed during a Republican Administration and which Mr. Cleveland inherited. We know that whatever came, whether good or bad—and there was a controversy as to that—came from the enactment of that law, for which the Democratic party was in no wise responsible.

The condition was met, and in a time of great depression, with a bankrupt Treasury, with no possibility of passing revenue laws, because Congress was then opposed to the President, and it was met on the other side of the Chamber as well as on this with a patriotic desire to save the credit of the Government; and no man took a more active part than did the distinguished leader of his party on the other side, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in relieving, not the Democratic President, but the Treasury of the United States.

That question has gone and has been disposed of, not, as the Senator from Massachusetts would have us believe, because of the superior intelligence or patriotism of his side of the Chamber, but by the ingenuity and the industry of man and the increased facilities for mining the precious metals, the results of which came to the relief of the country with the advent of President McKinley's Administration. The Senator from Massachusetts can not claim for his party all the great good that came from these natural causes. Prosperity came from a revival of all industries everywhere, and a demand for our products not caused by any legislation by Congress or action by the Republican Administration, but growing out of the necessities of peoples across the ocean who wanted our commodities and bought them and made us rich.

In the discussion of this matter the Senator from Massachusetts brought to our attention sharply, and I think well, the present condition in which we find the country, where the revenue laws have not been and are not now yielding a sufficient return to meet the demands of the Government. My comment upon that statement was and is, that you have entered upon the expenditure of large sums of money, not for the purpose of increasing the commerce of the country, but to prepare for war and to make this nation a great war power both on sea and on land. The expenditures on those accounts have been enormous, and were not felt while we had great prosperity and a surplus of revenue, but the time has now come when the burden is realized. In the appropriations for the Navy for last year because of this system of expenditures the appropriations reached the sum of $82,618,000. For maintaining the Army a hundred and eighteen millions and more are spent when we are at peace with all the world.

The Senator from Massachusetts, although I am sure he did not intend it, said that I have been an opponent of an increase of the Navy, and intimated that my position is one of hostility to that arm of the service, so necessary to protect us upon all the seas of the world. Anyone who so believes is in utter ignorance of my course upon that question, in which I take more pride than in anything else that has occurred during my service in the Senate. In my service upon the committee having charge of appropriations for the Navy, from the day of my entry into this body until now, I have labored with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and with others associated with us for the construction of a navy of which the whole American people might be proud, composed of ships of the first class, manned with the best of our American citizens, and I always insisted that the appropriations for it should be continued until our Navy reached a point where it is ample to guard American interests everywhere.

I had no idea that in so doing we should have, as it appears this Administration intends if its recommendations are carried out, a navy to compete with that of Germany or Great Britain in size and number of vessels and complement of men. Our conditions are not such as to require it.

I am opposed to a navy so large that we do not know what to do with the vessels, so numerous and so anxious for display that they are assembled in the waters of the Sound and sent forward through the waves for the inspection of the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy. I desire to see a substantial navy, well equipped, fit for any service that the American people may want of it. I do not want a hundred thousand unnecessary men in time of peace merely for display. I want economy about it.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that while a natural and necessary increase is right, in 1885 and 1886 and 1887, during a Democratic Administration, we protected the interests of the country, and when Venezuela was threatened by great foreign powers our Navy was sufficient; no power on earth dared interfere with the Republics south of us; and yet we did it at an expenditure of sixteen millions a year, and now the only great deed to be performed is the threatening of Colombia and the capturing of Panama at $82,000,000 a year.

It is time, Mr. President, we should talk economy. One hundred and eighteen millions should no longer be appropriated for an army in times of peace, when no nation on this earth threatens this country. As I said yesterday, you can reduce the expenditures and apply the money so saved from war preparations to the harbors of Boston and Baltimore and New York and give facilities for commerce to come and go from this country. That is all I desire.

I would save the expense on account of the Army by reducing the 100,000 men to 50,000, if you please. An army can be had at any time upon the call of the President of the United States for volunteers. Reduce the size of the Army and apply the money saved to purposes absolutely necessary for the prosperity of our country.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that we have an Army of a hundred thousand men?

Mr. GORMAN. Not quite a hundred thousand, but practically. A hundred thousand is the limit.

Mr. LODGE. It is less than 60,000, as a matter of fact.

Mr. GORMAN. It can be reduced to 60,000.

Mr. LODGE. It is less than 60,000 at this moment.

Mr. GORMAN. Whatever it is, the law against which I protested provides that, in the discretion of the President of the United States, it may be increased to a hundred thousand. But if it is 60,000 or less, I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is time Congress looked into the matter and ascertained how it is that 60,000 men cost $118,000,000 a year; more expensive by double than the French army or the English army per man; more expensive than any other army on the face of the earth. Economize there, and if it is necessary to have a great number of men in uniform, bring the expenditures and the cost of the service within reasonable bounds. Save the people's money in that direction and apply it to the improvement of ports, and, above all other things, now that we have entered upon this enterprise at St. Louis, let us carry it forward. I had nothing to do with it in the beginning, and I agree with my friends on this side of the Chamber that expenditures of this sort have grown and probably will continue to grow and that the point has been reached where they ought to be checked. But this Government entered upon that enterprise, and we have invited the governments of the world to join us at St. Louis. It is to be the great exposition of the century.

As we have participated in these invitations, I would say it would be a disgrace to permit it to be a failure. I would not hesitate a moment to give them the $5,000,000 they now ask and save it from the expenditures of the Army or the Navy.

We hear talk, Mr. President, of going back and making a comparison of the present condition of affairs with an Administration in 1892, but all the conditions have changed since then. What we ask you now to do is not to go back and make these comparisons, but to take the case as it stands.

In the war with Spain we were lavish in the expenditure of money. No Senator on the other side was more anxious than I was in giving the President of the United States—Mr. McKinley—all the power and all the money that was necessary, after we entered into that contest, to bring it to a successful conclusion. Gold or silver or bonds was not a question with me. It was what the Administration believed was necessary. I voted, and you voted, to President McKinley $50,000,000, to be placed in his hands, to be expended without an item ever being submitted to Congress before he received the money—more money than was ever placed in the hands of all the Presidents of the United States, from General Washington's time till now; more by far than was ever dreamed of by Mr. Lincoln when he was engaged in that great conflict which astonished the world. It was all done for the honor of the country and without partisanship.

But now a time has come when, because of the reduction in war taxes and the depression in trade, the revenues do not meet the expenditures. The proposition presented by the Senator from Massachusetts is in effect that we will deny to the exposition this appropriation and continue to let the harbors of the country fill up with sand, so that the great ships can not enter except by lightering or waiting, as I said yesterday, for a high tide. Notwithstanding the necessity for a public building in Washington to house the Department of Justice it shall not be built, and insufficient quarters will continue to be rented from private people in the city. But never reduce, the Senator from Massachusetts says, the expenditures on account of war or the preparation for war, because at some time we may be troubled with some nation on the face of the earth.

Mr. President, an overgrown and an unnecessary army and navy mean what? It is inevitable that the officers, the admirals without number, and captains too many to be counted in the great fleets which are unnecessary for our protection will find a way to make trouble. It appears to me that the action of the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, in the occurrences now taking place in the Orient, in moving that unnecessary fleet from the presence and from the very ground where a conflict, if it comes, is likely to occur, was a wise precaution. There was more statesmanship shown in that act than in any other order issued to the Navy. It was done so that we might be kept out of what, as everybody thinks, was the desire of the patriotic and brave commander of that fleet to participate.

We have naval vessels everywhere. Have we not enough now? Everybody will answer "Yes," unless it is true, as was floating around in high naval circles, that we are marching around the globe with a chip on our shoulders, looking for the one great nation that troubles us more than any other in our trade relations, to get up some trouble. Who wants it?

Germany, Mr. President, is invading the markets of the whole world. Germany, with the thrift and ingenuity of her people and following our example with her tax laws, is spreading her commercial net in every country on the globe. It is the one nation that has brought England to realize that her commerce, her manufactures, and her trade are in jeopardy. It is the one nation that by a systematic effort and a thorough training of her men in all branches of the service and in the civil service is invading every country south of us on this continent, that is planting her colonies and taking possession of the banking institutions and the railroads and monopolizing the trade. It is that which is giving us trouble.

We have navy enough now to protect every inch on this continent against that power, no matter how great it is. If we want to go on and add $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 per annum to exploit ourselves on the other side of the water, that is not the true American doctrine. Protect our flag and our commerce there always, and the Navy now is sufficiently large for that purpose.

Let us get back, Mr. President, and that is the point of all I desire to say. Without a moment's thought I entered upon this discussion. Let us look at our own internal affairs and keep our own commerce intact. Give us every facility that is necessary to do it.

What person familiar with trade and commerce does not understand the great problem which confronts us? Our taxation, admitted to be too high on imports, has produced a reaction on the other side, and we have been met, because of it, with discriminations. Remove it; lower it; and make our commerce more secure.

Then, sir, remember that more than three-fourths of all the trade that goes hence to the Orient goes to-day only because of the nonenforcement of our laws. I mean by that that the rates which enable us to take the cotton from Texas and Mississippi and the grain from the Dakotas and the Middle West to the Orient are one-sixth only of the amount charged for domestic hauls of the same length. If the law were enforced you would wipe out and destroy that trade.

The reason given by the Senator from Wisconsin is that we can not deal with this question of taxation at this time in the presence of a Presidential election. There is force, absolute force, in it from the partisan view. There is also force in his statement that the business interests of the country are always somewhat disturbed during a Presidential election, and that therefore we must move cautiously and carefully lest we add to the fear or increase the disturbance. That I recognize, and I would not have it done in a broad sense of uprooting or attempting to readjust all the schedules of a great tariff. If I were in the majority party I would not advocate such a course; and as a minority member of this body I would not urge anything that added to the fear which now exists and to the further complications that I fear and believe are coming as the months pass by.

But there are branches that can be dealt with. You have determined that all these great expenditures for the Army and Navy shall go on, and if that is to be your policy, collect more revenue. Pray do not sacrifice important improvements at home which are necessary for our commerce. It would be the wise policy to reduce the expenditures, as I have suggested, and give the country relief.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion. I have felt that I would be content to simply vote for the amendment that has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations. But the discussion has taken on such features that I feel justified in detaining the Senate a few minutes until I make some observations in response to the speech that has just been made.

I want, however, before commencing that response, to say with respect to this exposition that it is a great American undertaking—just as the acquisition of the Louisiana purchase was a great American acquisition—and I regard this appropriation or this loan, whichever you may see fit to call it, as also giving rise to only an American question. I have so dealt with it, so regarded it, and have been intending so to vote. And I shall vote upon it with that kind of spirit. The good name of our Government and people is involved, and we can not afford to allow the undertaking to fail. To do so would bring reproach upon us all.

It seems to me, therefore, such being the character of this question, that it was quite out of place, to say the least of it, that there should have been injected into this debate a political question; that there should have been any criticism upon party policies, or anything said that would give rise to the character of discussion to which we have just been listening.

I was quite pleased, however, when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] had seen fit to introduce politics in this debate, to hear the kind of answer that was made to him a few moments ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. That answer made by the Senator from Massachusetts was complete as to all that had been said by the Senator from Maryland up to the time when the Senator from Massachusetts spoke. But the Senator from Maryland, in his reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, has spoken of another matter as to which I desire more particularly to speak than as to anything else.

He has talked about the condition of the country at the close of the Harrison Administration. He has told us that when Mr. Cleveland came into power, as a result of the elections of 1892, he found a bankrupt Treasury; that he found the Treasury in such a condition that it was necessary to issue bonds in order to meet a deficit, to tide over, to preserve the national credit; and he said it is a commonly known fact that steps had already been taken by the Secretary of the Treasury and other governmental officials looking to the issuing of bonds, and that that had been made necessary because of the failure of the policies which had been pursued by the Republican party during the Administration of Mr. Harrison.

Mr. President, I am surprised, in view of what may now be called the historical facts, which must be admitted by all, to hear that kind of a statement made by the Senator from Maryland.

During the Administration of President Harrison this country, as everybody knows, enjoyed a prosperity until that time absolutely unprecedented in the history of the country; a prosperity greater than any other country had ever before that time enjoyed in the history of the world. During all that period the revenues were more than equal to the expenditures. We had prosperity in our foreign commerce. We had balances of trade in our favor. We had a credit exceptionally high, never prior to that time surpassed in the history of this country.

And, Mr. President, until after the election in November, 1892, those revenues continued to be in excess of the expenditures. There was no trouble about the gold reserve or on any other account.

But what happened following the election in November, 1892, and what was the cause of it? In order that we may rightly understand that, we must recall the character of platform declaration upon which Mr. Cleveland came into power.

It will be remembered that in the platform of 1892 the Democratic party denounced the McKinley tariff law as a culminating atrocity—I think that is the phrase they used—and they demanded its immediate repeal and gave a pledge to the country that if they should succeed at the elections and have the power intrusted to them necessary thereunto, they would repeal that law and they would substitute a tariff-for-revenue-only law, which is only another name for free trade. They succeeded. The morning after the election it was announced to this country not only that Mr. Cleveland had been a second time elected President of the United States, but also that Congress would be Democratic in both Houses—a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives.

So, Mr. President, the announcement of that election was an announcement that we were not only to have a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress, but a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress pledged to repeal the McKinley law, to change the industrial policies of the country, and substitute instead of the policy of protection the policy of free trade, or the near approach to it of a tariff for revenue only. What was the consequence? Every prudent business man in this country knew that if the industrial policies were to be thus radically changed, it would be well for him to consider what the consequences would be upon him in his business.

We commonly speak of the panic that broke upon the country in 1893 as the panic of 1893. But, Mr. President, that panic which broke upon us, apparently very suddenly, in 1893 was a panic that commenced the morning after the election in 1892. That panic commenced when the thoughtful, prudent, and conservative business men of this country read the result of that election and commenced to study what would be its consequences.

If a man was a banker he knew that a radical change in our industrial policy made it necessary that he should consider what would be the effect upon him, and, not knowing the measure of the effect, or perhaps whether it would be good or bad, determined, as he went to his place of business that morning, that he would look over the list of bills receivable and see which of his debtors he should call upon to pay; and every manufacturer, as he went to his place of business, considered whether or not he could not shorten the pay roll, and men who had given orders for materials to be manufactured commenced to consider whether they could not cancel the same or modify them.

So it went on until shortly it became known to every man in business that all his neighbors were feeling just as he was feeling, and when this feeling became general then came the breaking upon the country of that panic which brought us so much disaster and continued throughout the period of that Administration.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. When the men who were importing goods into this country and paying the tariff duties that were being collected under the McKinley law saw that the Democratic party had thus come into power and that it was pledged to a free-trade policy, that the first duty of the party under such circumstances would be to redeem that pledge to repeal the McKinley law and substitute lower duties, every such importer at once said, "I will see what I can cancel that I have been ordering."

The result was, Mr. President, that orders for goods to be imported were canceled generally throughout the country, and men who had not given orders which they had been intending to give withheld them as a consequence of that election; and so it was that not until after that election, and in consequence of that election, and what the people of the country had a right to expect as a result of it, if the Democratic party was to keep its pledge, the revenues of this country commenced to decrease. They commenced to fail because, for the reasons I have given, importations began to fall off.

That election was in November. December and January and February followed. Through the months of December and January this condition of things had so continued and was so constantly growing worse, men withholding orders for importations until they could have the benefit of Democratic free-trade tariffs, or tariffs for revenue only, which they had a right to expect to be lower, that the revenues were affected. But to what extent?

I have in my hand a copy of a letter which I want to put in the RECORD as a complete statement of that whole matter and as an answer to all that the Senator from Maryland has said. The late Hon. Charles Foster was then the Secretary of the Treasury. He died only a few weeks ago. During the campaign of last year, while he was still living, a statement somewhat similar to that which the Senator from Maryland has made with respect to the condition of the Treasury at the close of Mr. Harrison's Administration was made in Ohio by the Hon. Judson Harmon, late Attorney-General of Mr. Cleveland.

About the same time there appeared in the newspapers an interview with Mr. GAINES, a Member of the House of Representatives from Tennessee, in which he made a similar statement. Seeing these statements in the newspapers, I addressed a letter to Governor Foster, calling his intention to them, and asking him to write me what the facts were. In response to my letter I received the communication which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FOSTORIA, OHIO, October 28, 1903.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your favor of the 27th this moment received. Harmon's statement is quite vague. He says: "In 1893, when the Democratic party came into power, the Republican Administration had bankrupted the Government. When Cleveland entered the White House there were bonds already signed by the Republican Administration. They had barely managed to tide over until we got into office, and then we had to take the stigma that came as the result of their unwise administration."

The charge that the Government was bankrupt when Cleveland came into power is ridiculous. The revenues up to that time, and until the end of that fiscal year, exceeded the expenditures. The usual charge is the one made by Mr. GAINES in the Nashville American, copied in the Enquirer of the 21st, that "Secretary Foster prepared plates for bonds to tide over a deficit."

The facts are that as soon as it was known that Cleveland was elected in November, 1892, it became apparent that there was great danger on account of importations being held back for lower duties that the gold reserve would fall below $100,000,000 required, not by law, but by implication of law. After consulting fully with Senator Sherman, I made up my mind that it was my duty to maintain the gold reserve even if I had to do it by the sale of bonds.

The only bonds authorized were those of the resumption act of 1875, all bearing high rates of interest and running a long time. I suppose (to assist me) Senator Sherman introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill in the Senate authorizing an issue of a 3 per cent short-time bond. Mr. Carlisle, who was then known to be the incoming Secretary, was consulted by the Senator and approved Mr. Sherman's amendment. It passed the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. This was about the 22d of February. Upon its passage, fearing that I might be compelled to use bonds for the purchase of gold, I directed the superintendent of the proper office to prepare plates for this bond; a better bond for my purposes than those already authorized.

I did this upon the belief at the time that an act approved by the incoming Secretary, that passed the Senate, receiving a large share of the Democratic votes of that body, would also pass the House. But in this I was mistaken. The House refused to pass it, and the plates were not prepared, and there were no bonds already signed, as stated by Mr. Harmon. But my letter directing the preparation is used in evidence that the plates were prepared and that a deficit existed.

To go a little further in this matter, I had fixed upon $50,000,000 as the amount of gold I would buy, and I had an understanding with the bankers in New York to this effect, but they stipulated they would take the bonds in installments of $10,000,000 a week. If this was done, it would devolve upon Secretary Carlisle to execute a part of my contract. The bankers desired Secretary Carlisle's concurrence in the arrangement.

In this emergency I called upon Senator GORMAN, stating the facts to him and saying that many of my Republican friends thought I had better not do anything in the way of the maintenance of the gold reserve, yet I deemed it my duty as Secretary of the Treasury to continue to do until the last hour of my term what I would do if I were to be continued in office. In this I was sustained by Senator Sherman.

Mr. GORMAN heartily approved and sent a messenger for Mr. Carlisle. Mr. Carlisle soon made his appearance and seemed greatly pleased at what I proposed, and next day went to see Mr. Cleveland. Upon his return I was informed that he would execute the part of the plan that would devolve upon him and that Mr. Cleveland also approved.

To sum up, the Treasury was not bankrupt at any time, and there was no deficit at any time, no plates for bonds, and no bonds were signed.

No bonds were sold. I managed to maintain the gold reserve, turning over to my successor about $103,000,000.

I believe that if the Harrison Administration had been continued the revenues and the gold reserve would have increased, and the condition then prevailing would have improved.

The panic and deplorable condition following Cleveland's election was wholly due to two causes: First, the known purpose of the Democratic party to adopt a revenue tariff, which at once affected the imports and paralyzed all industries and business, and, secondly, the known incapacity of the Democratic party then coming into power to agree upon efficient legislation, afterwards so painfully demonstrated.

Very truly, etc.,

CHARLES FOSTER.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not intend to undertake to elaborate what is set forth in that letter. It is a clear, straightforward statement, a statement of fact, a statement that is supported by history, a statement throughout that no man, in my opinion, can successfully challenge.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, apart from the statement just read as to the deficit and the falling off in the revenues being caused by the election of Mr. Cleveland and the threatened revision of the tariff laws, the letter, so far as it relates to me—and I think I have a knowledge of the whole of it—is accurate; that is to say, Secretary Foster—I think I have made this statement once before to the Senate—by direction of President Harrison himself, both of them being great and patriotic men, sought me because of my then relation to party matters on this side and handed to me a balance sheet of the Treasury conditions without, of course, going into what may have been any political considerations, and stated that he desired provision for the issuing of bonds; that he desired and President Harrison desired that the incoming Administration should have in advance of the inauguration this information. He stated, just as he states in this letter, what his course would have been about issuing a low-rate bond—a 3 per cent bond. That is all true.

That proposition was carried through the Senate after conference on both sides of the Chamber. It was defeated in the other House because some gentlemen, higher in the councils of the party than anyone on this floor determined that it was unwise and probably unnecessary to take such action. But afterwards the prediction of Secretary Foster was actually verified. During the long discussion, not of the tariff, but of the question of the coinage of silver, occupying six or eight months, the revenues decreased. Then other bonds were issued, no provision having been made for the low-interest bonds.

I acquit the Secretary of the Treasury and President Harrison of any motive of dealing with the question in a partisan standpoint or of any other motive than subserving the interests of the Government. As I stated a moment since, the revenues at that time were not sufficient for the needs of the Government. I may, in the heat of debate, have used an expression that the Government was bankrupt, but that would have been putting it too strongly. What I meant to say was, that the balance in the Treasury was not sufficient and was not considered sufficient, under the then conditions, to conduct the Government successfully.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Maryland states that this letter, in so far as it comes within his knowledge, is a correct and truthful statement. I know it to be such because of the character of Governor Foster, and because also of my personal knowledge, as every man has personal knowledge of public affairs with respect to these matters.

I am also pleased, Mr. President, to know that the Senator now modifies the statement he made, to which I was taking exception, namely, that the Government was bankrupt under the Harrison Administration.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not intend to use such a strong expression; and, if I did, I modify it.

Mr. FORAKER. It was a very strong expression, and I thought the Senator, when he reflected, would perhaps want to modify it. One purpose I had in calling his attention to it was to give him an opportunity to at least show that it ought to be modified.

But, Mr. President, it is true, as Secretary Foster says in that letter, that during the whole Harrison Administration and until after the Presidential election the revenues were more than sufficient to meet all the expenditures of the Government, and there was no decrease or falling off of a noticeable character, more than that which would happen on account of ordinary fluctuations, until after that election, until after the country knew the Democratic party was coming into power, pledged to inaugurate a new and a different industrial policy.

What Governor Foster says in that letter is also true to the knowledge of the Senator from Maryland, that the only reason why he was making preparation to issue those bonds, if the incoming Administration saw fit to approve of that proposition, was not his fear that the Government would not be able to meet its obligations, but that the gold reserve of $100,000,000—not required by law, but which was an established requirement because of usage—might become impaired.

Governor Foster says also in this letter that that apprehension was not well founded. Notwithstanding his fear, notwithstanding the decrease in revenues occurring at the time for the reasons mentioned by him, yet when he went out of office the gold reserve had not been impaired, for instead of $100,000,000 he had $103,000,000 in the gold reserve and an abundance of money to meet all the obligations of the Government.

Mr. President, I am not going to stand here and waste time arguing that the condition referred to was due to any failure of Republican policies under the Harrison Administration. The policies of that Administration were precisely the policies that have been pursued since, so far as economic policies and economic conditions are concerned. We had precisely the same prosperity then that we have had since, except only since we have had it in a greater degree.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator include in that the period during which we had a so-called Democratic Administration in power?

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does he include the four years when we got all the odium of those policies and all the odium of issuing bonds and all that kind of thing?

Mr. FORAKER. I was talking about the four years preceding the period of odium, as the Senator from South Carolina sees fit to call it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would have preferred if the Senator had said there had been no change in policies, because there was absolutely none under Mr. Cleveland. The policy of Mr. Harrison was carried out by his successor, and any results of that policy ought to be claimed by you rather than have you put them upon us.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not stop to answer that, except only to recite what the facts are in a very brief way with respect to the conditions under the Harrison Administration. During that Administration we enjoyed the highest credit that this Government had ever enjoyed until that time; during that period our foreign trade grew as it had never grown before; during that period we had no occasion whatever to issue any bonds to meet the obligations of the Government or on any other account.

Then followed the Cleveland Administration. It came in, as I said, pledged to a different policy. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] wants us to believe that there was no change. There was not as much change, perhaps, made by what is known as the Wilson-Gorman tariff law as was expected by many from the McKinley law; but it was the difference, Mr. President, between having a party in power that was pledged to a policy of protection and one that had come into power pledged to the overthrow and destruction of that policy; and during the months preceding the breaking out of that panic the whole country expected a redemption of that pledge.

That was bad enough; but when the Congress assembled and undertook to legislate to carry out that pledge, something worse, apparently, for the country occurred, for then it was developed that no two Democrats in the United States understood alike what was meant by a tariff-for-revenue-only law. They passed a tariff law in the House of Representatives which was supposed to be an expression of Democratic purpose and a redemption of the Democratic pledge. They sent it here to the Senate, and I have seen it stated—I do not know whether the figures are exactly correct or not—that 1,397 mistakes in the interpretation of that pledge by the House had found their way into the bill that they passed, and called for that many amendments here in the Senate.

From one month to another the debate went on, with the panic all the while growing worse and worse and the revenues decreasing, until it became necessary for that Administration, in a time of profound peace, to issue bonds to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government; and finally the credit of this Government became so poor—or so impaired, let me say, rather—under that Administration that when the last issue of $62,000,000, I believe it was, of 5 per cent gold-bearing bonds was put upon the market it was found necessary, in order that a sale might be secured for those bonds, to organize a syndicate of bankers in Wall street through whom those bonds should be disposed of to the country.

I am not going to pursue that further. It is not necessary. But, Mr. President, what happened next? When the McKinley Administration commenced, the trade conditions were what have been indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

During two of the years of the Cleveland Administration the balances of trade were against us. During only two of the four years were those balances in our favor, and then only small balances they were. But the very moment that the Republican party was successful at the elections of 1896 business conditions began to improve, slowly, hesitatingly for some months, until the Administration had come into power, and until it could be made plain to the country that less than a majority of this body would be able to so legislate with respect to the tariff as to repeal the Wilson-Gorman law and substitute the Dingley law, as it is now known, in its stead.

But as soon as that was an accomplished fact, the wheels began to turn; men were called from idleness to employment; business conditions revived, and prosperity set in and has continued without interruption until now we have the greatest prosperity in the history of this or any other country on the face of the earth.

The figures read by the Senator from Massachusetts are simply stupendous, almost incomprehensible. During the years that have passed since the McKinley Administration commenced until now our foreign commerce has so grown, and grown in our favor, that the annual balance of trade will average more than $500,000,000, every dollar of which the nations with which we trade have been compelled to pay to us, and pay to us in gold worth 100 cents all around the world. There have been no 50-cent Bryan dollars in those transactions. As a result of it, Mr. President, we have to-day in the Treasury of this country more gold belonging to the United States than was ever held by any government in the history of the world.

Not only has our foreign trade grown in that manner and to that extent and with that success, but the prosperity which it indicates is general; it is universal; it is distributed throughout the whole country; it is common to all the sections, and to no section more than to the Southern States.

A few days ago there was made in another place where men legislate a very brilliant speech, in the course of which the speaker quoted from newspapers, the leading newspapers from almost every State throughout the whole South, in order to show what the conditions were, according to those papers—almost every one of them a Democratic paper—on the 1st day of January last.

It is a most remarkable array of facts in proof of the statement I make that this prosperity does not alone belong to the Government, to be measured in balances of trade, in the high credit we enjoy, in those things that pertain to our ability to make expenditures, to our National Treasury, but that this prosperity belongs to the people throughout all the sections of this land. I want to briefly call attention to this. It can not be given too much publicity. It was a happy thought that induced this speaker to cite these newspapers. He commences with the State of Missouri. He cites first the Kansas City Journal of January 1, in which it is said:

> According to statements made by officials of the railroads running into Kansas City, every company has reason to rejoice over the business for the year just closed. One general agent said that the earnings of his road had increased 33½ per cent over 1902.

The Kansas City Star says:

> Bank clearings are not always a definite indication of business movements, but they may be taken as a reliable basis of comparison in noting progress in any one city. The clearings in Kansas City for the past year were one thousand and seventy-five millions, or an increase of eighty-six millions (9 per cent) over the record of 1902. Building records and real estate transfers show similar increase. Both the wholesale and retail merchants report gains.

I am not going to read all of these, but I want to read a few of them just to show how universal they are and how all alike tell the story of prosperity. The St. Joseph Gazette says:

> The country upon which St. Joseph depends for its maintenance is prosperous to a most gratifying degree. Crops have been fairly abundant; prices for the products of the farm and range far in excess of the average for many years.

Now I come down to Virginia, skipping quite a number of citations from other papers in Missouri. The Despatch, of Norfolk, says:

> The cities of tide-water Virginia have experienced a solid and increasing growth during the past ten years. Norfolk is in many, many ways better off to-day than a year ago. Churches, schools, charitable organizations, and business organizations have flourished and grown and improved within the year. Local bank deposits have shown a steady increase during the year, and local bank clearings also indicate an increase in the volume of business done in the city, and the record of the year past is the largest in the history of the city.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. If prosperity is as great as it has been, if it has not diminished and is not diminishing, how does the Senator from Ohio account for the material cut in the wages of twenty-five or thirty thousand of the workmen and workwomen engaged in the New England textile fabric mills, a reported cut in wages in all the steel industries, and that there is now assembled at Indianapolis a national convention of bituminous coal miners threatening a national strike because they have been notified that after a time soon to come the wages they are receiving will be materially lessened?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there is no trouble in answering the Senator. I am not going to answer him in detail as to all the cases he puts, because it is sufficient to answer him as to one, and either that or some similar answer will be found as to each of the others. He puts the case of cotton manufacturers. It is the price of cotton, Mr. President, which has gone so high—whether on account of legitimate demand or whether on account of manipulation of stock brokers and dealers it does not matter—has gone so high as to cripple that industry, to stop a number of factories, and to turn, in consequence, a number of men into idleness.

For other causes, having nothing to do with the general policies of the country, but originating in and having their effect in spite of those policies, the steel industry has been temporarily affected, and the mining of coal has been temporarily affected, perhaps. I am not able to answer as to detailed facts all the suggestions made by the Senator, but we know that it is no unusual thing to see the representatives of labor and the representatives of capital meeting in national convention for the purpose of considering questions of wages and other questions of a similar character.

We do know, however, Mr. President, this to be a fact, that when the Republican party is in power and the people of this country are satisfied with the industrial legislation, there is never any strike, except for differences as to wages or hours or other terms. Labor strikes when it knows if it quits work to-day it can go back and find work to-morrow; capital strikes and goes out of business when you institute policies in which the people have no confidence. That is the difference between strikes under Democratic and strikes under Republican policies.

You are liable to have strikes under any Administration, although from different causes. How was it under Cleveland? Nobody struck then because he was getting less wages than he wanted. The trouble was to get any wages at all. The only striking anybody did was to strike out for a job, the first one he could hear tell of, and pursue it and get it, if he could, anywhere and at "any old price," on any kind of terms.

Now, let me pursue my remarks. I am not going to be tedious about this. I only want to show, Mr. President, that this is not a prosperity merely of the Government, but it is a prosperity for the whole people and for all the sections of this country. I have read from newspapers in Missouri, and I read from one in Virginia.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. FORAKER. I will get to South Carolina in a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I just want to ask the Senator from what he is reading? He started out to tell us he was reading from a speech; but he did not tell us where it was delivered, or when, or by whom.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the Senator would understand that the rules of the Senate prohibit my speaking of what occurs in the other House. Therefore, I said this speech was made elsewhere.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is rather thin, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I can say, I presume, that it was made in the House of Representatives, and it was made by Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois, a Member of that body.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad I got the information.

Mr. FORAKER. And it was made on the 26th of January. I invite the Senator's attention to it. He will find it profitable, I think, to give it careful study.

Mr. President, to go on with this, I could read to the same effect from the Petersburg Index-Appeal, to the same effect from the Jacksonville Times-Union, and from the Pensacola News, as to the condition of things in Florida; and I could read to the same effect from the Leader, a paper published in Lexington, Ky., as to the conditions existing in that State, and from the Louisville papers to the same effect. All these papers, let me remind the Senate, are of date January 1, showing the condition only a month ago, as published in these Democratic papers in their respective localities. The Atlanta Constitution, January 1, says:

Annual reports of all city officials show a bright chapter in the history of Atlanta, the year 1903 having been one of the most prosperous in its history. The clearings of 1902 were increased by $13,791,580.31. The year's record is a remarkable one, and is considered as a strong indication of the substantiability and growth of business in Atlanta.

The Augusta Chronicle and a number of other papers in that State are quoted.

Then he goes to North Carolina and from the Rural News and Observer he quotes this:

The year that closed last night has been a good one for North Carolina and the American Republic. Crops have been large and prices good. It has been a specially good year for farmers.

I quote now from the Wilmington Morning Star:

The steady increase in the commerce of Wilmington is extremely gratifying to the people of the city, and the growing importance of the chief seaport of North Carolina will alike be a source of gratification to the people of the entire State.

Now I come to South Carolina, that blessed old State, so ably represented on this floor always, and particularly now. The Charleston News and Courier is quoted from, as follows:

The banks of Columbia show by their reports that they have had a very successful year, and it follows that the people of the city have cause to be, in a large measure, satisfied with the last year's business. The total deposits in the five banks amount to $3,503,907.50, a very large sum for a city of the population of Columbia. Compared with former years, the deposits increased very much, and the bankers seem to be full of confidence of still greater proportionate increase during the present year.

Now let me read from another paper, the Greenville News:

The year 1903 has been one of unprecedented growth and general improvement. Something like $2,000,000 has been expended during the year in the erection of public and private buildings, manufacturing plants, and various other commercial enterprises. The most successful year in the history of Greenville has passed. Nineteen hundred and three has left the city greater, richer, and more prosperous than when it came.

Then I could read to the same effect from the papers of Memphis and Nashville as to the conditions of prosperity obtaining in the State of Tennessee, and so on throughout the South. I might go on reading to a very much greater extent than I have, but I have read sufficiently to support what I want to state, that this prosperity about which we talk is a prosperity not for any particular section, not for any particular class, but a prosperity for our Government, a prosperity for our country and our whole country, a prosperity for every section of our country, a prosperity for every class in our country, for I have read sufficiently to show that this prosperity has been felt and enjoyed not alone by the merchant and the banker and the manufacturer, but also by the farmer and all those in the humbler vocations and walks of life.

With this kind of prosperity throughout the country, with every newspaper in the South proclaiming it, and everybody throughout the North enjoying it, the whole country in the enjoyment of it, does not the Senator from Maryland think he should modify the statement he made yesterday, when in effect he said, as on reflection he modified his statement of the bankruptcy of the country at the close of Harrison's Administration, the policies of this country as pursued by the Republican party have resulted in failure?

Mr. President, instead of the policies pursued by the Republican party since the McKinley Administration until this time resulting in failure, they have resulted in a triumphant success the like of which has never been known and perhaps never will be again. We can not conceive of the possibility of a greater prosperity than that which the people of this country are enjoying.

Mr. President, I am not going to stand here now to defend the Army or to defend the Navy or to defend the expenditures we are making for the Army and the Navy. That is not necessary. The Army and the Navy of this country have ever, from the beginning of our history, been able, by their heroic achievements and their splendid endeavors, to defend themselves; but I will stop to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that the law in respect to the Army authorizes an Army that shall have a maximum strength of not more than 100,000 and a minimum strength of 65,000.

Hardly had the law been passed giving the President authority to increase the Army to the maximum until the President of the United States, instead of taking steps to increase it to the maximum, as was predicted here in the Senate and elsewhere, took steps to reduce it to the minimum of 65,000 officers and men, and it has never since been above the minimum; and to-day, by the latest official report from the War Department, I see that the total strength of the Army, officers and men, is 59,181, or almost 6,000 below the minimum prescribed by law, and 40,000 below what the Senator from Maryland stated, as I understood him, and as is suggested to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Now, as to the expense of our Army, we are told that it is greater than it should be for an army of 60,000 men. We were told that, I believe, by way of explanation as to why he said it was an army of 100,000 men, if I correctly understood the Senator, and we are told of the relative expense of the armies of other countries. Mr. President, it does cost more to maintain the American Army than it does to maintain any other army in the world. England pays to her soldiers the highest wages of any country other than the United States, and the United States pays twice as much to her men and officers as they do in England, speaking in round numbers.

In Germany, France, Italy, Russia, and other countries they pay far below what England pays. So if it be that our expenses are larger for an army of 60,000 men than the Senator from Maryland had calculated they should be, it is because we do what we ought to do. We remember that they are American citizens, who are for the time being serving the American Government, and we expect them when they are through with that service to come back and be a part of the sovereign governing body politic of this country and to be fit and worthy citizens to live in this country and fit and worthy to live here because they love the country, and are ready to respond to its call and stand up in defense of its flag whenever there may be necessity for it.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that the American people have any anxiety about the American Army. I believe that the American people justify the maintenance of the Army we have. We know they do. We had this question paraded and exploited and debated and discussed before the American people in the last campaign, when anti-imperialism and expansion constituted the paramount issue, so called. What was the result? The Democratic party in that campaign marched to an even greater and more fatal Waterloo for them than they found at the end of the campaign under Mr. Bryan in 1896.

No, Mr. President; if the Army is to be arraigned, either on the ground that it is too large, when we are maintaining it only at its minimum, or on the ground that it is overpaid, when we are only paying American wages, the people will answer for the Army and I need not waste any time in doing so.

As to the Navy, from the days of the Revolution to this time the American Navy has been the pride of the American people. Whoever else may have failed the American people, the American Navy never has. It is an organization of which every man in this country can be justly proud. Wherever they have carried our flag they have shown bravery and heroism equal to every emergency and a wisdom and a diplomatic capacity and ability not surpassed by those in civil life trained in diplomacy.

I do not believe the American people want us to stop increasing our Navy until we have made it commensurate in strength with the greatness of this the greatest country in the world. I believe the American people have approved the American policy known as the Monroe doctrine, and that they will hold any Administration derelict in duty that fails to be ready at all times to maintain that doctrine and to assert American rights wherever American rights may be challenged.

So it is, Mr. President, that although we have before us a question that is simply American, a question about which there should be no party lines drawn, we have yet found it necessary—I am glad to know the necessity was not occasioned by the remarks of anyone on this side of the Chamber—to refer to political policies and political administrations and political disasters and political triumphs. Perhaps it is well enough that it is so, for the record is made up. The American people have passed judgment. Let them stop and consider, for they will be called upon to pass judgment again. We are ready for the debate and ready for the vote. We shall go forward without hesitation, expecting the same triumphant vindication next November that we had four years ago and on the previous occasions which I need not mention.

Mr. PETTUS, Mr. BAILEY, and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into this political debate. The fact is I am a Presbyterian, and if I were desirous of having a Presbyterian minister occupy the pulpit of the Baptist Church on next Sunday I would never commence by telling the Baptist minister that sprinkling was just as good as going under the water. [Laughter.] I would never raise a question and dispute what the court said, if it was a law question, and I would never raise a question with a jury if it was a jury question. I want to get back to where we started. We started out with a discussion of the rule of the Senate, and that is the only question before the House now.

Mr. President, that Senate rule is a peculiar one. I have been here but a few days, but I have observed a good many things about that rule. I do not intend to go into a discussion of what the rule means at this time, because the Senate has interpreted it at least twenty-five times since I have been here. But do you not all remember that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] put on as an engrossed rider on an appropriation bill all the civil government we now have in the Philippines? We fought it. Oh, yes; we fought it. We on this side were opposed to it, as a general rule, and we fought it, and we clamored for the rule. The rule says the President of the Senate may submit a question of order to the Senate itself, and the wise man in the chair [Mr. FRYE] knows exactly when to submit and when not to submit. [Laughter.]

That is what you gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber did.

There came along another appropriation bill and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] tried to put the Hepburn bill on it as an engrossed rider. All of you Senators on this side of the Chamber who were here then voted to put it on as an engrossed rider to that bill. Other Senators seem to have as much appreciation of this rule as the Chair has. It is a good rule, a first-rate rule. It is a rule by which every man in this Chamber, so far as I have observed, has invariably voted on the question as to whether or not a proposition is in order exactly as he wanted to vote on the measure itself when it came up. I think every member of this Chamber who has been here two years has voted on different sides of this question at least half a dozen times. Why clamor about a rule that the President of the Senate knows perfectly well how to get rid of?

Mr. BAILEY and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. HALE. I have been trying to get the floor for the last half hour. I will not interfere with the Senator from Texas, but——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, like the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], I have been here but a few days and they have been very full of trouble. I do not think I have voted with the majority since I became a member of this body, and I doubt if I will be able to vote with the majority before my term expires. I am perfectly willing to be instructed in the method of interpreting the rules, which, according to the Senator from Alabama, is that the rule means whatever the Senate chooses to make it mean.

To my way of thinking we had better have no rule at all than one which the majority can waive aside when it so suits their convenience and enforce when they please. I doubt if any other body in this country would be willing to proclaim that it has no respect for the rules which it had adopted. Still I presume I can live without any rule as well as anybody else. So long as my right is preserved to object to what I do not like and to vote against what I think is unwise I shall make no serious resistance to any rule or to any method of applying the rules that may suit the Senate.

But, Mr. President, it was not for the purpose of complaining at the rules or their manner of enforcement that I rose. It was for the purpose of making some brief reply to the very eloquent and very entertaining but very illogical speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. Following the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Ohio has asked the Senate and the country to believe that all of the prosperity both among the people and with the Government which we now witness on every hand and in which they do not more sincerely rejoice than I do is due in some way to the policies of the Republican party.

The Senator from Ohio, however, fell into the strange and, for a man of his brilliant parts, the inexcusable error of proving too much. Attributing it all to Republican policies, he finally came to his comparisons and read to the Senate copious extracts from papers which declare that the prosperity of 1903 was actually 33 per cent greater than the prosperity of 1902, and yet the country lived and produced and exchanged in 1903 under precisely the same system of laws which prevailed in 1902.

Mr. President, it has become a habit with our friends on the other side, here and elsewhere, to claim for their party all the blessings of nature and nature's God. When it rains, they take the credit for it, and when the drought blights the land they charge it to the misdeeds and follies of the Democratic party. There was a time, unfortunately, when some of our Democratic friends were led into the error of supposing that the only way to make this country Democratic was to make it unhappy—by making it believe that it was not prosperous. That time has passed, and no such delusion now enthralls us. We will make no more calamity campaigns.

My judgment is that when the country is most prosperous in a material way it has greatest need to call the Democratic party into its service in order that it may be reminded of its duties outside of the dollars and the cents.

Prosperity, sir, is not the product of politicians nor of governmental policies. It is the joint product of God and man. It comes from the benevolence of nature in giving us rain and sunshine, combined with the industry and the intelligence of the American farmers and laborers of every class. They create prosperity in spite of your laws and your policies.

If these Republican policies made such marvelous prosperity from 1897 to 1903, why did not those same policies produce the same results in prior years? The Senator from Ohio has well said that the policies which prevailed under Harrison are the same policies that prevailed under the lamented McKinley and under the one who happens to be President of the United States at this particular time.

They invite us to compare the years under Cleveland with the years under McKinley's Administration. Let us extend the comparison and take the years under Harrison and compare them with the years under Cleveland. Before I do that I desire to say that I am no apologist for Mr. Cleveland's Administration. I was as little in sympathy with it as any man who belonged to the Democratic party.

I was the first Democrat in Congress to break with him. During the last three years of his Administration they did not permit me to name a third-class postmaster in the district which I then represented in the House. Indeed, it became a practice with those who sought appointments to write to the Post-Office Department that I opposed their nomination. Under these circumstances it can well be understood that I have no disposition to apologize for Mr. Cleveland, but I have every disposition to do him and the party which elected him full justice.

His history has been written, his public life has closed, and it is as little as we can do on both sides of this Chamber to be fair toward him. He was not much more unpopular at the close of his Administration than the man will be whom you are apt to elect, if you elect anybody, to serve during the next four years. In all my experience I have never known a candidate whose nomination so many men favored and whose nomination so few men really desired as in the case of the present occupant of the White House.

Everybody is for him and nobody wants him. Before the close of his term, if you elect him, you may find it as unpleasant a task to defend his Administration as it is for us to defend Mr. Cleveland's.

But, Mr. President, let us make the comparison of exports and imports. The Senator from Massachusetts declares, and the Senator from Ohio repeated it, that under Mr. Cleveland's Administration there were but two years when the balance of trade was in our favor, and that insignificant. I tell the Senator from Ohio that the balance of trade in our favor under Cleveland's was larger than it was under the Harrison Administration.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I made the statement without having looked at the figures. I made it, repeating what the Senator from Massachusetts had said in my hearing. I saw that he had figures for it. I did not pretend to state exactly all the amounts. I did not say anything about the balance of trade under the other Administration in that connection.

Mr. BAILEY. I recognize that the Senator from Ohio followed the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, and the Senator from Massachusetts is usually very accurate in these matters—he has such facility for their preparation, because he only needs to send a note to the Department and he is amply supplied in the shortest possible order—that I hesitated to believe even my own hearing when he made that statement.

Rather than contradict him then I sent for this statement, a Government publication called the "Statistical Abstract of the United States," prepared under the authority of the Treasury Department itself, and I take from that Statistical Abstract these statements.

Under the Democratic Administration—and with the leave of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] I shall call it a Democratic Administration—under the Democratic Administration of Mr. Cleveland, from 1885 to March 4, 1889, I find that the imports——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that we were not talking about the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland but the second. During the first Administration there was a Republican Senate, in the first place, to make impossible such legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. All right.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me still a moment——

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Then, moreover, Mr. Cleveland was elected the first time upon a platform that did not declare in favor of a tariff for revenue only, as I remember, but it contained a pledge that there should be no legislation affecting the tariff that would seriously affect or put in jeopardy any business. I can not give the exact language, but that is the substance and effect of it. I remember it well, because all over the country the contention was that if they got into power there would be no change of policies to disturb the business of the country.

Mr. BAILEY. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I dismiss the first Administration and take the second.

Beginning under Mr. Harrison's Administration with 1890, and I take that rather than the one ending in 1889, because the first part of the fiscal year was under the Democratic and only the last four months under the Republican Administration. So I begin with 1890, and I find that our imports were $789,000,000, in round numbers, while our exports were $857,000,000.

In 1891 our imports were $844,000,000 and our exports were $884,000,000.

In 1892 our imports were $827,000,000 and our exports were $1,030,000,000.

In 1893 our imports were $886,000,000 and our exports were $847,000,000.

Mr. CLAY. That was the Cleveland Administration?

Mr. BAILEY. That is the Harrison Administration.

Mr. FORAKER. The last one?

Mr. BAILEY. I include 1893 because Harrison served for eight months during that fiscal year and Cleveland only four months.

Now, in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, our imports were $654,000,000 and our exports were $892,000,000.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish.

Mr. FORAKER. I just wish to ask a question for information before you pass from that; that is all.

Mr. BAILEY. In 1895 our imports were $731,000,000 and our exports were $807,000,000. In 1896 the imports were $779,000,000 and the exports $882,000,000. In 1897 the imports were $764,000,000 and the exports $1,050,000,000.

Thus it appears from a Government publication itself that the balance of trade in our favor was more than twice as large under the Cleveland Administration than under the Harrison Administration.

Now, the Senator from Ohio says that the cause of the great falling off in the revenue was that immediately upon the announcement or ascertainment of Cleveland's election the people of this country revoked their import orders, importations fell off, and consequently import collections fell off. Unfortunately for the Senator from Ohio he spoke without being advised from the record, because the very year before Cleveland was elected the imports were only $827,000,000, while the year in which he was elected they were $886,000,000, and the following year they were only $654,000,000.

So in the year in which the Senator says the orders were revoked by reason of Cleveland's election, as a matter of fact the imports were larger than in the preceding year under Harrison's Administration.

Mr. FORAKER. If that statement be true, the Senator has made a mistake in reading it, or else I made a mistake in listening.

Mr. BAILEY. No.

Mr. FORAKER. What, now, were the imports for the year 1896—the year McKinley was elected?

Mr. BAILEY. The imports that year were $779,000,000.

Mr. FORAKER. What were they in 1897?

Mr. BAILEY. In 1897 they were $764,000,000. So they fell off under your Administration.

Mr. FORAKER. That was the year we were getting started, and acting under the laws of the previous Administration. Before the Senator closes the book I want to inquire about the year Cleveland was elected, in 1892. I am asking this only that I may understand the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. They were actually larger the year he was elected than the year before. Now, there was a year in which they fell off. Anticipating a reduction of duties, importers naturally and sensibly postponed their importations in order to get the benefit of a reduction in customs duties, because plainly they could not import under the higher duties and successfully compete with competitors who imported under the lower duties of a Democratic tariff law.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted to direct the Senator's attention to that year to know if I correctly understood him. I understood the figures, as he read them, to indicate that they did fall off immediately after the election of Cleveland as compared with the year in which he was elected.

Mr. BAILEY. No; they fell off in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, and that was evidently, not because Cleveland was elected, as the Senator says, but because the Democratic party was engaged in the very laudable but difficult task of framing a tariff law, and that they would fall off then everybody understood.

Now, I want to go one step further with the Senator from Ohio. He has read to the Senate a letter from ex-Secretary Foster. I know it is a pleasure to defend Secretary Foster on his part; they were personal and political friends; but Secretary Foster's letter, while literally accurate, is misleading. That letter, if accepted as it was read, would seem to imply that there was no insufficiency of revenue under the Republican tariff law known as the "McKinley Act," and yet I have here the sworn statement of Secretary Foster, made before the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, in which he says that while it is true his preparation for bonds was to repair the gold reserve, yet, independently of the bonds, he says, under oath:

> I will only say this, that if I was to have the management of the Treasury I should insist upon an increase of revenue to the extent of $50,000,000.

If the revenues were abundant, why would a Secretary of the Treasury insist upon an annual addition of $50,000,000?

Secretary Foster further says in response to the question of Hon. William L. Wilson——

Mr. FORAKER. What is the date?

Mr. BAILEY. The date of the report is March 3, 1893. The date of the hearing was February 25, 1893.

Mr. Wilson asks at a further point of the inquiry:

> Did I understand you to express a general opinion a while ago that in addition to the present sources of revenue that the revenue of the Treasury Department ought to be advanced $50,000,000 more a year?

To which question Secretary Foster replied:

> Yes, sir.
> Mr. MCMILLIN. Would you make that for one year or a permanent increase of revenue?
> Secretary FOSTER. As things are going now a permanent revenue, for two reasons. I would increase the gold reserve at least $25,000,000 if I had the money to do it with.
> Mr. TURNER. But your answer just now seemed to contemplate an annual increase.
> Secretary FOSTER. I think an annual increase of $50,000,000 would make the Treasury easy, and if I were going to manage it I would want to have it.

That is his sworn testimony.

Mr. FORAKER. He states there he has that opinion because of "the way things are going on now;" and that was the middle of February, three months after the Cleveland election.

Mr. BAILEY. But, Mr. President, surely a Republican Secretary would not be basing his opinion on what he would want under a Democratic Administration. Of course some very improbable things did occur under that Administration.

The President did appoint as Secretary of State a gentleman who had never voted the Democratic ticket, but it was not probable that he would make a like appointment for Secretary of the Treasury, and it can not be supposed that a Republican Secretary of the Treasury was basing his answer upon the supposition that he was to administer a Democratic policy.

No, sir; Secretary Foster said there ought to be $50,000,000 additional; and yet the Senator from Ohio tells the Senate and the country that abundant revenue was flowing into the Treasury under his Republican tariff law. I tell him that in order to meet the usual and ordinary expenses of the Government they used a trust fund, which had been converted into a cash asset of the Treasury.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose simply to inquire of the Senator, as he has the statistics before him, whether or not there is anything there which indicates that there was a deficit at any time during the Harrison Administration prior to the election of November 8, 1892. All I said was that there was no deficit, and that is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. BAILEY. That the Government actually defaulted, no; but that the Government was driven to the necessity of using what had been a trust fund to meet its current obligation is true. And after that had been done, when the Republican Treasurer turned over the office to his Democratic successor he delivered only $103,000,000 in gold.

Mr. FORAKER. To what trust fund does the Senator refer?

Mr. BAILEY. For the redemption of national-bank notes.

Mr. FORAKER. I know nothing about any such transaction.

Mr. BAILEY. If I was inclined to be sarcastic, I might say that there were many things the Senator from Ohio does not know about this matter; but the Senator from Ohio comes as near knowing what a Senator ought to know as any gentleman on this floor, and when he does not know it it may be laid down as certain that it would not be to the credit of his party for him to know it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I appreciate the compliment which the Senator has paid me. I only rose again that I might say that the reason why I made that remark was to explain why I would not undertake to answer that. I know nothing about it. I may have known about it at the time. My attention has not been called to these matters for a long time, and I will take pleasure in looking it up and seeing to what extent trust funds were misapplied.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say they were misapplied. I said they were converted into a cash asset of the Treasury.

Mr. FORAKER. It was a cash asset of the Treasury?

Mr. BAILEY. No; they were trust funds.

Mr. FORAKER. What was the amount of the fund?

Mr. BAILEY. I would not venture to state the amount exactly; but the Government now, instead of redeeming those old bank notes out of the trust fund, redeems them itself. The Government was entirely a solvent obligor, and it was not a misapplication or even a diversion of it. It was simply a conversion of it to meet an exigency.

I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that it is not my habit to charge dishonesty upon my political opponents. I make no such charge, but the whole gravamen of my charge is that in order to escape a deficit they used a trust fund as a cash asset, still holding themselves liable to answer for the trust fund.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Senator give me the date of that conversion? I want to look it up.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will apply to me at my desk I will do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The matter of which he speaks now was the change in the laws made in 1890. That is my recollection.

Mr. FORAKER. Was there any deficiency, I will ask the Senator from Iowa, with the permission of the Senator from Texas, of the revenues at that time as an occasion for that?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Texas, but those special funds were turned into the general funds of the Treasury, I think, not on account of any deficiency in the Treasury, but because of the recommendation of the Secretary at that period that they were funds which ought to be currently in the Treasury. But under the national-bank act of 1864 they were a special fund.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Largely they were funds deposited in the Treasury to meet the redemption of national-bank notes of banks that had gone into liquidation or failed. The object was in the line of the opinion of a great many people at that time, that this fund ought to be in circulation and not be held as a special fund in the Treasury which could not be touched by anyone.

Mr. BAILEY. That explanation could hardly be sufficient, because as long as this fund for redemption was in the Treasury the bank note itself was in circulation or else was destroyed and would never be presented for redemption. So that explanation will hardly suffice.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misunderstood me—if the national-bank note was in circulation and the greenback in the Treasury. If both were in circulation, there would be an addition to the circulation.

Mr. BAILEY. But both could not be properly in circulation, because one was held for the redemption of the other. I make no complaint as to the perfect legitimacy of that transaction. It was entirely honest, but to circulate the trust fund while using the other fund too would not be a correct financial method.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does the Senator take into account the fact that President Harrison paid off a large amount of Government bonds, and that a large amount of the payment was made from the receipts derived from the customs and other sources?

Mr. BAILEY. He did not pay off as much as Cleveland did in the preceding Administration under precisely the same law.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; that was not the question I asked the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Neither does it fit right at this place; and I was making an irrelevant answer to an irrelevant question.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I asked the question simply for information. As I understand it he paid a great many million dollars in liquidation of bonds of the Government out of his revenue.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true; and Mr. Cleveland had done the same and more under his first Administration.

Mr. FORAKER. When he was administering under the Republican policy.

Mr. BAILEY. Under Republican policy, I regret to say, and which policies he continued in a measure, I regret still more to say. But the contention which I am making here——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Would it trouble the Senator if I should ask him this question? If when Mr. Cleveland came in he found the Government bankrupt or the revenues so diminished that they were not equal to the obligation that had to be met, why was it that the Democratic party undertook to so change the tariff as to reduce the revenues?

Mr. BAILEY. We were trying to relieve the burdens of the people, and we had less thought about the revenues of the Government than we had about the burdens of taxation. But the Senator from Ohio knows, because he knows our theories as well as he does his own, that we believe that by reducing a protective duty to a revenue basis we can increase the revenues of the Government.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAILEY. One at a time.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted to inquire of the Senator whether or not the reduction ever had that effect under Mr. Cleveland's Administration?

Mr. BAILEY. If the Supreme Court had not declared our income-tax provision unconstitutional we would have raised ample revenue for all the necessities of the Government economically administered. I am free to say I do not think we could have made many $10,000,000 gifts to expositions and have escaped a deficit.

Mr. MITCHELL. What I wanted to ask the Senator from Texas is whether the Cleveland Administration was trying to rid the people of the burden when during his second Administration there was issued $260,000,000 of bonds?

Mr. BAILEY. That was because they did not know enough to know that they could have preserved the parity between gold and silver without issuing bonds——

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I have now the statute to which the Senator alluded in his observations respecting the diversion of public funds. That statute was a part of the act of July 14, 1890, when there could not possibly have been any question about a deficit either in the present or in the future in the Treasury, for the Treasury was then as amply, or not quite as amply, supplied with funds as it is now.

Mr. BAILEY. I give the Senator from Iowa and his political associates credit for being able to see two years ahead. They passed an act the title of which declared it to be "An act to reduce the revenues and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes." That is the title of the McKinley Act.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, no, Mr. President; this was the act of July 14, 1890, directing the purchase of silver bullion, the issuance of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes. This was an amplification of the general understanding at that time that we must have more silver. Under this law four and a half million ounces of silver were purchased every month. There was no question at the time this act was passed as to a deficiency, either present or remote, in the Treasury.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is not exactly fortunate, I think, in his explanation, because this trust fund had absolutely nothing to do with the purchase of silver. It was included in the silver-purchase act, but it was simply a recognition of what everybody understood, that this fund carried as a trust fund should be covered into the general fund of the Treasury. I will go further, though I did not intend to go into that matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I only want to say to the Senator, if he will excuse me one moment——

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. This was in no sense a trust fund. It was a fund for the redemption of national-bank notes. That act was simply an amendment of the law that had been passed in 1864.

Mr. BAILEY. I think I comprehend the nature of a trust fund. Whenever a fund is left with any person, corporation, or government for a special purpose it comes within the definition of a trust fund. This fund was left in the Treasury for the redemption of the notes of national banks whose charters had expired and which had gone out of business or whose misfortunes had plunged them into bankruptcy.

I will go further, though this is a proposition which I did not care to discuss, because it is not relevant. All of this was framed with a view of simplifying the accounts of the Treasury. Even Secretary Foster, in this very hearing which I have before me, declared that he did not keep any separate account of what he called "the gold redemption fund." He declared that it belonged to the general fund of the Treasury; and another Secretary of the Treasury who followed him declared that if Congress did not provide the money to meet general appropriations he would use that gold fund for current expenses, thus sustaining Secretary Foster's position.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I will.

Mr. ALLISON. That fund was always kept in the Treasury after 1875, until by a specific act of Congress in 1900 it was set apart. It never was regarded as a trust fund in fact or segregated in any way from the general fund of the Treasury until 1900.

Mr. BAILEY. But the law which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to sell those bonds authorized him to sell them for a specific purpose, and every Secretary of the Treasury ought to have respected the will of Congress and have reserved that gold fund against that purpose; and so they did. Secretary Foster was the first one who claimed otherwise. Senator Sherman declared in a debate in this body that it was a trust fund. It was raised during his incumbency of the Treasury office.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. And he declared that it was a trust fund.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will permit me one moment, the law of 1882 provided that these bonds might be sold whenever the trust fund fell below $100,000,000. The law of 1875, which was the foundation of this fund, provided that the Secretary of the Treasury might sell bonds to maintain it without reference to any limitation, and Mr. Cleveland——

Mr. BAILEY. To maintain what?

Mr. ALLISON. To maintain the redemption fund.

Mr. BAILEY. It was a fund for the redemption of greenbacks.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; and that fund never fell below $100,000,000 during the Administration of President Harrison or during any Administration prior to the Administration of President Cleveland, when it at one time was reduced to $47,000,000, notwithstanding Mr. Cleveland was selling bonds all the time for its replenishment; and while replenishing that fund he took the money derived therefrom to pay deficiencies which rose from month to month in the revenues as compared with the expenditures.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I reprobated the practice, and that I introduced into the House of Representatives a resolution declaring that the Secretary of the Treasury had no authority to apply that fund to any purpose except the redemption of United States notes, and the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives unanimously reported the resolution.

But, Mr. President, I must not be diverted into a discussion of those ancient fiscal policies. What I was contending was that there were not abundant revenues under the McKinley law, and in proof of it I read a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury, that if he had the management of it he would insist upon an increase of $50,000,000 every year.

I then said to the Senator from Ohio that in addition to the abundant revenues which he claims the McKinley law supplied they had been compelled to use a trust fund, which had been converted into a general asset of the Treasury; that they did use it; and that they barely escaped a deficit after using it is in proof by the records of the Government. That was all, and no Senator can contend to the contrary. That they did have the benefit of that fund is true. That it was a trust fund, as I understand it, because it was a fund placed in the Treasury for a special purpose, is also true.

Mr. President, there is only one more question that I desire to detain the Senate upon, and that is the remarkable explanation which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] offered in reply to the question of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. Very pertinently the Senator from Colorado demanded to know, if this bountiful prosperity was still enveloping us like a cloud and was still everywhere in superabundance, how it was and why it was that the wages of American laborers were being reduced; and he instanced the reduction in the textile enterprises of New England, in the great steel industry, and in the coal mines.

The Senator from Ohio, with a readiness which seemed to satisfy his friends, was prompt with the explanation that the reduction of wages in the textile factories was caused by the high price of cotton. Of course the increased price of raw material always calls either for a reduction in the cost of manufacture or an increase in the selling price, but the Senator from Ohio must know that it is always easier to increase the selling price than it is to reduce the wages of the men who work in those factories.

How often has it been asserted here, and asserted truthfully, too, that the wages of labor is the last element in a community to yield to any changed condition? That is a philosophical truth; and I venture to say that the Senator from Ohio has asserted it an hundred times. When that great financial question was before the country for discussion, how often and how truthfully was it said we would affect the price of everything before we could affect the wages of labor; with a "cheap dollar," as they described the dollar we proposed, they claimed we would immediately increase the cost of living; but they averred that it would be a long and painful process to increase the wages of labor to a corresponding point.

That was the most difficult argument we were called upon to answer, and it perhaps controlled as many votes as any one argument advanced in that debate. Yet to-day, when it suits another convenience, the distinguished Senator from Ohio responds with alacrity that the wages of labor can rise or fall in a night. No, Mr. President, if the reduction in wages in the textile factories has come, it has come through other agencies, doubtless reenforced by the recent unprecedented rise in the price of raw cotton.

But if we accept the Senator's explanation for that, how will he explain the reduction in the wage of the steel workers? Outside of cotton and wool, outside of wheat and meat products, steel is the great basic industry of this land. Except what our appetites and comfort require in the way of food and clothing, civilization could better dispense with any other commodity than steel. Let the Senator from Ohio explain to the thousands of steel workers whose wages have been reduced the cause of such reduction. Is it from an increase in the price of the raw material? Oh, no, Mr. President.

Raw material, so far from advancing to furnish a justification for reducing wages, has itself fallen in price. Is it that the stockholders in that gigantic corporation shall have larger dividends? That their greed would demand them I have no doubt, but their business prudence forbade that, and instead of attempting to increase their dividends they have actually passed the dividend on their common stock. Three years ago the preferred stock of that great steel corporation fetched almost a hundred dollars in the open market, and the common stock fetched half as much.

The wages of the workmen had been advanced; the raw material itself returned a better price to those who owned it or produced it; and yet in the midst of this wonderful and abundant prosperity this great primal industry suffers a blight; the owners of the raw material must diminish their price; the owners of the great manufacturing plants have been compelled to divide their profits, and the wages of the steel workers have been reduced. Who will volunteer an explanation of it?

Ah, Mr. President, the same conditions exist now that existed in 1892. The enormous demand for steel has been largely satisfied and there is a dearth of orders—precisely the same condition that culminated in the great Homestead riots in 1892. When Senators talk about the wonderful prosperity of the Harrison Administration they forget that the hard times, for which Cleveland suffered the odium, began under Harrison and ended under Cleveland. In the summer of 1892, long before even the most sagacious knew the issue of the Presidential battle, this land was filled with the mutterings of idle and discontented labor.

The bankruptcy of merchants and the failures of factories were chronicled daily. When the great steel works at Homestead dared to reduce the wages of its men, there ensued a struggle, memorable in the industrial annals of this Republic, so conspicuous and so important that Congress appointed a committee to investigate it. All that was before either party had made its nomination and before the verdict of the people at the polls could be foreseen.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Texas allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. My remembrance is that the Homestead strike was commenced by mechanics, those with the lowest wages receiving $6.20 per day and the highest wages ranging from $16 to $17 per day.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a question as to the merits.

Mr. HOPKINS. My remembrance is that the committee that was appointed by the House of Representatives to investigate that strike individually made that report.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not considering the justice of that quarrel. I am simply reciting the historical fact that the quarrel occurred long before the second election of President Cleveland and occurred under the Administration of a Republican, whose character and intellect is not surpassed to-day by any man of any party. I pay that tribute willingly to the memory of Benjamin Harrison.

One word more. I said that the bad times began under Harrison and ended under Cleveland. Go and examine the record, and you will find that the advances in prices, accompanied by a corresponding improvement in the times, began before the election in 1896. That fact is impressed upon my memory indelibly, because on one occasion a Democrat, who was more enthusiastic than intelligent, began to complain to me that the gamblers had formed a pool to put up the price of wheat for the western farmer, and that they were going to defeat us in Illinois and Indiana and Iowa and through the wheat-growing States by increasing the price of wheat before the election.

Doubtless I would have recalled the conditions even without that circumstance; and when a distinguished gentleman on the other side asserted that bad times were initiated with Democratic success and ended with the Democratic Administration, I verified by the records my recollection that the rise in the price of wheat and other farm products began before the election in 1896. Even the dullest advocate on either side perfectly recognizes that it has been abundant crops and better prices that have blessed the land with this unparalleled prosperity.

Let me ask our Republican friends, who ascribe all good things to themselves and impute all evil things to us, if they believe a Republican law in this country can raise the price of wheat? Not an intelligent man on the other side will say so; and all of them, I will say, are intelligent. They might so argue for the purpose of making less intelligent men believe it, but not one of them will dare say that a law of the American Congress can put up the price of wheat, because the price of wheat is regulated in the markets of the world according to the supply of it throughout the world as compared with the demand for it throughout the world.

No Republican Senator—I had almost said that no Republican orator, but I will not venture to say that, because I will not be so rash as to limit the extravagance of speech in which the average Republican orator indulges—but no Republican Senator will declare that a Republican law can make more wheat to the acre than a Democratic law or bring a better price for wheat when made.

The Senator from Iowa, with all his popularity and well-deserved strength among the people of his State, would not dare to face them and tell them that the better prices which they received for their wheat and the better crops of wheat which they made contributed nothing to the prosperity of that State. Not one man from an agricultural community will say it; and yet the prosperity of our industrial communities depends upon the prosperity of our agricultural communities.

Unless the farmers make good crops and realize good prices for them, the manufacturers and the merchants have no customers; but when the farmers make better crops and get better prices, the merchant's store is crowded with farmers and the factory office is crowded with the merchants. It all rests at last, in the industrial as in the physical world, upon the soil.

The prosperity of this country depends upon the industry and intelligence of the men who cultivate the soil, and it is an affront to our common sense, sir, for any party in this country to assume the credit for the prosperous condition which now exists, and which, I pray God, will continue without abatement and without interruption under all administrations of every party.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the question of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I feel quite unwilling to allow this controversy to close without giving my views upon the questions that have been discussed by Senators on both sides.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator give way that I may make a motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PATTERSON. For what purpose?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator desire to go on to-night, or will he give way that I may make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield for that purpose.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4344) for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C.;

A bill (H. R. 8686) to amend section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columba;

A bill (H. R. 8688) to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 32, in the city of Washington, D. C.; and

A bill (H. R. 10241) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8889) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. It will be a brief session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 5, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 4, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9319) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak., which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPALDING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MARY J. MANKIN.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution with committee amendments, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

House resolution No. 154.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House miscellaneous items, 1903, to Mary J. Mankin, widow of William H. Mankin, late an employee of the House under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, a sum equal to six months of his salary, and an additional sum not to exceed $250 to defray the expenses of the last illness and burial of said William H. Mankin.

The following amendments were read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "an employee" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a laborer in the employ."

In line 9 strike out the words "last illness and."

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, this resolution conforms to the usual form adopted in such cases by the House. I move the adoption of the amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it has been customary to make this appropriation for employees under the Superintendent of the Capitol?

Mr. GRAFF. I understand that it has been.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the gentleman sure that there is any precedent for that?

Mr. GRAFF. I was told so by the members of the committee who have been members of the Committee on Accounts before I became a member myself. The form of the resolution was investigated, and a change was made in the present resolution so as to make it conform to the others.

Mr. PAYNE. The form of the resolution is all right, if we have been in the habit of doing this thing.

Mr. GRAFF. I understand that we have been.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me that we ought not to do it. I wish the gentleman would consent to have this matter deferred until he ascertains whether that is so or not.

Mr. GRAFF. I have no objection to that, and I will ask that the resolution be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will lie over.

There was no objection.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged House resolution, No. 108, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant clerk to said committee for the sessions of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $6 per day.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House bills of the following titles, returned from the Senate with amendments; and thereupon the amendments were read, and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, nonconcurred in, and a conference with the Senate asked; and the Speaker in each case announced the appointment of Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. CALDERHEAD as conferees on the part of the House:

A bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy;

A bill (H. R. 892) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt;

A bill (H. R. 958) granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers;

A bill (H. R. 3776) granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy.

A bill (H. R. 3903) granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman;

A bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch; and

A bill (H. R. 6022) granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis.

JAMES M. DICKEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 6321) granting an increase of pension to James M. Dickey.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four."

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

STATUES OF CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with a message from the Senate, the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates to be bound with these memorials.

The message from the Senate announced that the amendments of the House, to strike out, in line 7, the word "five" and insert "three;" and to strike out, in line 8, the word "ten" and insert "twelve," had been disagreed to by the Senate, and a conference thereon requested.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TATE.

SESSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor be authorized to have printed and bound whatever papers and documents in connection with subjects under consideration by the committee may be necessary to the transaction of its business.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; and, pending that motion, I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] whether we can not reach an agreement as to the time during which the general debate shall continue. How long does the gentleman desire on his side?

Mr. DINSMORE. We should like to have two hours further on our side.

Mr. HITT. That would take us pretty near to the usual hour of adjournment. Can not the gentlemen on that side content themselves with an hour and a half?

Mr. DINSMORE. I can not agree to that, in view of promises I have made to gentlemen whom I am trying to take care of. I have figured the matter down pretty closely, and we can not do with less than the amount of time I have named.

Mr. HITT. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate in the Committee of the Whole be closed at the end of four hours, two hours on each side, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] controlling the time on his side, while I control the two hours or less that we may occupy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill in the Committee of the Whole close in four hours, to be equally divided between the two sides, the time on one side to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and on the other by the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. HITT was then agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. LACEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. HITT. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the subject-matter which will be the basis of my remarks will not be of such a character as will probably evoke the same lively interest which was manifested in the House during the debate of yesterday. However, it is a subject which is of deep importance to my constituents in my district, who are almost as much divided on this subject as the residents of Indiana and Kentucky, separated by that silver line so eloquently described by the gentleman from Mississippi, are divided on the question at issue between them.

What I propose to call to the attention of the House this morning is the subject of across-sea transportation between the United States and the Philippine Islands. There are several bills which have been introduced, both in the House and in the Senate, on this subject. Some of these bills treat of the transportation of Government supplies to the Philippines; some treat of the transportation of all freight from the United States to the Philippines; some give exclusive advantage to vessels of the United States; others do not give exclusive advantage, but all of the bills do give advantage to the shipping interests.

On the 11th of December I had the honor to introduce a bill providing that all Government supplies of any and every description, to any and all of the outlying possessions of the United States, should be transported exclusively in vessels of the United States, provided that the rate charged for such transportation shall not be more than 10 per cent in excess of the lowest rate that can be secured by competitive bids by all vessels regardless of nationality.

On December 18 last I introduced another bill applying to the general freight and passenger traffic to and from the Philippine Islands. It provides for a rebate of 15 per cent of existing duties on all goods transported to the United States in vessels of the United States, and that on all goods carrying no duty or a duty of 10 per cent or less ad valorem there shall be levied a discriminating duty of 10 per cent, if such goods are not carried in vessels of the United States, and that all vessels of foreign nationality carrying passengers shall be subject to a tax of 10 per cent upon all of the passenger fares.

Undoubtedly, Mr. Chairman, it is devoutly to be hoped and wished that, if not possible at the present moment, in the near future all freight, whether for Government purposes or for private parties, and all passengers shall be carried exclusively in vessels flying the American flag; but I very much doubt whether that is possible at the present time. Just how much special aid we should give to American vessels engaged or wishing to engage in the Philippine trade is a question of difficult adjustment. It is a question involving at once the concession properly due to the American merchant marine, the rights of other American investors affected, and the protection of the Government, and the general rights of American producers of products that go to the Philippines, and American consumers of products that come from the Philippines. And, also, we must not neglect the interests of the Filipinos themselves.

There is a bill under discussion in both branches of Congress, and being much discussed in the public prints, which provides that all transportation by sea of Government supplies shall be in American vessels. This bill allows no discrimination on the part of Government officials. Its enactment as presented would make it impossible to carry any Government supplies from any port anywhere in the world to any other port in a vessel other than one of the United States. For instance, under its provisions, a sack of flour, a barrel of oil, or a ton of coal could not be carried from one island of the Philippines to another if there was no American vessel at hand to carry it. That this provision goes too far I feel sure that the good sense of the committee to which this bill has been referred will so determine.

From the main provision of the bill, allowing no discretion to Government officers in charge, allowing no competition by any foreign vessels, opening as it easily does the way to combinations between American vessel owners engaged in this trade, there is danger of much embarrassment and much inconvenience to the Government, and of large increase in the appropriations which would be necessary for the transportation of Government supplies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall, as far as possible, in support of the bills that I introduced and in support of my contention, refer the House to the arguments and the reports of those who are better qualified to judge with regard to this matter than myself. I would suggest that those most capable of passing judgment upon this question would be the officers who have the relations of the Philippines with the United States in charge. The Secretary of War who has just retired, one of the ablest and most efficient executive officers that this Government has ever had, an official whose devotion to the highest good of the nation, to his flag and to his party can not be questioned, has spoken with great positiveness upon this issue. His statements have come with the earnestness of a valedictory upon his retirement from public life. In a report dated January 14, 1904, and published as Senate Document No. 94, Secretary Root says:

> The great bulk of freight shipped by the War Department to the Philippines goes upon the transports owned by the United States. The remainder goes chiefly in foreign bottoms, because the owners of foreign vessels uniformly underbid the owners of American vessels. Every opportunity has been given to American vessels to compete, and the standing instructions of the Department are to prefer American vessels wherever there is such substantial equality between the bids as to make it lawful to do so.
> I have no doubt whatever of the wisdom of a provision which shall make it possible to do this business through the employment of American ships. I think, however, that there is great danger that the passage of this bill in its present form would involve the Government in serious difficulty and unwarranted expense. The number of American vessels available for shipment from the Atlantic coast to the Philippines is so small that a rigid requirement that shipments should be made in American vessels only would put the Government entirely at the mercy of a very few individuals, who could charge any price they wished. The only alternative to the possible payment of exorbitant prices for shipments from New York to Manila would be sending the freight by rail to the Pacific coast, and thence by ship to Manila.
> Your committee will observe, by examining the Quartermaster-General's report of January 13, that the average cost of transporting all classes of freight from New York to Manila during the calendar year 1903 has been $11.91 per ton of 2,000 pounds, while the average cost of transporting all classes of freight by rail from New York to San Francisco has been $28.70 per ton of 2,000 pounds; that is to say, it now costs two and one-half times as much to get freight from New York to the Pacific coast as it now costs to get it from New York to Manila. Under these circumstances, if we were confined absolutely to American bottoms for this business, we would have no way of escaping from the payment of at least three times as much as we now pay for this class of transportation.
> I think the same result can be accomplished and this danger avoided by changing the form of the bill so that it will authorize a preference to American shipping, providing the charge made does not exceed the prices bid by the owners of foreign vessels more than a specific percentage.
> A bill providing for such a preference in respect of shipments on the Pacific was introduced in the House in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress (H. R. 14441). It was favorably reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs (Report No. 2348). It had the warm approval of this Department, but was defeated on the floor of the House upon the avowed ground that it would amount to a kind of a ship subsidy. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 35, pt. 7, pp. 6887-6891.)
> For greater convenience, I take the liberty of inclosing a copy of that bill as indicating the form of the provision which, it seems to me, would best accomplish the desired object of doing the Government business in such a way as to promote American shipping. I should be in favor of increasing the preference to, say, 25 or 50 per cent.

It is needless to add that the detailed compilation which follows from the Quartermaster-General in the same document amply sustains the Secretary's conclusions. The bill of the last Congress to which the Secretary refers was H. R. 14441, and authorized the acceptance of the lowest and most suitable bid offered by American-built ships for the transportation of Government supplies across the Pacific Ocean to and from the Philippines, "Provided, That such bid does not exceed by 10 per cent the lowest bid offered for transporting such supplies in foreign-built ships."

This bill, which was reported to the last House and was unfortunately defeated, it will be observed is in substance the same as the bill introduced by me upon the same subject at this session. Following the suggestion of the able Secretary of War, I might be willing, and I take it that this House might be willing, to increase somewhat the advantage to American vessels. I can not believe that this House will seriously consider the sweeping measure proposed which is destructive of all competition and would leave the Government, as Secretary Root says, "entirely at the mercy of a very few individuals who could charge any price they wished."

The danger of this privilege without limit is further emphasized by a second letter from the Secretary of War to the President pro tempore of the Senate. This letter was not printed as a document, but was given out at the War Department and printed in the New York Journal of Commerce of January 28. It is as follows:

[Secretary Root's second letter to Senator FRYE.]

> I am sorry you were dissatisfied with my letter about the bill limiting the transportation of Government stores to American vessels. I very much desire that business should be done by American vessels, and I have been for several years trying in various ways to get from Congress authority to prefer our own ships to foreign ships. It has seemed to me that the simplest and best way was to give our ships a preference. Two years ago I tried to get authority to give them a preference of 10 per cent, and the bill was beaten in the House. I said in my letter to you that I would be in favor of increasing the percentage to 25 or 30 per cent. I would be perfectly willing to see you go further than that and extend the limit of the preference to 50 or even 100 per cent if necessary, but I do not think that there ought to be an absolute prohibition imposed upon the officers of the Government when it is not imposed upon any of the rest of the business community.
> I have no objection to the business of the Government being subjected, in common with the business of the citizens of the United States generally, to the operation of a general policy such as embodied in the navigation laws regarding our coastwise trade. Such laws, wisely, I think, make all American business tributary to American shipping, and the result is, naturally and necessarily, to induce an adequate supply of shipping to do the business. But a statute which limits Government freightage alone, separate and apart from the business of the community at large, to American shipping, under a hard and fast rule which prohibits to the managers of the Government business the same facilities and opportunities which are afforded to the rest of the community, will not be adequate to attract American ships and lead them to engage in the business of which the Government freight forms a small part. There is not enough Government business to justify any such expectations. The result of such a special provision would therefore naturally be either that the Government must pay whatever the casual American vessel chooses to ask or must operate its own transports on the Atlantic at great loss, or must ship all of its stores by way of the Pacific, imposing upon the material going from the Atlantic coast the very heavy railway charges across the continent. The result of such provisions, tying the hands of the Government officers, is not merely to cause greater expense in specific cases, but it is to dishearten the officers and lead them to feel that it is useless to try to conduct business economically.
> While I think that the best way to accomplish what the American shipowners and shipbuilders desire, and what I desire equally with them and with you, is to authorize the preference, stated in terms of a percentage, I do not mean to say that this is the only way. I think you could accomplish substantially the same thing by the present bill by adding at the end of section 2 a clause something like the following:
> "That any head of a Department may suspend the operation of section 1 in regard to any particular contract for the transportation of such articles whenever, after due public advertisement, no bids for the transportation of the articles specified therein, in a vessel of the United States, shall have been received at rates which shall be deemed to be reasonable, in view of the policy of the Government to promote the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes."
> Section 2, as it now stands, apparently contemplates the general suspension of section 1 under circumstances of special exigency such as to justify appeal to the President for the protection of the interests of the Government. I should think it would hardly justify going to the President in matters of detail, such as are constantly arising in letting contracts for transportation of comparatively small quantities of stores.

It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that if the Secretary of War, an officer as able as he is, an officer who has had the regulation of all that concerns the Philippine Islands during his administration, is willing to make a concession of that kind rather than have this bill passed in its present form, I feel that it is worthy of the closest consideration by the House. Strange as it may seem, the Secretary of War is not alone, or rather has not been alone, in his desire to prevent the enactment of this legislation.

The honorable Secretary of the Navy in a personal letter to the President of the Senate, which is published in Senate Report 182, says:

> During the last fiscal year there were 3,930 tons of stores other than coal shipped to foreign ports in the following way: English bottoms, 2,179 tons; German bottoms, 1,301 tons; American bottoms, 373 tons; French bottoms, 77 tons. These shipments were made on the usual lines of transportation and did not require the chartering of any vessels. During the same period the following shipments of coal to foreign ports for naval use were made:

	Tons.
To Cavite—
English bottoms	36,985
German bottoms	5,000
To Yokohama—English bottoms	17,388

> The transportation of all materials for the use of the Navy is governed by the provisions of sections 3718 to 3721, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes. As the bids for transportation by foreign vessels are always lower than those for transportation by American vessels, by law the Department is required to accept the former. I believe that we should ship our public stores in American bottoms and should welcome any legislation which would enable this Department to do so.

Observe, Mr. Chairman, that the facts here stated are in line with the facts stated by the Secretary of War, and that the favorable recommendation which concludes this letter is but an expression of personal opinion and desire, which, if further expanded, would doubtless be hedged in by conditions which would prevent the evil feared by the Secretary of War.

The records of the Navy Department, from all I can gather, are full of facts and of protests against positive direction in the shipment of supplies which would leave no discretion to the Department. In the report of the Bureau of Equipment for 1898, page 270, I find these words:

> The Department was still in desperate straits for transportation of coal, and the only alternative was to purchase steamers, arm and man them with the naval forces. There were but few vessels in this country suitable for the transportation of coal and available for immediate use. When these were found their owners knew well the necessities of the Government and generally demanded exorbitant prices.

It is sad to believe, Mr. Chairman, that American citizens will take advantage of their Government in its extremity, or when they have the opportunity. Patriotism is a common virtue, but self-interest is more potent far in the everyday doings of men. The poet Burns hit a good compromise upon the characters of men when he said:

I'll no say men are villains a';
The real, harden'd, wicked,
What hae nae check but human law,
But och! mankind are unco weak,
Are to a few restricked:
An' little to be trusted;
If Self the wavering balance shake,
It's rarely right adjusted!

The coastwise laws of course apply to trade between Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. The report of the Bureau of Equipment for 1899, on page 14, says:

It is necessary, under the law, that all merchandise from the Atlantic coast to San Francisco shall be carried in American bottoms. The Bureau has encountered many difficulties in carrying out the law, so far as the transportation of coal is concerned. American ships are scarce and command very high freight rates. So far as the Bureau can ascertain, there is not a single large-size steam collier under the American flag. The freight alone on American coal from the Atlantic coast to San Francisco is sometimes as great as the entire cost of the best Cardiff coal shipped from England and delivered either at Mare Island yard or in San Francisco Bay.

Again, in 1900, the Bureau of Equipment stated in its report, on page 36:

Owing to the great scarcity of freight steamers at present, it is extremely difficult—in fact, impossible—to deliver coal at points desired at regular periods. The necessities of a Government are generally taken advantage of to extort exorbitant freight rates. In addition to these difficulties, only vessels with American registers can now be employed to carry coal to the Hawaiian Islands and to Porto Rico.

Treating the same subject in 1901, the report of the Bureau of Equipment states on page 41:

At present, owing to the scarcity of American freight vessels, the best screened admiralty Cardiff coal can be laid down at Mare Island, duty paid, for considerably less than American coal mined on the Atlantic coast, although the latter at tide water costs about half as much as the former.

On page 50 of the report of the same Department for 1902 are these words:

The freight on coal from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific ports remains at a high figure. Cardiff coal can be purchased at San Francisco, duty paid, at considerably less than coal can be shipped from the Atlantic coast. But few American vessels are offered for coal freight.

Is it not rather sad that in the effort to help our shipping we have been driven to England to buy our coal? The general cargo freight rate from New York to San Francisco is about $12 a ton, while the Government Departments are chartering foreign vessels for the Philippines at less than $6 a ton.

Rear-Admiral G. A. Converse, the present Chief of the Bureau of Equipment, took part in a hearing a few days ago before the House Committee on Naval Affairs. In the course of his remarks he expressed a laudable desire to see American freights carried in American ships, but he took strong grounds against a measure which would unconditionally force this transportation in American bottoms. In the course of that hearing he said—page 234:

While I much prefer to see American coal carried in American ships, I do not believe that the American ships available are sufficient to meet the demands of the Navy Department. I do not think the Navy Department should be the one to pay all the subsidy for building up the American merchant marine, and I do not think the Bureau of Equipment should have to increase its estimates for coal transportation beyond a reasonable amount simply to carry coal in American ships. It is my opinion, therefore, as previously stated, that there should be a means provided for carrying American coal in any vessel, giving preference to American bottoms whenever they can be obtained at a reasonable advance over the price offered by foreign ships, said advance to be limited by a certain percentage.

I had not the honor of advising with the Secretary of War or the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment before introducing my bill, and I am therefore doubly pleased that their judgment, enforced by the experience of their respective Departments, so fully justifies a limitation such as I have proposed.

The economical administration of the affairs of the Government, Mr. Chairman, is one of the highest duties that rests upon us. A duty no less high is in holding the scales of justice equally balanced between different private interests to the end that the common good of all may be best preserved. All that has been quoted and all that can be said in favor of placing some definite limit upon the advantage accorded American shipping in connection with the transportation of Government supplies certainly applies in an equal degree to the broader question of general transportation of all shipments, including the transportation of passengers, between the United States and the Philippines. The measure on this question which now seems to have the right of way in official and private and newspaper discussion provides, without qualification and without restriction, that all such shipments shall be in American vessels. In other words, it extends at one stroke the coastwise laws clear across the Pacific to the Philippine Islands. When the coastwise laws were framed, the term "coastwise" meant "along the coasts of this country." It is a tremendous stretch of legislative construction that would apply these laws automatically to possessions on the other side of the world. The bill which I presented and which I outlined in the beginning of my remarks allows fair discrimination in this trade in favor of the American merchant marine. I do not say that this bill perfectly meets the situation, but I hope that in calling it to the attention of the House and of the able and impartial committee which will pass upon the different measures proposed my suggestions may be considered.

In the act of March 8, 1902, "temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands," a clause was inserted providing that until July 1, 1904, the coastwise laws of the United States should not apply to the traffic between the United States and the Philippine Islands or to the interisland traffic of the Philippines. This clause was inserted by the Senate and agreed to in conference and accepted by the House as a part of the general bill and without the knowledge on the part of, perhaps, nine-tenths of the Members of the House that such a clause was in the bill. Indeed, we thought that this was a bridge that we would cross when we got to it. There was no discussion in the House to let us know that we had anticipated the bridge. This clause has since led to much discussion as to whether its provisions would apply automatically on July 1, 1904, or whether additional affirmative legislation is necessary to make it apply. There is room for much argument on both sides of the question, but the affirmative legislation proposed indicates a prevailing view as to its necessity. It is commonly admitted that to apply the coastwise laws on and after July 1 next to the Philippine interisland trade would practically destroy that trade owing to the lack of American vessels to conduct it. Therefore, in the legislation proposed this interisland trade is excepted from the application of the coastwise laws; and, at the same time, all doubt as to the application of these laws between the Philippines and the United States is removed by specific provision that they shall apply.

Whether they shall apply unconditionally, without regard to the cost involved and without reference to whether there are American vessels available to do the business—whether their application shall be hedged in by some such conditions or limitations as I have had the honor to propose, or whether their application shall be postponed for a fixed number of years in order to allow time for a sufficiency of American vessels to be built for the traffic—these are the phases of the question that will soon claim solution. Their unconditional application is now to the fore in the public attention and stands on all fours with the proposition to unconditionally limit the transportation of Government supplies to American vessels.

On this question also we are fortunate in having much reliable official data. The Commissioner of Navigation, in his report for 1903, says, on page 44:

Section 3 of the act of March 8, 1902, can not go into effect automatically on July 1, 1904, without almost destroying interisland trade and disturbing the trade between the United States and the archipelago. There are practically no "vessels of the United States," in the statutory sense, in the Philippines.

He says further, on the same page:

The trade between the United States and the Philippines is now conducted almost entirely in foreign bottoms. * * * American vessels in 1902 thus carried only about 3 per cent of the merchandise transported in trade between the Philippines and the United States. To confine this trade entirely to American vessels after the 1st of next July will involve a complete reversal of existing carrying conditions. This reversal will disturb trade relations unless American tonnage can be adjusted promptly to this new line of trade.

It is well known that there is no more ardent friend to American shipping than the Commissioner of Navigation. He goes on to summarize the steamers that might be available for this trade and then states that "American steam tonnage will suffice to conduct the trade between Pacific coast ports and the Philippines if the rates are satisfactory." Further, on page 45, he says:

Considerations of treaty obligations, of our general trade policy in the East, and our peculiar relations to the people of the Philippines raise this question considerably above the plane of an ordinary application of the coasting-trade law, such as was promptly and properly made in the case of Hawaii and Porto Rico.

This statement is most timely. The questions of an open-door policy in the Orient, of relieving the Philippines as far as possible from restrictions in their trade, of promoting the trade with the Philippines for their good as well as for our own should certainly make us hesitate before adopting a measure that, from all indications, would be most harmful. That the restrictions involved in the proposed legislation would fall hardest upon the Filipinos and upon the American consumers of Philippine products is too evident for discussion. On this phase of the question the last report of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, on page 36, says:

The application of the provisions of the United States statutes restricting to vessels of the United States both the coastwise trade of the islands as well as that carried on between them and the United States after July 1, 1904, is a matter of serious moment to the Philippines.

The report goes on to show that, exclusive of supplies carried by the army transport service, 97 per cent of the Philippine exports to the United States during the fiscal year 1903, amounting to nearly $14,000,000, were carried in foreign vessels, and that approximately 90 per cent of the importations into the Philippines from the United States, amounting to something over $4,000,000, were carried in foreign vessels.

The report further shows that insular freight from New York to Manila is being sent at the approximate sliding-scale rate of $5.90 per ton (p. 38). The report also states that in the proposals and contracts with all foreign vessels this clause is inserted:

It is further expressly agreed that if during the period covered by this contract a rate as low as the contract rate is offered by any company to forward insular freight to Manila in American bottoms the insular government reserves the right to avail itself of such offer.

This is a concession to American vessels which every patriotic American should applaud; but the statement of it is followed with the words, "Not a ton of this freight was carried in an American bottom." The report goes on to say (p. 39):

The passenger steamers from San Francisco to the Orient have been crowded during the past year. I am fearful that the few American ships at present in that service will be inadequate after July 1, 1904, for the service between Manila and the United States Pacific ports, and that much inconvenience will result until others are added.

The imports from the Philippines to the United States consist chiefly of hemp, and by far the greater part of this is landed at Atlantic ports. The exports from the United States to the Philippines consist mainly of flour, canned meats, clothing, and other compact cargoes, and are shipped almost wholly from Pacific ports. There are now no American steamers from Atlantic ports in the Philippine trade. The legislation proposed would force the hemp importations to come by the Pacific coast, and the life that would be left in the hemp business, so far as the eastern manufacturers are concerned, after the increase in ocean freights would in all probability be entirely crushed out by the transcontinental freight charges. The business between the United States and the Philippines both ways is now being conducted nearly altogether by foreign tramps. The Philippines only constitute one of many ports all round the world at which they call, and freight from the Philippines forms a very small proportion of the traffic that they handle. By taking it in connection with various other traffic from various other ports they are enabled to handle it at a minimum cost, a cost which could not be expected to be met by American regular liners. It is both necessary and right, therefore, to give American vessels an advantage in this trade; but it would be most unwise and most unjust to other interests concerned to give American vessels an absolute monopoly of this trade, regardless of what it would cost. To quote from Mr. Augustus P. Loring, president of the Plymouth Cordage Company:

The imports from the Philippines to the United States, being chiefly hemp, a very bulky cargo, amount in money to $13,863,059, while the exports from the United States to the Philippines, being flour, canned meats, clothes, and hardware, or compact cargoes, amount in money to less than $4,000,000 (Report of Bureau of Insular Affairs, p. 32), and so are not sufficient to supply a third of the vessels with return cargoes; and, moreover, the exports are almost wholly from the Pacific ports, so that there are practically no return cargoes from the Atlantic ports.

Hence the vessel discharging hemp in the Atlantic port takes a cargo for South America or some European port, thence perhaps to Australia or China, and so she may again reach the Philippines and be available for hemp.

It is not imports from America, but coal from Australia, or rice from the French East Indies, both of which are among the largest imports to the Philippines (Report of Bureau of Insular Affairs, pp. 31, 32), that bring vessels to the islands. So, too, vessels discharging in Hongkong or Shanghai or other eastern ports are available for a westward cargo of hemp.

In view of these facts, it is obvious why no line of steamers to bring hemp has been established, and why, under normal conditions, such a line never would be established.

It is equally obvious that there is no American shipping adapted or available for this trade.

Of the published list of vessels supposed to be available, all except five are regular liners running regularly to other points and not available for trade between the Atlantic ports and the Philippine Islands. And the five steamers which are not liners are not engaged in the eastern trade, but are engaged in other business to abandon which and take up the Philippine trade would require considerable inducement, as stated in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation above quoted.

A section of the act of March 8, 1902, provides that "all articles, the growth and product of the Philippine Islands, admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty under the provisions of this act and coming directly from said islands to the United States for use and consumption therein, shall hereafter be exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands."

Under this section of the act Manila hemp brought directly into the United States and there consumed receives a rebate equal to the export duty levied in the Philippines, and amounting to 35 cents per hundred pounds.

The object of this rebate was to give the American farmer his binder twine cheaper, and the American shipowner cheaper rope; but besides accomplishing this result, in the face of a very strong market for raw material, the rebate worked a second and scarcely less important result alluded to above in the report of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, but more elaborately stated by the Secretary of War in his annual report for the year 1903, pages 48 and 49:

"One effect of the legislation regulating the commercial relations between the United States and the Philippines has been to transfer the principal market for the raw material for our cordage industry from England to the United States. The total exports of hemp from the Philippines for the past five years have been as follows:

1900	11,398,943
1901	14,453,110
1902	15,841,316
1903	21,701,575

During the same years the hemp exports to the United States have been:

1899	$2,402,274
1900	3,446,141
1901	2,402,867
1902	7,261,459
1903	12,314,312

At the same time the importations of hemp into the United States from other countries have decreased as follows:

1899	$2,817,137
1901	2,870,812
1903	982,857

That is to say, while the cordage and binding-twine industry of the United States, which is so essential to American agriculture, paid a profit to European countries on about half of its raw material before this legislation, it now obtains substantially all of its raw material directly from the country of its origin without the payment of any immediate profit.

This shifting of the market is also shown by the relative exports to England and the United States in the years 1901 and 1902. In 1901 England took 65 per cent and America 26 per cent of the hemp exported. In 1902 England took only 26 per cent and America 58 per cent.

Practically all the hemp imported into America has been brought to the Atlantic ports.

The reason for this is obvious. The great bulk of the cordage business is on the eastern seacoast.

The Twelfth Census of the United States, Volume VII, pages 156, 157, 168, and 169, shows that there are 105 companies in the United States in the manufacture of twine and cordage having $29,275,470 of capital, turning out a product of $37,849,651 annually, employing 436 salaried officers at $666,936 and 15,971 employees at wages of $4,113,112 annually. Mills in the South and Middle West using no manila hemp, but cotton, flax, and jute solely, are included in this list, but there is no means of separating them in the official figures, so the whole list must be used.

Seventy-five of these companies, doing 75 per cent of the business, are on the Atlantic seashore. Two doing an absolutely insignificant business are on the Pacific coast, and practically all the rest are in the Middle West and more conveniently served from the Atlantic ports than by the way of the Pacific, the haul overland from the Pacific being twice as long as from the Atlantic and more difficult, being across the Rocky Mountains and over tracks congested by traffic, while on account of the weight of traffic being from the West to the East there is always a good chance to send freight westward from the Atlantic, as there is never enough to fill all the cars going west.

I have said that the restriction on this trade would bear heavily upon the Filipinos. This has been forcibly emphasized in a special report but recently received at the War Department from W. Morgan Shuster, collector of customs for the Philippine Islands. In discussing this very question Mr. Shuster says on page 17 of this report:

No course should be adopted which will place any additional burden in the way of freights on Philippine products shipped either locally or to the mainland territory for some years to come. For a similar reason no law should be passed which will appreciably increase the freight rates from the mainland territory to these islands. Cheap and adequate transportation between the mainland territory and these islands and between Philippine ports is vitally necessary to successful development here.

This officer, closest in charge, emphasizes the words quoted by putting them in italics. In further explanation of the importance of this question to the Philippine Islands, he says:

At the present time the greater part of the freight traffic between the Philippines and New York is carried on in foreign bottoms. So far as indications go, any law which prevented the continuance of that trade in foreign bottoms until an equal tonnage of cheaply operated American freighters are actually available to take up that trade and maintain healthy rate competition would result in a decided increase over the present rates of freight. This additional burden would fall upon the already weakened resources of these islands, and such a result would be more than lamentable from every standpoint. * * * It is therefore earnestly recommended that the present laws, so far as they permit foreign bottoms to trade between these islands and the mainland territory of the United States, be not changed for a period of at least five years from July 1, 1904, and that positive legislation to that effect be had by Congress at an early date.

These late official reports from the Philippine Islands and the War Department have come out since these bills were reported to the upper branch of Congress. So great was the objection to the general Philippine shipping bill urged from many quarters that a special hearing upon that measure (S. 2259) was given by the distinguished Senate Committee on the Philippines. It was a sort of post-mortem hearing in that the leaders of that great committee had already made up their minds and were determined not to change their opinions. At this hearing these honorable gentlemen ranged themselves most emphatically on the side of the advocates of the bill and showed unmistakable and unchangeable hostility to those who saw fit to protest. The testimony of the remonstrants at that hearing—except where leave to print was granted—begins and ends with cross-questioning. That testimony makes them appear rather like witnesses in rebuttal against the State at a murder trial than like business men who came "a round unvarnished tale to deliver" upon the effects of the proposed legislation.

The remonstrants at that hearing—consisting largely of the eastern cordage manufacturers—announced their willingness to give an advance of 10 or even 25 per cent on present rates of freight to have such freight carried in American bottoms. This spirit of practical willingness to encourage the flag of their country is worthy of all commendation. They represented that the enactment of this law, which would give the steamship lines in the general trade the unlimited advantages to which Secretary Root so strongly objected as applying in the Government trade, would likely close up the cordage mills of the East, throw thousands of men out of employment, destroy many thousands of dollars invested in useful enterprises, and greatly raise the price to the consumers of binder twine and every other product of the cordage mills—that is, farmers, riggers, and shipowners.

As I have said, there are large cordage factories in my district; there are shipyards and shipping companies all around me; I have personal and political friends among them all. I would give all of them a fair chance.

Because of the languishing condition of the American merchant marine I would gladly give such special concessions—even to raising the percentage to 25 or 35 per cent—to that industry if it would not too injuriously affect other industries or the general public. Such concessions I have intended to propose in the two bills which I introduced. If further encouragement be necessary, it should be extended on the Atlantic in the trade to South America, in the trade to Africa, in the general trade with the Orient; but certainly it should not all come as a forced concession from the Philippine Islands—the American producers of exports to the Philippines, the American consumers of imports from the Philippines, and the American manufacturers of Philippine raw materials.

A bill by Mr. FRYE (S. 2263) to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That vessels of the United States, and no others, shall be employed in the transportation by sea of coal, provisions, fodder, or supplies of any description, purchased pursuant to law, for the use of the Army or Navy; but this section shall not be construed to prohibit the transportation of such articles by any vessel owned by any Department of the Government.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States may from time to time suspend, in whole or in part, section 1 of this act whenever, in the interests of the national defense, or for the protection of the interests of the Government, such suspension may seem to him desirable.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby directed to enforce the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect one month after its passage.

A bill by Mr. FRYE (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1904, no merchandise shall be transported by sea, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the voyage, in any other vessel than a vessel of the United States. But this section shall not be construed to prohibit the sailing of any foreign vessel between any port of the United States and any port or place in the Philippine Archipelago: Provided, That no merchandise other than that imported in such vessel from some foreign port which has been specified on the manifest as for another port, and which shall not have been unladed shall be carried between a port of the United States and a port or place in the Philippine Archipelago.

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1904, no foreign vessel shall transport passengers between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, either directly or by way of a foreign port, under a penalty of $200 for each passenger so transported and landed.

SEC. 3. That sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not apply to the transportation of merchandise or passengers between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago. Until Congress shall have authorized the registry as vessels of the United States of vessels owned in the Philippine Archipelago, the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized to adopt, from time to time, and enforce regulations governing the transportation of merchandise and passengers between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago.

SEC. 4. That sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not apply to the voyage of a vessel between a port of the United States and a port or place in the Philippine Archipelago begun before July 1, 1904.

SEC. 5. That sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not apply to vessels owned by any department of the Government.

SEC. 6. That so much of section 3 of the act approved March 8, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," as reads: "Provided, however, That until July 1, 1904, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaged in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago," is hereby repealed. This section shall take effect on July 1, 1904.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not be construed to impair or affect any privilege guaranteed to Spanish ships and merchandise by the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain signed at the city of Paris on December 10, 1898, and ratified April 11, 1899.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall, from time to time, issue regulations for the enforcement of this act, except as otherwise provided in section 3.

A bill by Mr. MORRELL (H. R. 7038) to provide for the transportation of Government supplies in United States vessels.

Be it enacted, etc., That the transportation by sea of United States Government supplies, of any and every description, to any and all of the outlying possessions of the United States, when in other than vessels owned by the Government, shall be effected exclusively in vessels of the United States: Provided, however, That the rates charged for such transportation by such United States vessels shall not be more than 10 per centum in excess of the lowest rates that can be secured for such transportation under competitive bids by vessels of every nationality.

SEC. 2. That all act and parts of acts conflicting or inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect one month after its passage.

A bill by Mr. MORRELL (H. R. 8320) to promote the merchant marine of the United States, etc.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1904, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be imported into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago or into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States, in vessels not of the United States, the same duties which are required by the act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved the 8th day of March, 1902; but on all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall, after the 1st day of July, 1904, be transported from the United States to the Philippine Archipelago or from the Philippine Archipelago to the United States in vessels of the United States there shall be allowed a rebate of 15 per cent of the duties required by the act aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That a discriminating duty of 10 per cent ad valorem shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, and merchandise on which there is, by the said act, imposed no duty at all, and also on all goods, wares, and merchandise on which the duty imposed by the said act is less than 10 per cent ad valorem, or is a specific duty equivalent to an ad valorem duty of less than 10 per cent; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise transported from the United States to the Philippine Archipelago or from the Philippine Archipelago to the United States in vessels of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all vessels of foreign nationality engaging in the transportation of passengers between ports of the United States and ports in the Philippine Archipelago or between ports of the Philippine Archipelago and ports of the United States shall be subject to a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the passenger fares collected by or due to the owners or agents of such vessels for the transportation of such passengers on each and every such voyage between such ports, and such tax shall be paid by the master or owner of such vessel to the collector of customs at the port of departure; and no such vessel shall be cleared at any port of the United States or the Philippine Archipelago for any such voyage until the said tax shall have been paid. The master of any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section or with regulations made in pursuance of this act shall be subject to a penalty of $200 for the first offense and $500 for every subsequent offense.

SEC. 4. That this act shall not apply to the voyage of a vessel between a port of the United States and a port or place in the Philippine Archipelago begun before July 1, 1904.

SEC. 5. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BEDE] the other day extended to us a very cordial invitation to disband and come over and play in his yard. Now, that invitation being so cordially extended, I believe that common courtesy requires that we either accept or reject it, and if we do the latter we ought to give our reasons therefor. After mature consideration we have concluded that we can not accept that invitation for the reason, first, we feel it ought to have come from some one who has lived there longer than he has. [Laughter.] If it had come from my earnest friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who has stood as a watchman on the Republican walls for decades, or from that venerable Athenian Patriarch from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], we might have considered it seriously; but we think at least it ought to have come from some one who has lived in the Republican household long enough to get his wraps off. According to the gentleman's own statement he was first a Republican, then a Democrat, and now a Republican again—I take it a kind of political chameleon that is able to adjust his political complexion to any party in which he happens to light. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

I concede that he seems to manifest great satisfaction and peace of mind now that he is safely again in the Republican ranks; but I have not the slightest doubt that if we elect the next President—and I think we will—and thereby get control of the offices, my friend will be the first one to land flat-footed in the very middle of the Democratic camp and declare that he really never was a Republican, and then will immediately invite our friends on the other side to come over and join us and make the thing unanimous. [Applause.]

There is an additional reason why we can not disband and go over and join our friends on the other side of the Chamber. I have always been of the opinion that it is well for the country that we have two great political parties contending for supremacy, the one holding the other in check, provided, of course, these parties are prompted in their contention from an earnest conviction of right. I have entered this body with a deep realization of the fact that to legislate for 80,000,000 people, engaged in diversified pursuits, scattered as they are over a territory reaching from the Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, requires not only the keen insight of the ordinary statesman, but the breadth, the courage, the integrity, and the wisdom of real statesmanship.

My opinions are perhaps worth nothing, at most but little, yet I do not believe we will do the full measure of our duty if we bend all our energies, time, and talents in trying to bring about a condition of things which we know will help only the particular industry or business in the part of the country in which we live or happen to be most interested. Neither have I any sympathy or patience with the man who stands upon this floor as a Representative of the United States and refrains from voting for a measure he believes to be wise simply because he fears the displeasure of another department of this Government. I have seen Members on the floor of this Chamber rise in their places day after day and declare they are not ashamed of the record of the Republican party.

Now, of course, Mr. Chairman, I would not question for a moment the sincerity of this statement made by gentlemen on the other side, but to the uninitiated like myself, who are somewhat familiar with the record of that party, I naturally wonder how it is possible for one to deceive himself into believing he is really proud of the record of that party.

What particular record, my friends, are you proud of? Are you proud of the record your party made prior to 1896, when you were the especial champions of free silver? Are you proud of the record your party made in 1896, in declaring in favor of international bimetallism and then stocking a Commission to prevent an agreement being made? Are you proud of the record of your party in 1900 in repudiating its former platform declarations and in its double dealings with the people of this country in declaring for the gold standard, pure and simple? Are you proud of the record of your party in opposing successfully the graduated income tax, the wisest and most equitable law that has been put upon our statute books in fifty years? Are you proud of the record of your party that has built up a tariff wall around this Government for the benefit of a few favored industries—that are to-day selling their products 5,000 miles away from their factory, after paying ocean transportation charges, for 25 per cent less than they will sell to our own people here at home? Are you proud of the record of your party that has by unwise and vicious legislation made possible the organization of trusts and monopolies that have grown so great that they are standing out to-day in open defiance to law and daily violating the same?

Are you proud of the record of your party that sustains the executive officer of our Government, who winks at these open and notorious violations of law and takes no step to punish them, notwithstanding Congress placed $500,000 in his hands for that purpose? Are you proud of the record of your party in standing for government by injunction? Are you proud of the record of your party that has permitted the gigantic and disgraceful frauds perpetrated in the Post-Office Department? Are you proud of the record of your party that has for years consistently but falsely told the American people that the consumer did not pay the tax incident to a high protective tariff, but now confess through your floor leader, as you did on the 16th of last November, that the consumer does pay the tax, that you had persistently and consistently misled them, and that while the consumer does pay the tax you are in favor of making him continue to pay it? Are you proud of the record of your party in standing by and, for the contemptible purpose of selling a few dollars' worth of goods, would see the little republic of South Africa fall a bleeding victim to sordid greed, avarice, and imperialism?

Are you proud of the record of your party in seeing a weak republic, our neighbor and for whom we in a sense agreed to stand sponsor, dismantled that we might get that which we failed to get from the rightful source and proper authority? Are you proud of the record of your party in condemning secession and treason in 1861 and now condoning, defending, and abetting it in 1903, and that, too, for the mere purpose of building a canal at a certain point? Are you proud of the record of your party in this, that the balance of trade, so far as the exportation of the products of these industries which you have and are taxing the people to protect is concerned, was last year heavily against us and was only saved to us by the real wealth producer of the country, the farmer, against whom you have continually and persistently discriminated? Mr. Wilson, the Secretary of Agriculture, says:

> During the last fourteen years there was a balance of trade in favor of farm products, without excepting any year, that amounted to $4,806,000,000. Against this was an adverse balance of trade in products other than those of the farm of $865,000,000, and the farmers not only canceled this immense obligation, but had enough left to place $3,940,000,000 to the credit of the nation when the books of international exchange were balanced.

No, my friends, I am inclined to think that when you say you are proud of the record of your party you can have reference only to the fact that you are proud that you are in and we are out.

Mr. Chairman, we were treated the other day to a very interesting recital of the unprecedented prosperity of the eleven Southern States, including my own State of Missouri. Yes; I am glad to tell the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] that we are reasonably prosperous in Missouri, despite the fact that this Government, as administered by the Republican party, has discriminated against us, and I can, I think, Mr. Chairman, give to the gentleman the secret of this prosperity.

We have one of the most intelligent, energetic, enterprising white populations on earth, and, last but by no means the least important factor, a good, old-fashioned, Democratic State administration since January 1, 1873. We have the conditions the gentleman from Illinois described, not by your assistance, but in spite of you.

No gentleman will dare rise in his seat and say, in the face of the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which I have just read, that the South and West have not saved the balance of trade to this Government this year; and no gentleman, I apprehend, will have the hardihood to say that to a protective tariff is due the credit for this condition of things, since the farmers' products are sold in the open markets of the world.

Yes; my genial good friend from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] said that he spent one of the happiest years of his life, immediately after the war, in Missouri. I do not doubt it; and if he thought it a pleasant place to live in then, he would think it a paradise now.

He felicitates us on having made great improvement since he lived there. He is correct in this. It will be remembered that he had the misfortune to live in Missouri when it was being controlled by one of the most disgraceful and damnable Republican administrations on the face of the earth, an administration which saddled on the people of that State in six short years an indebtedness of over $20,000,000 and a rate of taxation of 50 cents on the $100 valuation. The Democracy came into power in the State in January, 1873, and have been in control ever since, and the State now has a population of over 3,000,000 people, has paid off this indebtedness left us as a legacy by the Republican party, and now maintains four insane asylums, three normal schools, an asylum for the blind, a reform school for the boys, reform school for the girls, school of mines and metallurgy, and a university second to none in the United States, has the largest and best public school fund of any State in the Union, excepting perhaps Texas, and has absolutely the lowest rate of taxation of any State in the United States.

Yes, I say to my friend from Illinois, we have done this under a Democratic State administration and in spite of the fact of a national Republican Administration. That same indomitable spirit of the Missourian, which is characteristic of the southerner—and some of you older gentlemen ought to recognize it, you were up against it for four years from 1861 to 1865—that spirit is what has brought Dixie land out of ruin and chaos to the point where she, with the West, can and does save the balance of trade to the United States,

But, Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised, nay, almost astounded, the other day at the position taken by my intelligent and earnest friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]. In reference to the result of tariff legislation in case the Democrats controlled the House, he said:

> What would be the effect of it? The distinguished gentleman from Mississippi would take the head of the table on the Ways and Means Committee, and the Democratic machine would dictate the policy of this country. Now, what do they represent in the industrial system of this country? There are more manufactured products in my district than are represented by the whole Democratic membership on the Ways and Means Committee.

My God! has it come to this, that the tariff system, a system that is so far-reaching in results that it affects every man, woman, and child in this broad land of ours, can only be controlled by men whose only object is to legislate in the interest of the monopolies and trusts of this country?

Has it come to this, that a man's eligibility to membership on the great Ways and Means Committee depends entirely on the number of protected industries which happen to be located in his district? Ye gods! what brazen effrontery! I suspected that these protected governmental parasites thought they just about owned this country, but I did not expect to hear the claim of ownership announced from this floor. I for one am not ready to admit their ownership of anything except the Republican party and a right they have through that party to plunder and rob the American people.

Repeating again a portion of what my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said:

Now, what do they—

Referring to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee—represent in the industrial system of this country? He—represents 1,433 votes cast at the last election.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that each member of the Ways and Means Committee represented the same number of people, for I supposed that each member represented all the people of this country; but it seems that the gentleman from Connecticut thinks differently, and I confess it really begins to look as if that were the prevailing opinion. I take it that the gentleman's idea is that each member just represents the people in his own district; and on that basis I have looked up the record, with the following result, which I commend to my friend.

This committee is composed of seventeen members—eleven Republicans and six Democrats. Taking the first six Republicans on the committee and comparing the number of people in their districts with the six Democratic members, which I think is a fair test, we have the following result:

Ways and Means Committee.

Members.	Number of people in district.	Total.
REPUBLICANS.
Mr. Payne, of New York	184,817
Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania	173,216
Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio	214,118
Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota	210,164
Mr. McCall, of Massachusetts	205,807
Mr. Babcock, of Wisconsin	180,750
Total		1,168,872
DEMOCRATS.
Mr. Williams, of Mississippi	190,885
Mr. Robertson, of Louisiana	211,367
Mr. Swanson, of Virginia	175,579
Mr. McClellan, of New York	192,819
Mr. Cooper, of Texas	203,732
Mr. Clark, of Missouri	197,370
Total		1,171,752
Balance in favor of Democratic Members		2,880

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. I am busy right now.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I was just going to ask if the gentleman would give the votes cast in those districts he has mentioned?

Mr. HAMLIN. I had presumed, Mr. Chairman, that all the people in the country were entitled to the benefit of the law, notwithstanding they may have neglected to vote.

So there can be nothing in the gentleman's contention that the Democratic members do not represent enough people.

In that same connection there was another remarkable statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that I desire to notice again. It was this:

There are more manufactured products in my district than are represented by the whole Democratic membership on the Ways and Means Committee.

Another way, I take it, of saying, in making up the personnel of the Ways and Means Committee—the committee that has to do with the tariff—those Members ought to be selected, and those only, who have in their districts the largest amount of manufactured products. I presume the agricultural interest is not to be considered. Let us see if he is not in error in his statement. Let us see if there are more manufactured products in his district than are represented by the whole Democratic membership on the Ways and Means Committee. I see by the Twelfth Census Report that the total value of manufactured products (not alone in the gentleman's district), but in the whole State of Connecticut, in 1900 was $352,824,106.

Now, the State of Missouri is represented on that committee by my worthy colleague, Mr. CLARK, and we out in our State do not pretend to be a manufacturing State. We are feeding the world and engage in manufacturing only as a side line, and yet the total value of our manufactured products in 1900 amounted to $385,492,784, or $32,668,678 more than the gentleman's whole State. According to my friend's own logic, I presume my colleague ought to sit a little nearer the head of the table than my friend from Connecticut.

But let us carry that a little further. Let us see what the other Democrats on the committee represent:

Democratic Members.	Total value of manufactured products in district in 1900.
Mr Williams, of Mississippi	$40,431,386
Mr. Robertson, of Louisiana	121,181,683
Mr. Swanson, of Virginia	132,172,910
Mr. McClellan, of New York	2,175,720,900
Mr. Cooper, of Texas	119,414,982
Mr. Clark, of Missouri	385,492,784
Total	2,974,420,655

But, inasmuch as there are two gentlemen on that committee from the State of New York, I will divide that State's products equally between them, and still we have the Democrats of the committee representing the magnificent sum of $1,936,557,205, as against $352,824,106 by the gentleman, giving him the entire State of Connecticut.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is under protection, is it not?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes; it is under the same general law of protection, I will say. But at the same time, I say the gentleman from Connecticut is in error when he says that he represents on that committee more manufactured products than the whole Democratic membership of that committee combined.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not under protection, but in spite of it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my colleague permit a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. I would very gladly yield to the gentleman, but my time is limited, Mr. Chairman, and I think I shall have to decline to yield at this time. When I have finished, then I will be glad, if I have any time, to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Just one short question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. But, Mr. Chairman, what I want to impress upon the gentleman and this House is that his entire basis of reasoning is radically wrong. He fails to realize, I think, that the real wealth of this country lies west of the Allegheny Mountains; that it is the man on the farm who toils as he sings and sings as he toils that produces the wealth of this country; and I would for a moment, and that, too, without any idea of taunt, I assure my good friend, like to have him go with me up to the crest of the mountains just west of us and feast his eyes again, as doubtless he has done, on the land of Canaan as it stretches out in all its beauty and grandeur across the Ohio and Mississippi valleys, across the plains, and to the Rockies.

I would then take him down through the State of blue grass, fast horses, and hospitable people; let him sample, if he will, her principal product. Thence across the splendid State of Illinois—every foot of the way in an automobile—landing in the splendidly magnificent State of Missouri, where he will see evidences of nature's prodigality, where she has so lavishly poured out of her inexhaustible wealth of all things necessary to make that State an imperial kingdom; see her magnificent rivers, fertile valleys, beautiful plains, and classic hills—hills made necessary in order to cover up the mineral wealth that is piled like "Ossa upon Pelion;" a State where every man's a king and every woman a queen. [Applause.]

And if I could induce him to leave that State I would put him astride a jack rabbit or a cyclone and hurry him across the plains of Kansas into Colorado—the Eldorado of the West—and let him breathe deeply of that revivifying, vitalizing, health-restoring ozone of the mountains, and while there he would be enabled to see why the metallic money of our country had so expanded in the last seven years as to be able to meet the demands and needs of our people. Then we would resume our journey over the classic Rockies, landing up in the beautiful city of Portland, where, in 1905, he could witness the great exposition and see evidences of the thrift and enterprise and genius of our people in the great and almost limitless Northwest. [Applause.] And after seeing all these things, if he should conclude to return again to the Atlantic seaboard—a thing I very much doubt—I believe he would be willing to let the gentleman from Mississippi sit at the head of the Ways and Means Committee table, surrounded by his political associates, and help to form the tariff policies of this country.

No, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the Chamber are not hostile to the manufacturing industries of this country. We would not draw a coal of fire from a single furnace or hinder the output of a single factory, but we do want and demand fair treatment. The people of this country have paid tribute to this unjust, discriminating policy, this iniquitous tariff policy of the Republican party for years and years, and now when we see the same protected industries that come whining and begging around the Capitol for more protection every time that Congress meets selling their goods to those very people against whom we have been protecting them at lower prices than they will sell them to us at home, we naturally grow indignant and feel that we ought to withdraw from them that protection to at least a revenue basis, and to that extent put them on an equality with the balance of our people.

I want the consumers of this country, especially the farmers, to understand this fact: That it is no longer a disputed fact that the consumer does pay the tax imposed by a high protective tariff.

This is conceded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who is the recognized leader on the Republican side of the House, for in a public speech on this floor on November 16 last, in discussing the Cuban reciprocity, he said:

And so it is we put the rate of duty higher on sugar than was absolutely necessary, because we could get this splendid revenue from the sugar duty, a revenue that came from the people of the United States who used sugar in their households.

Here, Mr. Chairman, we have the frank admission from the Republican leader that the people who use sugar, and that means the high and the low, the rich and the poor, pay this tariff tax, and again on November 20, 1903, he makes this further frank and open admission that the Democrats have always been correct in their statement that the consumer pays the tax when he says:

It is hardly necessary to call attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri in my admission that a tariff on sugar, with the small amount of sugar we are producing in this country, is a revenue tariff and that the consumer pays it. No intelligent man has ever contended otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, he is the first intelligent Republican I ever heard admit it, but I commend him for it, but it seems to me it leaves him without excuse if he continues to defend a high tariff.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Republican leader makes these damaging admissions and yet coolly notifies this House and the American people that they will not attempt to lighten their burdens, for on November 27 last, among other things, he said:

Shall we revise the tariff? Well, the Republican party is a little too wise to revise the tariff, paralyzing the business of the country, more or less, on the eve of a Presidential election.

Here, Mr. Chairman, we have it in a nutshell. He admits that the consumer pays the tax, but says the Republican party is too wise to try to revise the tariff and thereby give relief to the people on the eve of a Presidential election. But why does he say that? It can not be that he is afraid the people will not approve of a revision of the tariff, for they would be the beneficiaries; then it must be that he fears the disapproval of the monopolies and trusts of this country, from which his party gets its campaign fund with which to corrupt and disgrace the American people.

I want to ask my friends on the other side of this House this question: How can you satisfy your consciences and justify your conduct before the American people in defending a tariff policy which takes millions out of the pockets of the consumers each year, under the pretense of protecting home industries against foreign competition, when these same industries are voluntarily every day competing with the prices of foreign-made goods in the open markets of the world? You can not deny they are doing this. The American Economist, the official organ of the American Tariff League, devoted to the protection of American industries, in its issue of January 22, 1904, says:

Another objection which has considerable weight with the public is that protected manufacturers are selling their products abroad at lower prices than they obtain at home, and that this is grossly unfair to the American consumer. To this charge I assent, etc.

The writer gives as an excuse therefor that these manufacturers make more goods each year than they can sell at home, and in order to get rid of their surplus they ship them to Europe and elsewhere and sell them there for less money than they do in the United States. I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that this will not be a satisfactory reason to the American people.

First. If it is true that these manufacturers have a surplus each year which they desire to sell at a reduced price in order to get rid of it, why do they not give the American people who have protected them the benefit of this reduction in price?

Second. No intelligent man can believe that they sell this surplus product at a loss in foreign markets, because if they did they would not be foolish enough to go on manufacturing a surplus year after year and year after year for the mere purpose of selling that surplus at a loss in the foreign markets. That they are not simply selling their surplus products abroad, but that the export trade is a part of their business as much as domestic trade, is shown by following statement taken from the American Industries of date February 1, 1904:

SHORTER HOURS MEAN LESS FOREIGN BUSINESS.

EDITOR AMERICAN INDUSTRIES: In relation to exporting goods to Europe, conditions are becoming harder each year, for the reason that manufacturers in Europe, particularly in Germany and Sweden, where labor costs are much less than here, have commenced manufacturing quite extensively our lines of furniture, so that we have to make extremely low prices to hold our trade in any of the countries of Europe, and if we were compelled to grant shorter hours the cost of production would be so increased that export business would practically be cut off. We think this question of increased cost occurring from shorter hours should have most careful consideration, as the enactment of an eight-hour law would be ruinous to the export part of our business and, we believe, would affect equally manufacturers in other lines.

MIDDLESEX.

BOSTON, January 19.

Third. Then if they can sell their products in foreign markets, after paying freight charges, at about 25 per cent less than they will sell them to our people at home and still make a profit, why can they not compete in the home markets, where they have no freight to pay?

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion high protection for protection's sake can not be defended at the bar of American intelligence. But the trouble now is that a big part of the money unjustly taken from the American people by reason of this iniquitous protective-tariff policy is used in propagating their nefarious doctrines throughout the country in season and out of season. In order that the people of this country may get a meager idea, at least, of the activity of these "helpless" industries, I insert here a part of the report of the secretary of the American Protective Tariff League in its nineteenth annual meeting, held in the city of New York on January 21, 1904.

FIRST VOTERS.

Some time since Mr. T. N. Ives, of our board of managers, recommended the adoption of a plan to reach "first voters" all through the United States, which took form in the issuance of Circulars No. 191 and No. 192, with which you are familiar. This enterprise is perhaps one of the most successful that we have ever undertaken and can be developed to almost an unlimited extent if the funds are available therefor. We have already listed in this office many thousands of "first voters," all of whom have received our standard documents as fast as the names and addresses have been received and verified. The enterprise has the most general indorsement of any perhaps ever undertaken by us, and the interest in the same has grown steadily from the time it was undertaken.

The plan has the personal indorsement, among others, of Hon. M. A. HANNA, United States Senator; Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, United States Senator; Hon. F. E. WARREN, United States Senator; Hon. J. C. BURROWS, United States Senator; Hon. J. T. MCCLEARY, Member of Congress; Hon. W. P. HEPBURN, Member of Congress; Hon. R. G. COUSINS, Member of Congress; Hon. WM. ALDEN SMITH, Member of Congress.

COLLEGE WORK.

The text-books of a large proportion of our colleges are based on free trade. The libraries of nearly all colleges are stocked with free-trade literature. It has been our policy for several years to obtain a list of all members of all senior classes of all colleges in the country and to send them our standard literature. We have just completed the mailing of the following documents to all college seniors:

No. 52, American Tariffs from Plymouth Rock to McKinley and Dingley, by Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, United States Senator, of New Hampshire.

No. 65, Shall the Republic Do Its Own Work, by Hon. John P. Jones, of Nevada.

No. 75, Prosperity Is the Issue, by Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, United States Senator, of New Hampshire.

As soon as the new document, No. 45, Why First Voters Should Be Protectionists, is ready for circulation, it will also be sent to all college seniors.

OUR PRESS SERVICE.

Our syndicate, press, and newspaper service has been fully maintained throughout the year, notwithstanding no campaign was in progress.

Our press service, as a whole, comprises three branches:

First. Syndicate service, consisting of 119 daily newspapers, all of which receive the important articles for publication in their respective localities on the same day that we make publication in New York.

Second. Our plate and patent-inside service, wherein we edit matter on the tariff question for all the leading press associations of the country through whom the plate or patent-inside service is furnished to local editors.

Third. Direct service of our publications to local newspapers. The list of newspapers connected with us on January 15, 1904, tabulated by States, is as follows:

Alabama	31	Nebraska	156
Arizona	24	Nevada	10
Arkansas	51	New Hampshire	35
California	164	New Jersey	104
Colorado	58	New Mexico	11
Connecticut	53	New York	370

Mississippi	15	Wyoming	20
Missouri	194
Montana	31	Total	5,422

It will be observed from this report that these defenders of the protective theory have invaded our schools and are seeking to fasten upon our Government perpetually this inequitable and unjust policy by enlisting the young men—"first voters"—of the country in their behalf.

The astonishing fact also appears from this report that they have subsidized 5,422 newspapers—manufacturing plants—plants where the thoughts, policies, and largely the habits of the people are manufactured, in their efforts to write protection to private enterprise in the very fundamental law of our land. I appeal to the American people that it is high time to recognize that fundamental principle that is the basis of all just government, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Now, Mr. Chairman, it has become a part of the routine proceedings of this House to hear gentlemen on the other side rise up, automatically, I presume, each day and declare that he is in favor of a protective tariff because it protects the laboring men of this country.

It is just such hypocritical cant as this that "maketh the heart sick," and I do not believe they are going to deceive the laboring man much longer.

Mr. Chairman, if you are in favor of protecting the laboring man, why do you not give that protection directly and immediately to him? Why try to pass it around through the manufacturers and risk their dividing the benefits they derive from it with the laboring man? You give us a trust-breeding tariff which raises the cost of living of the laboring man, and you know that the manufacturer to whom you have given this protection will not raise the wages of the laboring man one cent more than he is forced to do, largely by the labor organization of this country. If you want to protect the laboring man, why do you not amend your immigration laws so as to protect him from the pauper labor of Europe, against which you pretend to be so anxious to protect him? No, my friends, if you really want to protect the laboring man, prohibit government by injunction, give him reasonable hours, prohibit the importation of cheap labor into the country, or else throw off the mask and confess that you care only for the protection of the manufacturing industries of the country, and all other people and classes may fight their battles through life as best they may.

Mr. Chairman, I am not here as the special champion of any class of people, but I am here to raise my voice in protest against any further continuance of class legislation in the interest of the industrial organizations of this country, now that they have already, under the legal advantages you have given them, grown rich, powerful, arrogant, and defiant, while labor has submitted, endured, and suffered patiently, until now it is making demands of us, many of which demands are just and reasonable. Ought we not, therefore, to equalize these benefits and give to the laborers of this country that consideration which is due them as citizens of this great Republic? While we are bestowing these showers of blessings may we not let some droppings fall on them? Oh, if we could all but fully realize the measure of our responsibility to our fellow-man and rise to the full stature of statesmanship and in legislation know no section or pursuit, we would then approach that ideal of statesmanship that would do honor to the flag we Americans love and all other nations of this earth are compelled to respect. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the description of the beauties of Missouri given by the gentleman. Those beauties can fortunately not be spoiled or destroyed by the party in power there, but when he says that we in Missouri have prospered in spite of you, and by "you" meaning the Republican laws and policy, the Republican Administration and this Congress, I have to disagree with him and ask him this question: Does my friend seriously contend that Missouri is exempt from the operation of the beneficent laws passed by the Republican party on the question of tariff and finance, and does he think that the wonderful growth of the industries in Missouri which he has himself described would have been possible without such laws?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will gladly answer that question. I have said that Missouri, along with other States, has enjoyed the benefits of the national legislation, if there are any benefits; but, it being an agricultural State, I contend that there are no perceptible benefits arising from legislative enactments, such as the gentleman refers to. And when I say that we have attained to the conditions which we have in spite of the Republican party and Republican legislation, I have reference to the fact that the principal Republican newspapers in that State, the mouthpieces of that party, have continually for the last twenty-five or thirty years maligned the State, the people, and everybody connected with it. [Applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Missouri sits down I want to make just one observation.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman may proceed for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no objection to everything the gentleman claims for Missouri, but what I want to do is to enter my protest against the limited time that the gentleman from Missouri gave to the gentleman from Connecticut in Kansas in taking him across this country upon that magnificent trip. While taking him through Missouri he took time to show him the beauties there, and I have no objection to that; but when he took him to the Kansas line and put him on the back of a jack rabbit or upon the crest of a cyclone and hurried him into Colorado, I protest. [Laughter.] Why, if the gentleman from Connecticut had been permitted to observe the splendid things we have in Kansas, he would have been so enamored of it all that he would have given up his home in Connecticut and remained in Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the only reason I didn't make any longer stop in Kansas was that it is so like Connecticut politically that I thought it wouldn't be anything new to the gentleman from Connecticut. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, in discussing the political conditions that prevail in Cincinnati, I made some remarks to the effect that in that city, governed by George B. Cox, that impeccable gentleman who has been so highly extolled three times upon this floor during the last few weeks, that in that city and under his administration—because he is the real mayor despite all the laudation on this floor of Mr. Fleischmann—that there were sixty-four men registered from one room in which sixty-four men could not stand erect.

It appears that I have overstated the case, and as I have no desire to place the matter in any other light than is warranted by the facts, because we are always told when these charges are made that it is an attack upon the fair fame of Cincinnati. You never must say anything about corruption; you never must say anything about wrong; you never must say anything about misgovernment; you must not discuss the question of illegal or fraudulent registration, because if you do the fair fame of that city has been attacked.

It appears from the statement that I hold in my hand that so far from sixty-four men being registered from 13 Gano alley, as I then said, there were forty-five men registered on the first registration day in last October. Investigation reveals the fact that 13 Gano alley consists of two rooms, one 14 feet square and the other somewhat smaller. The only pieces of furniture in these two rooms were two chairs without any backs and an old cannon stove. So that even under the correction of the statement made here it is probable it was true when I said it was not possible for sixty-four men to stand erect in that room.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up the time of the House. It is of no interest, I am sure, to my Republican friends, for they will ignore it; but I shall insert as a part of my remarks a letter from Mr. Benton S. Oppenheimer, of that city, a statement by him about the illegal registering in Cincinnati and the great difficulty that has been placed in the way of the men who attempted to purge the registration lists by the boards of election in Cincinnati, composed of Republicans and so-called Democrats:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, January 25, 1906.

HON. ROBERT BAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BAKER: At the request of Mr. Daniel Kiefer, of this city, I beg leave to submit to you, in as brief a form as possible, a few of the more flagrant instances of illegal registration which were discovered through our investigations prior and subsequent to the elections of April and November, 1903. Our investigations were confined chiefly to the so-called "cheap lodging houses," and became more difficult and ineffective as we became better known and our objects were revealed.

From the Silver Moon Lodging House, in precinct E of the Eighth Ward, "Soup House" Mullen's ward, 320 men registered last spring. This place contains sleeping room for, possibly, 80 men, and a careful inquiry of experienced detectives did not at any time reveal more than 130 of the men registered. On the first registration day last November about 160 more registered from this place, but in as much as it was discovered that we were keeping close watch upon it, comparatively few registered thereafter.

From Payne's restaurant, a one-story building about 20 by 40 feet, containing only an eating room, kitchen, and a lean-to room, in which the proprietor and his family slept, situated at the corner of Sixth and Culvert streets, 82 registered. Only one of these men, Payne himself, actually lived there. On the day before the election I passed there and saw three men standing in front of the place. Two had train checks in their hats and one had a Covington paper in his pocket, an indication of the fact that the process of colonization had begun.

From 233 West Fifth street (the National Lodging House) 34 men registered. Only 5 names thus given appeared in the city directory, 29 were unknown at that place, and one name in which a ballot was cast was that of a man who had died six months before.

From 27 Longworth street (the Workingman's Hotel) 78 men registered. Only 12 of these names appeared in the city directory; 14 were unknown at the place.

From 612 Lodge alley 23 registered, of whom 6 were not found, and from 611 Lodge alley (a loft over a livery stable, in which a few cots were arranged) 13 registered, of whom 3 were not found.

From 23 East Sixth street 11 registered, of whom 9 were unknown, and from 30 West Sixth street 13 registered, of whom 9 were unknown.

From 326 West Sixth street (the Enterprise Hotel) 53 registered. Only 15 names appeared in the city directory and 16 were unknown at the address given.

From the Grand saloon, located on Longworth street—otherwise known as Opera place—9 men registered. The only one of these who actually resided there was the proprietor, who occupied a room on the top floor. There was absolutely no other sleeping apartment of any description in the building, and the other names given were those of men who merely frequented the place.

From 13 Gano alley 45 men registered on the first registration day last October. Investigation revealed the fact that 13 Gano alley consists of 2 rooms, one about 14 feet square, the other somewhat smaller. The only pieces of furniture in this place were 2 chairs without backs and an old cannon stove. I myself saw several men register from this place and receive money for such registration from the recognized Republican leader of that ward, who is also a member of council. The established price for each registration is 25 cents and for each vote is $1.

Upon the strength of the above information a petition was prepared by several representative citizens of our community and presented to the board of elections, asking for an investigation of the conditions stated and for the issuance of warrants for the arrest of all malefactors. In most instances we gave the names of those men in each place who were reported unknown at the addresses given. The board of elections turned this list over to the local police department for investigation. The police took the original registration lists, copied therefrom the names which we had not stated in our petition, and made inquiries as to them only. Of course we had been ready to admit the correctness of these names, and it was, therefore, no surprise when the police reported that our complaint was entirely without foundation. This was too raw even for the board of elections, and further investigation was demanded. Eventually the police reported several cases of illegal registration, but no warrants were issued.

Last April we secured warrants for the arrest of two men, Andrew Hunt and William Tindall, on the charge of fictitious registration. One of these men had been released from the workhouse with a batch of thirty prisoners on the morning of the last registration day for the express purpose of registering, and, faithful to his pledge, he registered twenty-six times. His companion was also a well-known workhouse character, who had registered more than once on that day. Six times, at the request of the defense, these cases were continued in the local police court in an effort to tire out the prosecuting witnesses, but inasmuch as they were not to be tired out the men were ultimately bound over to the grand jury. They were indicted, entered a plea of guilty, and were sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, the minimum punishment fixed by statute for fictitious registration.

Immediately before the election of last November we caused the arrest of one William Smith Gates for illegal registration. He registered from 336 George street, a restaurant conducted by his father. The father stated that his son did not live at that number, had never lived there, and only occasionally made his appearance to procure a meal. Young Gates himself admitted that he did not live at the address given, but stated that he did live in a house at 308 Longworth street. Inquiry at that number showed that although Gates was known there he had never made it his home.

Four witnesses were subpœnaed for the State. Two did not appear on the date set for hearing, and the prosecuting witness asked for a continuance in order to secure the attendance of his witnesses. Now, in the Hunt and Tindall cases the defense asked for and received six continuances, yet Judge Lueders, of the Cincinnati police court, refused to grant to the State even one continuance in the Gates case. After hearing the above testimony Judge Lueders decided that no case was presented and ordered the immediate dismissal of the defendant, and a warrant was immediately issued for the arrest of our prosecuting witness on the charge of perjury.

In such manner as this has our board of elections at various times enforced the law and our police department assisted us in the prosecution of illegal voters. As I have suggested before, this list does not purport to be exhaustive. Many instances just as flagrant might be cited, but the above will certainly indicate the extent of the election frauds in our city. I beg leave to thank you sincerely for your efforts to bring these conditions to the attention of the public, for it is only by the creation of a wholesale sentiment that we can hope at present to ameliorate them.

Very respectfully, yours, BENTON S. OPPENHEIMER.

I also insert two speeches delivered by the gentleman from Cincinnati [Mr. GOEBEL], one on the 12th of October, 1897, and the other on May 29, 1899, in which in as scathing language as any man could use he denounced George B. Cox, then, as now, the boss of the Republican city of Cincinnati.

[From the Citizens' Bulletin, January 23, 1904.]

CONGRESSMAN HERMAN P. GOEBEL—HIS EVOLUTION TO COXISM.

CHAPTER I.—His address before the independent Republican mass meeting, October 12, 1897.

[Enquirer, October 13, 1897, p. 5.]

We meet to-day in convention as Republicans to devise ways and means for the coming election to rid this city and county of a corrupt combination, one that has long feasted on our body politic under the disguise of nonpartisans and Democrats.

AS CITIZENS, NOT AS PARTY MEN.

In denouncing this corrupt combination I violate no duty or fealty to my party, and you and I can render it no greater service than to expose, denounce, and destroy this octopus.

We believe in the principles and doctrines of the Republican party, and we shall permit no man to question our loyalty to that party.

We also meet as citizens of a great city and county, interested in its welfare and prosperity. In our action to-day there shall be no politics. Good government can only exist when you have honest men to administer its laws. In this city and county this corrupt combination had for its sole motive and object public plunder.

It has destroyed the value of our property and driven business from the city by excessive taxation. It has burdened the homes of the poor with oppressive assessments in the interest of granite, asphalt, and brick combinations, of which it is a member. The officials of that combination have stolen the public funds. Blackmail of individuals and corporations has been levied to increase its wealth. This wealth has been vulgarly displayed in the faces of the people from whom it was stolen, and the power which this combination gained has been used to debauch and degrade the public service.

Public employees are the slaves of the boss. By the abuse of legislation enormous jobs have been authorized and valuable franchises to local corporations have been bestowed without adequate return to the public.

This is the condition that confronts us to-day. What is our duty? There is but one course open to us, namely, to expose and see that every guilty official is punished, to elect honest men to office, and to protect the good name and fame of our city.

In that way, and in that way only, you will give a better tone to the public service.

THE COMMITTEE OF TWELVE.

I am not here to decry the appointment of the committee of twelve.

It is apparent, at least to the machine, that such a committee is essential. I believe there are men on that committee honest and sincere in the objects and purposes for which they believed they were appointed.

If this committee of twelve, in whose favor the king has abdicated and now supposed to have full control of the party machine and its complete organization, will join us in the continuance of investigations of official corruption, and to expose the methods of the boss, assist in placing honest men in office and dishonest men in the penitentiary, I shall heartily cooperate with that committee, but, with all respect to some of that committee, I believe the king is still on his throne.

It is not natural to suppose that this corrupt combination will place in the hands of this committee the evidence for its destruction; that it will consent to further investigations; that it will release its hold on public offices, to the end that every member may serve a term in prison or be driven from the city. Let me say to you that it will not quickly submit to destruction. Therefore there must be no affiliation or submission on our part to this combination. It must be absolutely and completely destroyed.

A submission at this time means a suspension of all our efforts at local reform and a continuation of the power of this corrupt combination.

In our action of to-day let not party questions nor the election of a United States Senator divert our attention and lead us from the object and purpose for which we have assembled.

There certainly can be no party questions involved in seeking to destroy a corrupt combination and to elect honest men to office. I have never heard that there was politics in stealing, and I fail to read in the platform of our party or in its history that corruption is a part of its creed.

My observation has been that this corrupt combination in carrying on this warfare against the public has been strictly nonpartisan, and it will certainly permit us to say there is no politics in this movement.

If the election of Senator HANNA is essential to the success of my party, I am in favor of his election.

If his election is essential to the success and continuation of this corrupt combination, then I am opposed to his election.

Let us stand to-day to fight and destroy that public enemy that has so long controlled the destiny of our good city.

[Enquirer, May 30, 1899.]

It was 8.20 when HERMAN GOEBEL called the meeting at Pike's Opera House last night to order. At that time every chair downstairs was occupied and half the chairs in the balcony were taken. Hundreds were standing in the rear of the seats on the first floor. As Judge GOEBEL proceeded he was frequently applauded, now and then with much vociferousness.

"I assume," said Judge GOEBEL, "that it is lawful for Republicans to meet in an orderly manner and express their views on the party management. You have heard the words of the boss concerning members of the Republican party who dare to express their honest views. I say that it is an insult to every honest Republican who has this courage to be characterized by the boss as a loafer, a meddler, and a rag chewer. The call for this meeting was signed by 15,000 of the representative Republicans of this city, and when they signed that petition they meant it as a rebuke to this boss who designates independent Republicans as 'meddlers, loafers, and rag chewers.' I congratulate the Republican party on the fact that there are in Hamilton County this number of Republicans who dare to be in opposition to bossism."

[From Cincinnati Post.]

CHAPTER III.—Interesting history.

The Eshelby fusion ticket was elected in the fall of 1897, including a county commissioner, and later matters assumed such shape at the court-house that this commissioner had to be secured by Cox in order to save the many court-house employees. Cox ascertained that this commissioner was under obligations to HERMAN P. GOEBEL—in fact, it was stated to Cox that GOEBEL "owned him." Overtures were at once made to GOEBEL, who, up to that time, had only a passing interest in the Cox organization. GOEBEL had long cherished a desire for a seat in Congress, but never could get Cox's support. The deal was made that GOEBEL was to swing this commissioner to the support of the Republicans then in the court-house, who were all Cox men. GOEBEL "delivered the goods," and the Cox men kept their places. In return Cox was to nominate GOEBEL for Congress. He did so, but not for three years, as other influences kept J. H. Bromwell there. But Bromwell was finally retired in favor of GOEBEL.

[From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.]

CHAPTER IV.—His address in the House of Representatives, January 11, 1904.

The other day, in the absence of my colleague, Mr. LONGWORTH, as well as myself, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] indulged in certain remarks relative to the city of Cincinnati. In his remarks, so utterly foreign to the matters under consideration at the time, he by inferences and innuendoes criticised the municipal administration of that city and some of its citizens.

I should have paid no attention to the remarks of the gentleman from New York if he had not made, in connection therewith, an attack upon our city and some of its citizens.

I want to say to him that Cincinnati to-day is one of the best-governed cities of the United States. At its head we have an honest, fearless, capable Republican mayor, reelected last spring by 15,000 majority, defeating the strongest man the Democratic party ever nominated, M. E. Ingalls.

We have bipartisan boards; upon them are men of the highest integrity and character, who control the election, police, and fire departments. All the elective offices are filled by Republicans. To-day Cincinnati is governed by the Republicans, whose administration has been approved and indorsed by increased majorities at every election. At the head of this organization stands Mr. George B. Cox, whom the gentleman from New York has seen fit to attack. He needs no defense at my hands. His acts and deeds are of a public character; they stand out in bold relief. It is sufficient for me to say that the party trusts him and that he has time and time again led it to victory. [Applause.]

GEORGE B. COX, PROPRIETOR OF CINCINNATI.

I also wish to incorporate in my remarks part of an article which appeared in Frank Leslie's Monthly, written by a gentleman, Gustav J. Karger, who is well known here as a correspondent of one of the Cincinnati papers, in which he describes in very lucid language the power of this private gentleman, George B. Cox, who rules the city of Cincinnati. For illustration: He asked him a question on one occasion as to what reason he ascribed his success. He replied: "I use my own judgment as to the class of candidates most acceptable to the people."

George B. Cox thus asserts that he determines who shall be candidates upon the Republican ticket in the city of Cincinnati.

An Ohio Republican convention is held, and among the candidates for attorney-general placed in the field was Harry M. Daugherty.

"Mr. Cox," I asked, "how many votes are you going to give Daugherty?"

"Not any," he replied in his gruff but not unkindly voice.

I protested mildly. I told him that Daugherty and I were friends; that I wanted him to have one vote at least.

George Kolker, now appraiser of customs in Cincinnati, another delegate, had overheard the conversation. "That's my fix exactly, George," he said.

Cox rearranged the figures on his pad.

"I'll give him eight votes," he decided a moment later.

Without consulting any of the members, without consulting any of the men who had seats in that convention from Cincinnati, he gave eight votes to Daugherty. This governor of the city of Cincinnati to these assembled gentlemen said, "I will give him eight votes."

Nor is this all. A gentleman, Mr. Bellamy Storer, was once a Member of this House. He desired to be renominated by the Republican party and Mr. Cox's statement as to this is also given. He was asked this question: "Why did you turn out Mr. Bellamy Storer?" "Bellamy Storer served two terms," says Mr. Cox. "After his first campaign he gave me no credit whatever for his nomination."

Then he gives some details unnecessary to repeat. He then says Mr. Storer came to him and explained, and he told Storer, "No matter what differences there are between you and me, it is the custom to give a Congressman a second term and I shall not depart from that custom."

Mr. George B. Cox continues:

When his second term was about to expire he came to Ohio to preside over the State convention. He called on me in Cincinnati on his way to Columbus. We talked over the question of his renomination. Conditions were peculiar, and I told him that I didn't think the party could afford to take any chances for fear of defections. We agreed, however, to talk the matter over further. He went to Columbus and presided over the convention. In the meantime some of his friends advised him to go East, that his nomination was a certainty, that he couldn't be defeated. He took that advice and did not again call on me, showing me again that he was willing to ignore me.

I then called on Charles P. Taft and asked him to accept the nomination. The next day he was nominated by acclamation instead of Mr. Storer.

Such is the power of George Barnesdale Cox, Cincinnati's uncrowned king!

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, it is with considerable trepidation and some misgivings that I arise at this time to submit a few remarks in answer to those of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] who has just taken his seat. I had not expected to inflict any of my political views upon this committee or the House of Representatives, and I have no prepared speech or carefully studied words with which to entertain or amuse the Members; but I can not find it in my heart to let pass the questions propounded by the learned gentleman from the State of Missouri without in my feeble way endeavoring as best I can to give him the answer of at least one Republican who speaks for himself alone, without assuming to commit the party to which he belongs or any other member thereof.

The gentleman closed his very able and carefully prepared remarks with what always touches a responsive chord in my heart, a eulogium on the flag of this Union, which, as he says, and says truly, "we all love, and which all other nations of the earth are bound to respect."

Yes, under the administration of the affairs of this country by the Republican party all sections of the country, North, South, East, and West are united in the ties of a common brotherhood, and are as one in love, loyalty, and respect for the glorious Stars and Stripes that to-day float over eighty millions of free and loyal and happy and prosperous people.

But this eulogium pronounced by the gentleman upon the flag does not, to my mind, harmonize exactly with the opening statements of his address this afternoon as to the record and history of the great Republican party, under which that flag has been raised to the majestic heights where it now floats in the breezes of the world, recognized among all the nations of the earth as the emblem of the greatest Republic ever born into the family of nations, and under which this nation has attained to the position it occupies as a leader among the great powers of the earth. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman inquires whether we are "proud of the record made by the Republican party." Why, my dear, deluded Democratic friends, who could help being proud of such a record? I want to answer him here and now, and to say for one at least, yes; we are proud of the record made by the Republican party, and we shall continue to be proud of it as long as life shall last, and our children and our children's children will continue to "point with pride" to that record so long as patriotism, loyalty, and brilliant achievements shall command the admiration of men. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman asks if we are proud of the record made by the Republican party in the sixties on the question of secession. Oh, my Democratic friends, is not that question settled yet? But if the gentleman really meant to ask that question and really wants an answer to it, I say, yes, we are proud of the record made by the Republican party upon that question and during those years. But for the record made by the Republican party in those years, and upon all the questions which those years brought, the history of our country's greatness and glory could never have been written. I do not think he seriously meant to ask that question, because I believe that the Democratic party of to-day is as proud of the fact that the life of this nation was preserved and that the doctrine of secession was forever throttled as any Republican upon this floor. The name of the immortal Lincoln, first Republican President of this nation, and of the other Republican leaders of those days is as sacred to-day among Democrats as among Republicans; and the record of the Republican party in those days is a common heritage, and I venture to say that even my friend from Missouri is proud of the record of the Republican party in those days. Indeed, why should he not be?

Again, the gentleman from Missouri asks if we are proud of the record made by the Republican party in 1896 and in 1900 upon the question of the gold standard and in opposition to the Chicago and Kansas City platforms, which declared in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 without the consent of any other nation. And again, for myself, I answer: Yes; we are proud of the record made by the Republican party upon that question and in those years. We are proud of the fact that by Republican votes, or at least by the votes of those who stood with the Republican party for financial honesty, the Democratic dogma of the free and unlimited coinage of silver has been, as was stated by the Democratic leader of the House the other day, "relegated to the rear." I fear the Democratic party, while Mr. Bryan lives, may have some trouble in keeping it to the rear; but you may trust the Republican party upon that as upon all other great national issues, and we shall take additional pride in seeing to it that it shall be kept at the rear.

Sane men of all parties now concede that the Republican party was right upon the issue forced upon the country in those years by the Democratic party, under the brilliant, erratic, and unsound leadership of Mr. Bryan. What does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] mean when he asks if we are proud of the record made in those years? Why should we not be proud when the policy of the Republican party in those years, crystallized into law, has given us, as even all Democrats must admit, such a period of real and lasting prosperity as neither this nor any other country ever before experienced in the history of the world? Yes, I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], we are proud of the record, and we wouldn't erase a page, a word, or a syllable of it.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any special significance in the fact that he omits to refer to that part of the speech of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] wherein he asks the Republican party if they were proud of their position on the question of bimetallism in 1892?

Mr. FULLER. There is no significance. I am proud of the record made by the Republican party from the time of its birth, in 1854, down to this time.

Mr. DINSMORE. Then the gentleman has no special comments to make on that year.

Mr. FULLER. I will make such comments as I desire to make. I will say that at that time the question of the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the divine ratio of 16 to 1 was not an issue. The Republican party was in favor at that time of the circulation of gold and silver upon the parity that up to that time had been maintained, but we recognized then, and we recognize more and more as the conditions of this country change, that the great Republican party that was carrying this country forward to the eminent degree of prosperity that it has attained must conform to conditions as they arise, and that is what we have done.

The Republican party never stands still; it is always advancing. It is preeminently the party of progress, and we have given to this nation a currency based upon the gold standard, where every dollar the laboring man receives for his toil is worth a dollar in gold; a currency that is good the world over and that makes business stable and does much to insure the stability and continuance of the prosperity that you upon that side have admitted and talked about during the past week.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield for a question, with pleasure.

Mr. DINSMORE. I shall be glad to hear the gentleman in this connection explain to the House what the Republican party meant in its platform of 1888 when it denounced Grover Cleveland and the Democratic party for trying to demonetize silver.

Mr. FULLER. I have but a few moments' time, Mr. Chairman, and I do not propose to be taken entirely away from the subject I was discussing. I simply wish to answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] in the statements he has made, when he finds fault with the record of the Republican party that has brought about the conditions of prosperity that exist throughout the length and breadth of this land, and of which he should be as proud as we to-day.

We are proud of the record of that party. We are proud of the record of the Republican party under the leadership of the great Republicans of the past, from Abraham Lincoln and Ulysses S. Grant down to Garfield and Blaine and McKinley and Roosevelt. We are proud of the record made under their leadership, and we are proud of the record of that party as it is being made to-day. And, my friends upon the other side, let me tell you this: You can never win the confidence of the people of this country by simply finding fault with everything that has been done by the Republican party, nor by saying that the country is prosperous in spite of the fact that the Republican party is in power, for "spite" never made any country prosperous. You admit the prosperity, and you only "deplore" the fact that it comes, as it always does come, when the Republican party is in control of the affairs of this Government.

My Democratic friends, you should take your prosperity with better grace and quit "deploring" so much. Is it not barely possible, from the circumstantial evidence at least, that Republican policies and Republican legislation do have something to do with the country's prosperity? Do you really and honestly think you could run this Government better than we do? Do you think you could increase the prosperity of the country, or even keep it up to its present standard? The trouble is you never did do it, and you have offered the people gold bricks and silver bricks so often that they have rather lost confidence in your promises. Your dire predictions of what would happen if the Republicans were successful in 1896 and in 1900 have not panned out just as you said, and is it any wonder that the people are loath to risk their prosperity that has come with Republican administration of affairs simply because you keep up your eternal and never-ending "condemning, deploring, and viewing with alarm?"

I want to tell my Democratic friends that it is no child's play to carry on this Government in such manner as to secure the prosperity and happiness and well-being of all the people. That is what the Republican party is trying to do, and we recognize the fact that it is a big job and requires the best energies and the best thought and the greatest wisdom to be found in the entire membership of the party. The Republican party has, in my judgment, conducted the affairs of this Government wisely and well. Its policies, enacted into law, have made the country great and rich and powerful. Agriculture has prospered, manufactures have prospered, the merchants and artisans of the country have prospered, and the laboring man has prospered beyond the fondest dreams of the laboring men of any other country in the world.

You ask if we are proud of the record of the Republican party? Yes; I thank God every day of my life—and so, my Democratic friends, ought you—that He committed the destinies of this nation into the hands of the Republican party. [Applause.] And yet, notwithstanding all this, you Democrats over there talk once in a while as though you really and honestly believed that you could run this Government better than we Republicans do. That, to my mind, is an absurd idea. Why, it is all we can do some of the time to run it properly and keep things straight. What in the world would you do? I am afraid if you had the chance to run it you would get another letter in the word "run" and it would spell "r-u-i-n," because in my day that is about what we have had whenever the Democratic party had its way and undertook to do things.

As long as the Democrats have nothing to do but to find fault with the Republicans, to kick and "deplore" and "view with alarm," the country can get along with them, and very likely, in the good providence of God, they thus serve some useful purpose; but the idea of surrendering the chair of a Lincoln, a Grant, a Garfield, a McKinley, or a Roosevelt to any Democrat of the present day—well, no, I think the people will prefer to be excused. Certainly we don't want and you don't want a free-silver Bryanite in the White House, and the people don't want and will never consent to put a free trader there.

And in my humble judgment the people of this country will never trust the Democratic party with the control of this Government again until they are able to give some guaranty of their good faith when they enter the claim that they can carry on the affairs of this Government better than the Republican party has done it. You admit all sections of the country are prosperous, but unwilling to give credit where credit is due. You say it is in spite of the fact that the Republican party is in control of the Government and responsible for such control. That is a sort of special pleading that does not seem to me to constitute an argument. You might as well say that the country is prosperous in spite of the fact that God reigns.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ever observed that the country was not able to show prosperity in spite of a Democratic Administration?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I have observed that in the great district which I represent, and which is one of the greatest agricultural and also one of the greatest manufacturing districts in the West—the great factories of that district, Mr. Chairman, during Democratic times, when Cleveland was President and the Democratic party controlled both branches of Congress, were closed or running at half time and with half force. Hundreds and thousands of men in that district were out of employment and could find no work to do; but when Mr. McKinley was elected in 1896, when the Republican party again came into power, when the odious Wilson bill was repealed and the Dingley bill became the law of this land, once more the doctrine of protection was declared as the doctrine under which this Government should be conducted, those factories opened up, the smoke started again from the chimneys that had been smokeless before, the people again went to work, and during the days since 1896 and since 1897, when Mr. McKinley was inaugurated as President, a period of prosperity started and has continued since in that district and in that State and throughout this country such as the world has never known before in the history of this or any other country.

My earliest recollections were of another Democratic period, when James Buchanan was President of the United States, but I have no recollection that in those days we had very much prosperity "in spite of a Democratic Administration." In fact, my recollection and my reading of history both tell me that during that period of free trade or low tariffs, when the doctrine of protection had been relegated to the rear, in "spite" of all that, prosperity was not in evidence to any considerable extent. Listen a moment to what so good a Democratic authority as James Buchanan himself had to say upon that subject. In his message to Congress, December 8, 1857, he used this language:

> The earth has yielded her fruits abundantly and has bountifully rewarded the toil of the husbandman. Our great staples have commanded high prices, and up till within a brief period our manufacturing, mineral, and mechanical occupations have largely partaken of the general prosperity. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions of agriculture and in all the elements of material wealth we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

Those were the good old Democratic times, and such were the conditions that existed in spite of such fact.

Comparing Republican times of to-day with any period of Democratic ascendency of which I have any knowledge, I say again, Yes, we are proud of the record of the Republican party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I said I spoke only for myself, but on second thought I think I can safely go further and speak for some others as well. The Republicans of my district are this day and this hour assembled in convention at Ottawa, Ill. I think I may safely say that they will make it plain that they, too, are proud of the record of the Republican party. I am sure they will not "deplore" nor "condemn" nor "regret" nor "view with alarm." I am also just as sure that they will "approve," "indorse," and "commend" the Administration of President Roosevelt, and will elect two delegates to the Republican national convention who will need no instructions, but who, nevertheless, will be instructed to vote for the nomination of the present occupant of the White House as the Republican candidate for President in this year of grace 1904. Indeed, I should not be at all surprised if the Republicans there assembled were to even go so far as to "point with pride" to the entire record of the Republican party for nearly half a century.

My friends, you all know what our platform will be. The record of the Republican party is its platform all the time, and the only platform it needs. To be sure, the party never stands still, but always progresses. Each time it adds something, because its old promises have been fulfilled; it has done the things it promised to do, and if it continues to be the progressive party of the country it must find new things to do for the benefit of the American people. The Democratic party is the party of the past. For inspiration it must go back to the days of Jefferson and Jackson. The Republican party is the party of the present and the future. It is the party which does things. This time it is going to dig the Panama Canal, and the people know that when the Republican party says it is going to dig the canal the canal will be dug.

Now, what issues will the Democratic party present? No man knows. What will it advocate? No man knows. What will be its platform? No man knows. What would it do if in an evil moment the people of this country intrusted it again with control of the Government? God does not know. But I do not believe the people of this country are in the mood to take any such desperate chances as to intrust the Democratic party with control of the Government. They like prosperity too well, and they well know that this prosperity came with the advent of the Republican party to power. It came with the passage of the Dingley bill and it came as the handmaiden of the doctrine of protection.

That prosperity is admitted by our Democratic friends, and all they can do is to say that it is in spite of the fact that the Republican party is in power rather than in consequence of Republican policies. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is very largely in consequence of and due to Republican policies that have been carried out in the law of this land. And I tell you, Mr. Chairman, the day is far distant when the people of this country will again consent to an era of free trade or "tariff for revenue only."

I say for one that we are proud of this doctrine of protection; we adhere to it, not in the interest of manufacturers alone, but of all classes as well; not in the interest of the East alone, but in the interest of the West and of the South as well—in the interest of all our people and of all parts and all sections of this country, and more especially in the interest of the laboring man, who, under that policy of protection, finds work at remunerative wages, at such wages as are not known in any other country under the shining sun.

I believe in a policy that will not only give to the laboring man work, but will give him good wages and enable him to educate his family, to own his home, and to stand as an equal among American citizens.

Mr. BENNY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FULLER. Yes, sir; if I have time.

Mr. BENNY. I would like to know what the gentleman means by a "remunerative wage."

Mr. FULLER. I mean such a wage as will make the laboring man a man who can stand up with the rest of us and believe in his own equality. I believe in such a wage as will permit the laboring man, as it does in my district, to educate his children, to own his own little home, and to live as an American citizen should live. Under the Democratic doctrine of free trade that was not the case in this country. It is the case to-day; and in answer to the gentleman from Missouri I say we are proud of the record made by the Republican party, and we propose to continue that record and that policy in the future.

Mr. VAN DUZER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FULLER. I will.

Mr. VAN DUZER. You speak of the high wages of the workingman under the tariff. Is it not a fact that the high wages, if you speak of them as "high wages," are due more to the organization of labor into unions than any direct benefit of the tariff?

Mr. FULLER. I believe the high rate of wages of the laboringman in this country is due to the fact that under protective tariff laws the factories of this country are enabled to run and to give employment to all men who desire employment. I believe that when you have a policy of free trade or a revenue tariff only and the factories are compelled to close and the laboring man is without work that then in the surplus of labor you can hire men at anything that will permit them to live. Labor unions never increased wages when there was no work to be had.

Mr. VAN DUZER. Then, why is it that under the high-tariff system existing at the present time the wages of the men in the silk mills and in the steel factories are being reduced? Why is it that throughout New England, where you have protection as the policy of the Republican party, wages to-day are on a decline, and the workingman is receiving less than he did two or three or four years ago?

Mr. FULLER. Oh, I can answer that without any trouble whatever. The price of wheat is not always the same; sometimes it goes up and sometimes it goes down. The law of supply and demand to a great extent governs these things. Wages may be high to-day, and next year or next month they may be lower. They are higher now than they ever were in Democratic times. Wages will not always be on the same high plane that they were last year or the year before. But wages are to-day higher upon the average, very much higher, than in any other country in this world to-day, and that I believe is due to the fact that the Republican party is in power, that a Republican tariff law is upon the statute books of the United States, and that the doctrine of protection prevails. Certain it is that the present scale of wages was unknown in this country even during any Democratic Administration.

Mr. VAN DUZER. I do not want to cut into the gentleman's time. If I am taking too much of his time, I will refrain from the questions which I wished to ask, or I shall be glad to see his time extended.

Mr. FULLER. I suggest to the gentleman that he can make his speech after I get through.

Mr. HITT. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] has already consumed his time.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. VAN DUZER] can go on after I finish, as I am reminded that my time has already expired.

Mr. HITT (to Mr. VAN DUZER). The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] will always give you time.

Mr. FULLER. I will not yield any further, but will bring my remarks to a close.

One thing that I wish to say to my Democratic friends over there before I sit down is this: You can never in this country make any capital by taking the side of a foreign country against your own.

I have discovered that you find fault every time anything is done by the Republican party or by the Administration in matters between foreign governments and this Government. I am an American as you are Americans. I believe in my own country. I am with and for my own country as against all the world. I was about to say that I am for my country right or wrong, but that is not quite what I mean. What I do mean is this: I want my country to be right all the time; I generally think it is right, and then I give it my cheerful and earnest support. But if I should get an idea once in a while, as some seem to think all the time, that my own country, in some controversy with a foreign country like Spain or Great Britain or Colombia, is wrong—so very wrong that I can not support its policy—then I will at least give my own country the benefit of the doubt, and consider that it is just possible that I may be deceived or take the wrong view myself, and those in authority may be right and I may possibly be wrong, and if I can't take the side of my own country, I will at least not take sides against it, and will not give aid or comfort to the enemies of my country.

For myself I believe the policy of this Government in the Panama matter was right. I believe President Roosevelt was right in recognizing the independence of Panama, and I think even my Democratic friends over there would have "deplored" if he had followed any other course. My doctrine is: Stand by the Administration; stand by your own country against the world. Yes, my friend from Missouri, we are proud of the record. It is a record that will shine with added luster as the years go by. For ages it will illuminate the pages of the world's history.

Like you, sir, I close these few rambling remarks with a reference to the flag you say you love. I believe you when you say you love that flag, but remember the flag floats higher to-day than it did before the great McKinley was elected in 1896. It is more respected by the nations of the earth than it was before that time; it is better known, better loved, more respected than it ever was before, because of the fact that the Republican party has been and is in control of the affairs of this Government.

I, like the gentleman from Missouri, love that flag; I believe it is the most beautiful flag that floats, and it stands for more than any other flag of any other nation upon earth. It is the emblem of this great, free land that is to-day the greatest agricultural nation on the face of the earth, the greatest manufacturing nation, and the nation that leads in civilization and progress all the other nations of the earth.

Mr. Chairman—

> There are many flags in many lands,
> There are flags of every hue;
> But there is no flag, however grand,
> Like our own red, white, and blue.

And I am for that flag and for my country forever against the world. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHOBER].

Mr. SHOBER. Mr. Chairman, my excuse for being on my feet at this time is to be found in a statement, made to me a few days ago by gentlemen who are in a position to know, that unless I did have something to say about this time that excellent volume of statistics and compendium of oratory published by this House, known as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, would not be complete. Of course, rather than see the RECORD injured by my failure to contribute, I am here for the purpose of making a few remarks to the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. [Applause.]

Last week we had under consideration a bill which some of us perhaps may remember with sorrow when we recall the untimely fate that overtook the paragraphs referring to mileage, and the hope that some may have entertained that the Chamber at the other end of this Capitol might perhaps revive it again and blow the breath of life into this dead corpse seems to have been dispelled. There is to be no mileage after all, so that we must over those few paragraphs drop the sympathetic tear and whisper the sympathetic words "hic jacet."

But I want to say here that in my opinion the defeat of those paragraphs was brought about very largely, if not altogether, by the excellent speech of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who went "one step further" and laid it down as an "irrefutable, indisputable, and not to be denied fact that when we come to Congress we are here until we go home." [Applause and laughter.]

During the general debate on that bill known as the "urgent deficiency bill," sometimes called the "emergency appropriation bill," many excellent speeches were made on both sides of the House.

From the speeches made on the other side of the Chamber I observe, first, that the Republican party seems to be in urgent case. The Republicans seem to be in an emergency. I gather this from the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BEDE] most cordially and in a very pleasant way—doing his best to disguise the urgent case of his party—invited us to disband and come over there and make it a unanimous Presidential campaign this fall.

I should like to remark to the gentleman from Minnesota that we on this side of the Chamber do not find it quite so easy to forsake the faith of our fathers and to surrender our inborn convictions as he seems to have done. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I also wish to add this, that it is a dangerous thing he has undertaken, because it is quite likely that if the Democratic party should conclude to accept his invitation and go over there, we might absorb the Republican party, aye, swallow it whole, hook, line, and sinker, and, sitting down on that side of the Chamber, legislate for the welfare of this country, for the good of our fellow-men—the greatest good for the greatest number—quite as easily on that side of the Chamber as on this.

He also made a remark during the course of his speech in which he said that he had heard that in New York City, a part of which I have the honor to represent, Democratic Congressmen were sometimes appointed. Well, I have heard that sometimes Republican Congressmen were elected for life, and there are instances on this floor—honored instances, I am glad to say—of that fact; but surely it is not any more astonishing that a good Democrat should be chosen without any great contest in a Democratic stronghold than that a good Republican should be chosen without any great contest in a Republican stronghold. And if New York City is Democratic, and it is the stronghold of Democracy in these great United States, it is not so astonishing that there should be only one lone Republican—an excellent friend of mine, by the way—to sit on that side of the Chamber from the city of New York.

There is another reason why it seems to me that the party represented by the gentleman over there finds itself in an urgent case—because they are at such pains to rush to the defense of the Chief Executive of this nation, an accidental Executive, by the way. Let but the least breath of criticism be blown in his direction and they are up in arms in the endeavor to protect him from the least assault. Now, he is either a good Executive or he is not. His administration of affairs must be satisfactory or it is not. If the former, neither he nor his Administration needs any defense, and the gentlemen are but wasting their time.

But I suspect that the present Administration of the nation's affairs is not altogether satisfactory to the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber. Certain it is that they are trembling at what may be the popular verdict and seek to avert impending disaster by the use of subtle argument and matchless eloquence in bolstering up a losing cause.

As has been well said, the present occupant of the White House is a man whom "everybody is for and whom nobody wants." Some of them will cry, "Hurrah for Roosevelt!" with the reservation on the side that "Mr. HANNA is a very strong man." Some of them will yell, "Hurrah for Roosevelt!" and assert as a positive fact that in the Presidential contest he can beat Tom Johnson. Their evident anxiety over the proposition and the fact that the campaign must be led, as it has to be, by the accidental occupant of the White House, shows that they are nervous, extremely nervous, so far as the outcome of this campaign is concerned.

Another evidence of the great trepidation of our friends is found in their frantic cries of "Prosperity!" They are everlastingly asserting and proving that the country is prosperous. They have filled the RECORD with figures and facts showing that the balance of trade with foreign countries is in our favor and that we are enjoying unprecedented good fortune. We know it. The fact is self-evident. The country is prosperous. But I assert, and it has been proven here by more eloquent lips than mine, that our prosperity is, after all, a one-sided prosperity; that while some few have been taking unto themselves riches in fabulous amounts the many have but added to their poverty or are still in the same old rut, scarcely rising above the conditions that prevailed ten, twelve, or fifteen years ago.

It has been proven here beyond dispute that while the wages of this country increased 12 per cent, the cost of living for those who earn the wages has been increased three times that amount, or in the neighborhood of 39 per cent. Therefore it is a manifest fact that the prosperity is not so certain, is not so widespread, and is not so perfect as idealists would like to have it or as gentlemen on that side of the Chamber would like to have it, if all the truth were admitted.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] was at great pains to read to the Members on this side of the Chamber extracts from papers published in the Southern States and in Missouri, showing the marvelous prosperity of that blessed land in the South, as if gentlemen on this side of the Chamber did not read the papers published in their own districts, and as if it was not a conceded fact that the South is prosperous and needs not the hysterical efforts on the part of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to acquaint us with it.

But I say again that, prosperous though we be, North, South, East, and West, it is a one-sided prosperity.

Through the operation of certain iniquitous laws this great shower of gold has been heaped up in the laps of the favored few while the many go hungry. The coffers of the favored rich are filled to overflowing while the cupboards of the many are bare. Is it not true? With all this wealth flowing in upon us, has the little fellow in trade received any of it? Is the little storekeeper at the country crossroads, or even up in Harlem, in the city of New York, any better off than he was ten years ago? I tell you he has all he can do to pay his ever-increasing rent and make both ends meet.

Is the artisan and the mechanic in better circumstances to-day than he was before the tide of trade turned in our favor and the yellow, golden stream of wealth began to flow? Go ask him and learn, ye who prate so much about our wondrous prosperity.

Suppose our per capita wealth is greater than ever before. Does that prove anything, if all the wealth is controlled by a mere handful of men? What does per capita wealth amount to, anyhow? I read yesterday that the per capita wealth of the Osage Indians is $10,000—think of it! $10,000 for each brave, squaw, and papoose in the whole tribe. But it does not follow that we would like to change places with them.

No, gentlemen, our prosperity is not quite the kind of prosperity that means sound, vigorous health for the body politic. I believe you would like to make it so, and the efforts you have made on the floor of this House to make it appear so is proof positive that you are in sore straits on the eve of a Presidential campaign.

As a matter of fact, I don't think you know exactly what to do, so you "stand pat" and do nothing. Some of you talk loud at times about the grasping power of the trusts and their greed; but you do nothing.

A representative of your party has introduced in the other Chamber of this Congress a bill which most of you will support, that not only clips the claws of any law that might curb or regulate the trusts, but absolutely paralyzes its arm and disarms it of all power, making it practically a dead issue. Some of you came forward with the assertion that the Foraker bill was an Administration measure, and just as many hastened to say, "God forbid!"

You see you really "don't know where you are at."

Most of you are perpetually and continually raising the dust of dead and gone issues in the frantic effort to befog the minds of the people on the present situation of affairs. You not only try to do this, but you actually want to write the platform for our party and even nominate, if you can, our candidate. But, much as we love you, we will not let you do it.

There is only one thing left for you to do. Just so soon as the conventions have met you will do as they have done before. You will raise the cry of "Wolf! Wolf!" as you did in 1896 and 1900, and expect the same thing to happen. But I warn you that your fate will be like that of the boy in the fable. On one or two occasions he brought the workmen from their labor in the fields to protect him. The cry of "Wolf!" succeeded twice, but on the third occasion they did not come, and the wolf devoured him. And as I say to you, I prophesy that you gentlemen on that side of the Chamber are all ready to do the same thing over again as was done in 1896 and 1900, and by intimidation and false statements and threats endeavor to secure the laboring vote of this country. And I prophesy that the labor vote will not heed your cry, and the Democratic party will devour you.

The next thing I observed from the speeches made on that side of the Chamber on the emergency appropriation bill was that the Republicans propose to appropriate things. They have appropriated all the patriotism, all the virtue, all the honor which has ever existed in this country.

Was it the preservation of the Union? The Republican party saved it, and the Republican party alone. There were no Democrats, forsooth, under the Stars and Stripes at Fredericksburg, at Shiloh, in the Wilderness, or on the march to the sea.

And so strong is this appropriating habit that a few months ago the Republican President, in an address at Antietam, forgot to mention the hero of that battlefield because he was a Democrat. It was like playing Hamlet with Hamlet left out.

And by the same token there were none but Republicans at the battle of San Juan Hill, where Spaniards were shot in the back while running away, or in the naval fight off Santiago de Cuba. And this is fully borne out by Republican action after the war with Spain.

So that according to this theory everything belongs to the Republican party. They have appropriated all things in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth; and in their frantic endeavor to be sure not to leave anything out they have gone further and have appropriated things heretofore unknown. They remind me of the old dominick hen I once heard of, that kept up such a cackling and a scratching that the good old lady told her boy to go out and see if he could not find some eggs and put them under that hen to keep her quiet. The boy went out to get the eggs, and as he could not get hen eggs enough he selected a few goose eggs and put them with the others until he had a tremendous nest of eggs. Then he brought the old hen and put her on the nest. She squirmed and spread her feathers and stretched her legs and did her best, but could not cover them. When the old lady came out she said: "Why, John, what do you mean by putting all them eggs under that there hen when you know she can't kiver 'em?" "Well," said John, "I knew that she couldn't, but I just wanted to see that old dominick spread herself." The Republican party has taken so much unto itself that it is in the position of that straining hen—spreading itself. It has about all the eggs there are in the barnyard under it.

And of all the eggs that are under the Republican hen some I doubt not are goose eggs. Let us see. If perchance the sun shines warm and bright and blessed showers fall and the corn crop in the corn belt is of enormous proportion they will stand back calmly and say: "That is ours; the Republican party did that." If in the wheat belt nutritious snows and favorable elements combine to make the crop of wheat prodigious they will still stand back and say: "The wheat crop is a portion of the assets of the Republican party."

Should the nations of the earth be at war with each other and the price of wheat and of corn and of mules and of hogs mount away up the scale, increasing our exports in these products enormously, the Republican party with unblushing effrontery will shout from the house tops, "Behold how good and joyful a thing it is, brethren, to dwell under the rule of the Republican party!"

And there is the boll weevil. I confess I don't exactly know what the boll weevil is. I don't know whether it crawls on its belly or flies in the air or stalks on four feet, wearing horns and emitting smoke and flame from its fiery nostrils. But whatever kind of "critter" it is, I am told it destroys the growing cotton.

Now, let this creature get in his fine work in the Southland, and the cotton crop is reduced hundreds of thousands of bales. What happens? Cotton goes up in price, obedient to the law of supply and demand. It reached as high as 16 cents, and may go higher. That means good times and rejoicings for the cotton planter, but the Republican party smiles serenely as the prices go up and prosperity sweeps over the South, and says, "You see what wise legislators we are; what a wonderful party is ours; be thankful and rejoice that you have us."

Or, again: If men of daring and bravery, through hardships incredible and unknown, shall pierce the extreme Northwest, carving their way through ice and snow, and almost with bare hands squeeze from the frozen earth and from the adamantine rocks the wealth that has come to this country within the last six or seven years, the Republican party says: "We told you we would increase the volume of money; we said that we would give you more metallic money, and we did it—we, the Republican party."

So it goes through the whole gamut; but if, however, there happens to be a storm somewhere and a flood breaks loose, causing great hardship and distress, I doubt not they would say, this is the work of Providence, or perhaps of the Democratic party. But I want to tell you that you must be logical about it all in order to have the people of this country really stand behind you and believe you. A southern gentleman of the old school had a servant by the name of Sambo. He was very fond of telling what he could do in the forest with his gun and on the stream with his rod. His fish stories were immense and his hunting stories most beautiful to hear, and to back them up he always called upon Sambo, who invariably said, "Yes, sah; dat's so."

On one occasion he was telling some friends how he shot a deer. The head of the deer was hanging over the door of his dining room. He said: "I shot that deer in a most peculiar way. He was just on the other side of a stream and began to run up the path away from me. I had a good trusty rifle and took careful aim and fired. Strange to narrate, the bullet caught him in the left hind foot and behind the left ear and he dropped in his tracks." "Why," said his friends, "impossible. How could a bullet shoot a deer in the foot and the ear at the same time?" "Ask Sambo here; he will tell you." Sambo said: "Well, gen'men, I tell you dat's a fact. Marster got a dead bead on dat 'ar deer and just then the deer stopped to scratch his ear with his foot, and so de bullet hit 'em both." When the friends were gone, Sambo turned to his master and said: "Look yere, boss, next time you wan' me to tell you any more deer stories fer God's sake get your pints a little closer togedder." [Laughter.]

The next time you Republicans are appropriating things be logical about it, get your points together, and do not leave out anything, because there are many things you have not yet appropriated, but which you must. You must have all that is coming to you, no more and no less.

For instance, I have not heard anybody over there appropriate the fact or boast of the fact that there is scandal in the Post-Office Department. Now, that belongs to you. You must take that also. It does not stand to reason that robbery, theft, extortion, wrongdoing, and all the rest of it can go on in the Post-Office Department or in any other Department without negligence at least, culpable negligence, on the part of those who are in charge of those matters. The chiefs themselves, of divisions, even to the chief of chiefs himself is responsible for the crimes of his subordinates in office. If a man is serving in a bank and should pilfer and steal, he is punished if they can get him. But the onus of blame falls upon those whose duty it was to see that theft and robbery was not possible; that careful investigation should be made in order to prevent it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHOBER. I would ask the gentleman from Arkansas if I can have just two or three minutes more?

Mr. DINSMORE. What is it the gentleman desires?

Mr. SHOBER. That I be given two or three minutes more.

Mr. DINSMORE. I could not give the gentleman more than two minutes.

Mr. SHOBER. Two minutes will suffice. Because in connection with this matter not only will the Post-Office scandals have to be shouldered by you, but the public-land frauds as well. Then the growing power of the trusts is yours to answer for, and all the troubles that arose out of the coal strike and the evils thereof, not to mention your failure to do anything in that regard in spite of the fact that a Member of this House had submitted proof positive of an illegal conspiracy and combine on the part of those who claimed that they were doing this by divine right and the authority of God himself.

You must stand for the wrongs and the failures of those whom you place in power, and I will close my remarks by calling the attention of the House to the last report of the Attorney-General. For the prosecution of the trusts and for their curbing, and for their punishment when found doing an illegal business, the sum of $500,000 was appropriated to pay the expenses of prosecution and placed at the disposal of the Attorney-General. What was done? I read from the report of the Attorney-General, as follows:

By the appropriation act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat., 854, 903), Congress appropriated the sum of $500,000 to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General in the employment of special counsel and agents in the Department of Justice to conduct proceedings and prosecutions under the various trust and interstate-commerce laws.

It has now become highly important that this appropriation should be made available for the enforcement of the laws of the United States generally, and especially those relating to public lands, postal crimes and offenses, and naturalization. In respect to these three matters a grave condition of affairs exists, as shown by recent investigations and developments.

Vast portions of the public lands have been dishonestly acquired through frauds, perjuries, and forgeries; and by similar means the laws relating to the proper administration of the Post-Office Department and other branches of the public service have been grossly violated. I have just referred to the crimes and frauds practiced in connection with the subject of naturalization.

In order that the penalties provided for violation of these laws may be promptly enforced and the Government furnished with competent legal assistance for the pending investigations and prosecutions, and those which will arise throughout the country, I earnestly recommend that the said appropriation be made available for use for the purposes indicated, to be expended under my direction.

He deliberately asks that this $500,000 appropriated for the purpose of prosecuting the trusts shall be made immediately available to do what? To enforce the laws of the United States generally and those relating to the public lands and the postal crimes and offenses against naturalization.

Oh, pitiful confession! Is it possible that the United States Attorney-General, with all the officials under him at his beck and call, is unable to run down a few thieves in the Post-Office and a brace or so of rascals who had to do with the public-land frauds without invoking the aid of Congress?

What is the Department of Justice for? Why is an enormous appropriation made every year for its support? Is it not to see that the laws are enforced, that offenders against the laws are punished, and that justice is meted out in full measure?

Is it possible that the Attorney-General can not do his duty and hale rascals to justice with all the vast machinery at his command without falling back upon an appropriation made for a specific purpose?

That purpose was the prosecution of the trusts. Did he do it? Did he proceed against the coal barons, or is he going to do so?

Proof, documentary proof, of an illegal combine and conspiracy between them was laid before the Attorney-General by a Member of this House, and let us see what he did with the $500,000 special appropriation given to him for the purpose.

In his table of expenditures we find the following:

Enforcement of antitrust laws, 1903 and 1904:
Appropriation warrant		$500,000.00
Payments during fiscal year		17,000.00
Balance July 1, 1903		483,000.00

That is all, and nothing more. Not a single solitary other reference to the trusts in a report covering several hundred pages. And the Attorney-General wants to use $483,000 of the people's money to run a few postal thieves and land grabbers to earth. It is a pitiful confession of weakness and incompetence.

And so, reverting to the cordial invitation of the gentleman from Minnesota, we Democrats, after reviewing the situation, must respectfully but firmly decline to go over there and help you Republicans hold up the pillars of your tottering temple.

Mr. DINSMORE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. VAN DUZER].

Mr. VAN DUZER. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] some questions relating to labor unions and high wages, and the colloquy was interrupted by objections. I now desire, in a brief statement, to reply to the gentleman from Illinois and to take up the discussion of the questions which I refer to.

I asked the gentleman in reference to the statement he made in regard to wages, if it was not a fact that high wages throughout the country was due to the efforts of organized labor and the organization of labor unions to resist a lowering wage scale. The gentleman answered that labor and wages, like other commodities, wheat, cotton, etc., were regulated by the law of supply and demand. If the gentleman concedes that wages are regulated by supply and demand, he at once must abandon his theory that the tariff keeps up wages. How can the gentleman contend that a high protective tariff regulates wages if wages are regulated by the law of supply and demand?

The labor question, to my mind, is one of the most serious problems confronting thoughtful men, and yet it receives little recognition in this House. A great deal is claimed for labor, but little accomplished for labor. We hear continually references as to what the Republican party has done for labor. My contention is that labor has done more for herself through her unions than the Republican party has ever accomplished for her.

Labor can not win any substantial advance under Republican Administrations, whose continual obligation is to support high protection and predatory wealth. Labor has more to fear from the colonial policy of the Republican party than from any other condition to-day. The American laboring man, around whom the Republican party insists the mantle of high protection has been thrown, is in danger to-day from this very question. What is to become of the laboring man when the Republican party opens up Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines to sugar, tobacco, and the manufacturing interests where cheap labor from China, Japan, and the Filipino may compete with American labor? The contract laws do not apply, nor do pauper laws nor immigration laws shut out cheap labor in our colonial possessions.

To-day the large trust interests are taking steps to import Chinese labor into Cuba and Porto Rico. To-day the Japanese, the little brown man, with all his strength, skill, and imitation, is competing with American labor because these possessions, given favorable tariff concessions from our Government, do not have laws restricting cheap labor, contract labor, or convict labor.

The contentions of the Republicans that high wages are synonymous with high protection can not be borne out by actual economic conditions, because wages are kept up by the intelligent cooperation of labor unions. If you should destroy organized labor and abolish labor unions the scale of wages would fall 50 per cent in six months. Labor has been able to oppose her intelligence to falling prices, and her righteous fight against long hours and low wages has resulted in eight-hour laws and higher wages.

Prosperity is the gift of God—the result of a generous nature, not of the Republican party. High wages and short hours are the result of two centuries of struggles of organized labor against organized greed. Labor asks only that which she is entitled to and she has kept up the wage scale by her own efforts.

Trusts are the creatures of Republican legislation. To-day the very classes who have received the most benefit from Republican legislation are the combinations striving most desperately to destroy organized labor.

To-day the manufacturers' associations are raising money, organizing a sentiment, and directing a crusade against labor unions because they realize that organized labor can successfully resist a depreciating wage scale and a lengthening labor day. If they can break down organized labor they know they can regulate the wage system, and no tariff on earth can keep wages up if once labor is at the mercy of predatory wealth. Labor is confronted with a fight for her life, and her only hope lies in maintaining the power and integrity of her unions.

Another question which the gentleman took occasion to talk about, and it is a favorite theme of the Republican party, is that we have good times during Republican Administrations and hard times and disaster when the Democratic party is in power. He spoke about the hard times of 1893. I want to call his attention to the fact that between 1888 and 1892 the Republican party had control of this Government, that there was on the statute books a Republican tariff law, and a Republican finance law in the early part of 1893, and at the time of the panic, early in 1893, which was one of the most serious panics we have had in the country, and concerning which the Republicans point with pride as the result of Democratic power, these laws were in force.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman to some facts of history. The Democratic party came into power as a result of the dissatisfaction, unrest, and hard times of the Harrison Administration. Harrison's Secretary of Treasury was already beginning to negotiate a bond issue when the party was swept from power. The conditions underlying the panic of 1893 were the result of the Harrison Administration. The Democratic party met a Republican panic. Panics leave scars upon prosperity. In 1896 McKinley was elected. The "full dinner pail" was the slogan. McKinley had not been in power six months when hard times and signs of a panic again became apparent.

The hard times of 1893 would have been repeated in 1897, succeeding the defeat of Bryan, if the extraordinary gold discoveries of the Klondike had not increased our money supply, and the Spanish-American war and the Boer war had not created a demand for our products. Eighteen hundred and ninety-six and 1897 were dark days on the Pacific coast, and the shadows of a panic were only dissipated by the discovery of gold in the Klondike, which poured her golden treasure into the commerce of the Pacific coast.

Then I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] why it is that he ascribes to the Democratic party the hard times of 1893, when it is a fact of history that the Republican party was in power four years just prior, and if hard times occurred during Democratic Administrations and good times during Republican Administrations, as the gentleman claims, how are the Republicans going to explain that fact? The gentleman also said that in 1896 we had good times in this country, the most prosperous we ever had; but the gentleman from Illinois has failed to designate in a single particular where any legislation enacted by the Republican party has ever contributed to good times in this country.

It is a notorious fact that after William McKinley took his seat for the first six months there were more failures, according to Dun and Bradstreet, than had occurred for years. It is another notorious fact that the Republican party was against a crisis in her history had it not been for the unforeseen developments which brought about the Spanish-American war.

The Spanish-American war and the great output of gold from the Klondike were the two conditions which contributed to prosperity in this country, and there was not a single legislative act upon the statute books of the country put there by the Republican party which contributed in any respect or degree to our prosperity.

Our quantitative theory of money was demonstrated to be correct because of the large supply of gold which came from Alaska and by the good times which spread abroad in this country as a result of more money being put into circulation by the Spanish-American war. And I want to say that it was the minority party in Congress that brought about and forced the Spanish-American war against the resisting policy of the Republican party at that time, which was averse to going into a war. [Applause.]

We hear a great deal from the floor of this House about high wages. We hear a great deal in this House about prosperity. But the gentleman from Illinois made the candid admission that high wages are due usually to the law of supply and demand. We have had within the past six months the closing down of the silk mills, the closing down of factories in New England.

We have had not only a wholesale reduction in the force of men employed at mills and factories in New England, but wages have been reduced and the cost of living increased.

Last summer there was a panic in New York. Wall street was stricken. The city of Pittsburg was on the verge of a panic. There was a financial tightening. Money was high, business at a standstill, and had it not been for a large wheat crop and high-priced cotton—had it not been for the American farmer—the panic of 1893 would have been a sumptuous banquet as compared to the distress of 1903. [Applause.]

It was the farmer and not the Republican party who saved the country last year. [Applause.] The argument so long indulged in of Republican prosperity and Democratic adversity is fast becoming a boomerang upon the Republican party.

I wish to make the statement at this time and right here that as far as high wages are concerned the tariff has had less influence upon wages than the efforts of organized labor. And in handling this great issue between labor and capital—between the man who struggles to accumulate enough to live upon and the man who accumulates to enjoy the sensuality of luxury—tact, wisdom, and patriotism must be called into the exercise of their highest power in order to adjust this problem in the interest of humanity.

I have listened to tariff discussions; I have listened to Panama word pictures; I have listened to partisanship run riot, but I have yet to hear a labor discussion upon the floor of this House. The two parties here are contending over tariff schedules, over fine questions of international law; and yet it is going to be the two million and a half labor votes of organized labor who shall name the next President of the United States. While statesmen and politicians are casting about for candidates and platforms let me suggest that the storm center of the fight next fall will be in Illinois, Indiana, and New Jersey, where there is a large labor vote, and in Montana, Utah, and Colorado, where recently military authority has been used to suppress the labor unions. The labor unions have been forced to go into politics, and the ranks of organized labor is daily growing, and the next President of the United States will be the man who champions the cause of a government by the people instead of a government by the privileged classes. [Applause.]

Maintain living wages, lower the cost of living daily increasing through Republican legislation, curb the trusts, build the Panama Canal, develop internal resources, give the Philippines to the Filipinos, and build up and protect a government whose purpose is to create an artisan instead of a soldier. [Applause.]

It is not tariff schedules we need, but more work, high wages, and reasonable hours. It is the shutting out of coolie labor, the passing of an eight-hour Government law, and the abolition of convict labor which need serious attention. The American workingman wants to rest secure in his home, and if in the exercise of his inalienable rights he should run counter to the domination of predatory wealth he does not want to be incarcerated like a petty thief, and hence the question of government by injunction is of vital importance to him.

You can never deceive organized labor by tariff schedules. She will never rest the hope of high wages on a trust tariff. Believing in the old adage that "God helps those who help themselves," the American workingman will go on organizing labor unions, placing his hope of high wages in his intelligent efforts in the labor union rather than in the specious promises of tariff statesmen who are feeding the giant trust, the greatest enemy organized labor ever had. Labor opposes her intelligence to falling prices, and wages are maintained, while other commodities, unable to resist, fluctuate at the will of commerce. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I have so recently expressed my views on the general question of our Canadian relations that I shall not take any additional time on this occasion, except to say this, that I wish the committee to understand that in my persistent—for it may seem so to you—advocacy of better trade relations I am not prompted by any local or personal considerations. It would undoubtedly be very desirable for the people of our State, the millers of my city, the laboring men, and the railroads to handle the crops of Canada to the north of us and to participate in the development and exploitation of that great country. But for those local reasons alone I would not advocate it for a moment unless I were firmly convinced that it is for the benefit of and vital to the future and permanent interests of the whole nation.

There are men on this floor, and I hope many of them, who will live to see 150,000,000 English-speaking people on the North American continent. Think of it! One hundred and fifty millions of people speaking the same language, reading the same literature upon this great North American continent! Bearing this possibility in mind, is it not a vital question, is it not a question that appeals to every patriotic American, that appeals to every economic consideration, that this great mass of homogeneous, ethnically and historically connected people shall cooperate and work together hand in hand in amity, brotherly rivalry, and American energy to develop this great continent for a greater America?

I want to say to you that I would infinitely rather see a greater America on this continent than a greater Britain in any portion of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the question involved. Are we to continue a policy of nagging and belittling a people relatively just as great and just as good as we are? It is poor policy; it is not the part of wisdom; and I want to say, my fellow-Members, it is not Republicanism in the State of Minnesota. And it is to demonstrate that fact that I rise on this occasion rather than to address myself to the great question at length. My colleague from our State [Mr. VOLSTEAD], who occupied your time on yesterday, commented very severely on the utterances of what he termed the leading Republican paper in our State, the St. Paul Dispatch.

He had the floor. The editorial writer of that paper did not have the floor; and I propose to give it to him for a few minutes. I have always endeavored to treat that paper, and especially its editor, justly; and I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read the editorial that was commented upon by my colleague yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

"PLAYING HORSE."

JOHN LIND made a speech in the House. He made a very clever argument for reciprocity in general and with Canada in particular. This shows that his immersions in Populism and Democracy didn't wash all the Republicanism out of him. For reciprocity specialized is not Democratic doctrine, as the dispatch has shown, but is Republican by pre-empton. A very strange effect of this speech is reflected in dispatches from Washington. It is said that it has sent all but two of the Minnesota Representatives into opposition to any modification of our trade relations with the Dominion. It is said that Mr. VOLSTEAD will lead off in a speech in which he will think he is defending his farmer constituents who grow wheat against what Cush Davis once described as "that avalanche of wheat" which would pour over the borders and sweep away our farmers if the duty were taken off. Mr. Davis very soon learned his mistake. If Mr. VOLSTEAD's purpose is as stated, he has his lesson also to learn. A more incredible statement is that the Senators will join the opposition.

It will be a queer contretemps if the fact that a former Republican, now posing as a Democrat, who advocates a policy Minnesota Republicans have always been in favor of—so much so that a Senate committee back in the eighties investigating opinion here found but one man opposed—should make six or seven Republican Representatives and two Senators turn tail and run away from their party. We must say that it would be either a tribute to Mr. LIND's sagacity and strength, or a display of their asininity, that would very much surprise Minnesota Republicans. It would be playing politics with a vengeance, and there would be a reacting vengeance that would be unpleasant to the recipients. Minnesota can not afford to have her Representatives "play horse" with a matter of such material importance, nor will she fail to resent it if they do.

The dispatch that foreshadows this puerile course says that it will be justified by the repugnance of Minnesota farmers "to being deprived of the benefits that accrue to them from the present duties on wheat." We really wonder if there is a farmer in all this Northwest so densely ignorant that he imagines that the tariff of 25 cents a bushel benefits him by decreasing competition. We wonder far more if Mr. VOLSTEAD or any other member of the House or Senate thinks so. These must know better, but that implies that they think their farmers woefully ignorant and densely stupid.

When Senator Davis made that statement—and he made it in good faith—he was promptly informed that Manitoba wheat came over the border, paid the duty, was milled in Minneapolis, the flour exported, and 90 per cent of the duty refunded to the millers. Since then the rebate has been increased to 99 per cent.

The 1 per cent of the 25-cent duty retained by the Government is 2¼ mills one-fourth of a cent a bushel is all the "protection" given our wheat raisers by the tariff; that is the measure of the "benefits" they are getting from it. Recently the millers have been in Washington seeking relief from the law or Treasury ruling that imposes a proportional share of the duty on the bran and shorts obtained from milling Canadian wheat if sold in this market. To escape that the millers must export the offal, thus depriving our farmers of the substantial benefit of getting stock feed at lower price. We doubt if any Senator or Representative will dare to make the display of ignorance, or worse, which opposition on such a ground would reveal.

Mr. LIND. I will now ask the Clerk to read the comments of the Minneapolis Journal, the leading Republican paper of our State, on the article just read. This was published February 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Journal is informed that some members of the Minnesota delegation in Congress are disturbed because so much attention has been given to Congressman LIND in this and other Republican papers. They are reported to be so much disturbed that, as the Dispatch says, they are going to vehemently oppose reciprocity with Canada because LIND is for it. In view of the general favor with which Mr. LIND's attitude has been received, we should think that they would do well to see whether they can not find grounds for agreeing with him. But they seem to be afflicted with a malady that has become chronic in the Minnesota delegation—viz, disregard of public opinion in Minnesota.

In view of the easy-going habit we have fallen into of not holding our Congressmen to account, it is only natural that this malady should thrive.

The Journal has no interest in attracting attention to Mr. LIND, but as this paper, like many others in this State, believes in reciprocity with Canada, it is only right and proper that it should devote some space to men and measures that are seeking to advance it. We believe that a majority of our people believe in reciprocity with our northern neighbor and have long ago got to the bottom of the ancient fallacy as to the dangers of Canadian competition in agricultural products, which Mr. VOLSTEAD purposes to resurrect. Yet with two or three exceptions our Congressmen have chosen to ignore or contemptuously oppose Canadian reciprocity.

Mr. LIND. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the genial Chairman of this Committee of the Whole [Mr. LACEY], who took occasion on the floor to criticise in a very kindly spirit what I said upon this subject some time ago, I desire to have read a portion of the recent message delivered by the governor of the great State of Iowa, and this will be of additional interest to members of the committee for the reason that it was uttered under the sanction of the governor's oath of office and in obedience to the requirement of the constitution of the State of Iowa that he should give his people sound advice.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is obvious that the farmers' principal desire and paramount interest is to feed as many people as possible. They sell breadstuffs and meats in their various forms, both at home and abroad, and therefore they ought to be in favor of the policy which will maintain and multiply their markets in their own country, and protect and increase their markets in other countries.

To put it in another form: It is plain that they should advocate the proposition which will add to the number of men at work in fields of industry other than agriculture at home, and which will remove burdensome restrictions and impositions which prevent a fair entry into markets abroad. Let us not be content with mere abstractions. It has been possible to make, and in my judgment it is still possible to make a treaty with Canada which would for years to come make us practically masters of the imports into that Dominion. In the last ten years American manufacturers have expended $100,000,000 in the establishment of plants in Canada which would have been kept at home, with all the labor which that implies, if there had been a fair and permanent relation existing between the two countries. Not only so, but every student of affairs knows that the chance we now have across the border will be completely destroyed unless we treat with our neighbors upon a fair reciprocal basis.

The farmers of Iowa have lost something in the foreclosure of the opportunity to feed the men who are operating the plants to which I have referred, and they will lose more when Canada raises the barrier so that England, France, and Germany will supply the material for the wonderful development upon which she is just entering and which we are so well prepared to supply. It has been said that in order to obtain these changes it will be necessary for us to let into our markets Canada's agricultural products, or some of them. I believe this to be partially true, but let me ask the farmers of Iowa whether they think they would lose in the exchange? Which would you rather do, lose the market which would be created by our vast imports into Canada or meet Canada in competition in the things which you produce? I assert confidently that in the sharp struggle with Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri you would never be able to discern the influence of Canada in corn, oats, barley, hay, cattle, horses, hogs, butter, and eggs.

I go further. We can make treaties with Central and South America, with France, Germany, Spain, and Italy, that will immensely increase our exports of manufactures to those countries, so that for every man deprived of employment here we can put to work ten. You ought to have a chance to feed these added nine men, and why is it not given you? Simply because of the inertia which seems to prohibit the profane foot from planting itself within the sacred precincts of the tariff schedules.

And how is it with your markets abroad? In England there is still the open door; but you know that a mighty force is now swinging it in your faces, and it may not be long before on those islands there will not even be the "gates ajar." Do you not think you ought to be alert and make some provision, if you can, for a pass key as the bolt slips into its socket?

In France you are under sore discrimination—discrimination which could be removed immediately without any substantial injury to a manufacturer in the United States.

Germany is making it harder for you all the while, and yet we rest supinely, watching with apparent satisfaction the gradual exclusion of the Iowa farmer from the markets of the German Empire.

I might continue this journey around the world, but it would serve us no useful purpose. If what I have said will not arouse the men who till the soil, who raise the cattle, horses, hogs, and hens, and produce the cheese, butter, and eggs of Iowa, I am mistaken in their intelligence and have overrated their loyalty.

Amidst the cries of the commercial conflict raging throughout the world I hear the voice of destiny saying to the men of agriculture as Roderick Dhu said to James Fitz James:

"For this is Coilantogle ford
And thou must keep thee with thy sword."

Mr. LIND. That is good doctrine. I do not think that I could improve upon it. It is in hearty accord with the sentiments of my colleagues on this side of the House. The editorials read state the facts, except possibly in the little bit of egotism contained in the first editorial, which may be pardonable considering the source.

The editor of the Dispatch says that reciprocity is preeminently and at all times Republican doctrine. Inasmuch as he evidently desires to see, seek, and promulgate the truth on this subject, I would commend the editor to the reading of that magnificent state paper of Thomas Jefferson, in which he formulated, not only for that day, but for all times and all conditions, the theory of reciprocity between nations.

I would also like to commend to his consideration the fact that the only genuine, lasting, efficient reciprocity treaty that this country ever had was inaugurated and promulgated under a Democratic President and when the Democratic party was in power—long before my day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy further time. I yield back whatever time I may have remaining.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, there are no other speakers on this side.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and the reading was concluded without any amendment being offered.

Mr. HITT. The consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole being now finished, I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House without amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LACEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11287, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it pass without amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to reserve all points of order on this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to give notice that I will ask the consideration of the bill immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow.

DEVILS LAKE INDIANS, NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the special order which was fixed to follow the disposition of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL] calls up as the special order a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11128) to modify and amend an agreement with the Devils Lake Indians in North Dakota.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, did, on the 2d day of November, A. D. 1901, make and conclude an agreement with the male adult Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows:

This agreement made and entered on the 2d day of November, 1901, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States and the Sisseton, Wahpeton, and Cut-Head bands of the Sioux tribe of Indians belonging on the Devils Lake Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, witnesseth:

ARTICLE I. The said Indians belonging on the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, N. Dak., for the consideration hereinafter named, do hereby cede, surrender, grant, and convey to the United States all their claim, right, title, and interest in and to all that part of the Devils Lake Indian Reservation now remaining unallotted, including the tract of land at present known as the Fort Totten Military Reserve, situated within the boundaries of the said Devils Lake Indian Reservation, and being a part thereof; except 6,160 acres required for allotments to sixty-one Indians of said reservation entitled to allotments, but to whom allotments have not yet been made, said sixty-one allotments to be made by the United States under the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887, as amended February 28, 1891.

ART. II. In consideration of the land ceded, relinquished, and conveyed by Article I of this agreement, and in full of all claims and demands of said Indians of Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., arising or growing out of the erroneous survey of the western boundary of their reservation in 1875, whereby about 64,000 acres were excluded therefrom; also in full for timber taken from their reservation for use of the military post of Fort Totten, from 1867 to 1890 (covering the period from the time of its establishment to the time of its discontinuance), the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to said Indians, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $345,000.

ART. III. It is agreed that of the amount to be paid to said Indians, as stipulated in Article II of this agreement, the sum of $145,000 shall be paid in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on the said Devils Lake Reservation, within four months after the ratification of this agreement, and the remainder of the said sum of $345,000, viz, $200,000, shall be paid in cash, per capita, in ten annual installments of $20,000 each, the first of which installments to be paid in the month of June following the said first payment of $145,000, and in the month of June of each year thereafter of the succeeding nine years covering the period of the said ten annual installments.

ART. IV. It is understood that nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., of any benefits to which they are entitled under the existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement.

ART. V. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when signed by United States Indian Inspector James McLaughlin, and by a majority of the male adult Indians, parties hereto, and when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States.

In witness whereof the said James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the male adult Indians belonging to the Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., have hereunto set their hands and seals at the Devils Lake Agency, Fort Totten, N. Dak., this 2d day of November, A. D. 1901.

JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
United States Indian Inspector.

DEVILS LAKE AGENCY, N. DAK., November 7, 1901.

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify that we witnessed the signatures of James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, and the 216 Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., to the foregoing agreement.

F. RABINNOVITZ, Agency Clerk.
IGNATIUS COURT,
Postmaster, Fort Totten, N. Dak.

DEVILS LAKE AGENCY, N. DAK., November 7, 1901.

I certify that the total number of male adult Indians, over 18 years of age, belonging on the Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., is 296, of whom 216 have signed the foregoing agreement.

F. O. GETCHELL,
United States Indian Agent.

DEVILS LAKE AGENCY, N. DAK., November 7, 1901.

Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, modified and amended to read as follows:

"ARTICLE I. The said Indians belonging on the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, N. Dak., for the consideration hereinafter named, do hereby cede, surrender, grant, and convey to the United States all their claim, right, title, and interest in and to all that part of the Devils Lake Indian Reservation now remaining unalloted, including the tract of land at present known as the "Fort Totten Military Reserve," situated within the boundaries of the said Devils Lake Indian Reservation, and being a part thereof; except 6,160 acres required for allotments to sixty-one Indians of said reservation entitled to allotments, but to whom allotments have not yet been made, said sixty-one allotments to be made by the United States under the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887, as amended February 28, 1891.

"ART. II. In consideration of the land ceded, relinquished, and conveyed by article 1 of this agreement, and in full of all claims and demands of said Indians of Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., arising or growing out of the erroneous survey of the western boundary of their reservation in 1875, whereby about 64,000 acres were excluded therefrom; also in full for timber taken from their reservation for use of the military post of Fort Totten, from 1867 to 1890 (covering the period from the time of its establishment to the time of its discontinuance), the United States stipulates and agrees to dispose of the same to settlers under the provisions of the homestead and town-site laws, except sections 16 and 36, or an equivalent of two sections, in each township, and except such lands as may be reserved, and to pay to said Indians the proceeds derived from the sale of said lands; and also the United States stipulates and agrees to pay for sections 16 and 36, or an equivalent of two sections, in each township, and for such lands as may be reserved for school, agency, church, and mission purposes, at the rate of $3.25 per acre.

"ART. III. It is agreed that out of the funds accruing from the sale of the said lands there shall be paid to the said Indians, in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on the said reservation, within four months after the date of the proclamation of the President of the United States opening the said lands to settlement, the sum of $145,000, or so much thereof as may have accrued from the sale of the said lands; and the remainder of the sums derived from the sale of the said lands shall be paid to the said Indians in annual installments not to exceed $30,000 in any one year, and the first of which installments to be paid in the month of June of the year following the first payment, and in the month of June of each year thereafter until the whole proceeds of the sale of the said lands shall have been disbursed.

"ART. IV. It is understood that nothing in this agreement shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, N. Dak., of any benefits to which they are entitled under the existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this agreement.

"ART. V. This agreement shall take effect and be in force when accepted and ratified by the Congress of the United States."

SEC. 2. That the said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, as herein amended.

SEC. 3. That before any of the lands ceded by said agreement are opened to settlement and entry, or otherwise disposed of, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause allotments to be made as provided by article 1 of the agreement, such allotments to conform as to quantity to the provisions of the treaty of February 19, 1867, and of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended February 28, 1891.

SEC. 4. That the lands ceded to the United States under said agreement, including the Fort Totten abandoned military reservation, which are exclusive of 6,160 acres which are required for allotments, excepting sections 16 and 36 or an equivalent of two sections in each township, and such tracts as may be reserved by the President as hereinafter provided shall be disposed of under the general provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States, and shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation, until after the expiration of sixty days from the time when the same are opened to settlement and entry: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and the Spanish war, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $4.50 per acre for all lands entered during the first six months after the opening of the said reservation, and $3.50 per acre for all lands entered during the second six months, and $2.50 per acre for all lands entered thereafter: Provided, That no lands which become forfeited after having been entered shall be reentered at a less price than the original entryman agreed to pay; all the said lands to be paid for as follows: One dollar per acre when the entry is made, and the remainder in annual installments of 50 cents per acre until paid for: Provided further, That in case any entryman fails to make such payments, or any of them, within the time stated, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry shall be forfeited and held for cancellation: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein, receiving credit for payments previously made.

In addition to the price to be paid for the land, the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law, where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre: And provided further, That aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before proving up and acquiring title must take out their full naturalization papers: And provided further, That all lands herein ceded and opened to settlement under this act remaining undisposed of at the expiration of five years from the taking effect of this act may be sold and disposed of for cash under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to reserve, in his proclamation for the opening of the said lands, should he deem proper, the tracts heretofore reserved for church, mission, and agency purposes, not to exceed 900 acres, and also not exceeding two and one-half sections for the Fort Totten Indian School, and the United States stipulates and agrees to pay for said reserved lands at the rate of $3.25 per acre. The President is also authorized to reserve a tract embracing Sullys Hill, in the northeastern portion of the abandoned military reservation, about 960 acres, as a public park, more particularly for the use of the Devils Lake Indians.

SEC. 5. That sections 16 and 36 of the lands hereby acquired in each township shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $3.25 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the State of North Dakota for such purpose; and in case any of said sections, or parts thereof, of the land in the said Devils Lake Indian Reservation or Fort Totten abandoned military reservation are lost to said State of North Dakota by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians now holding the same, or otherwise, the governor of said State, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to locate other lands not occupied, in the townships where said lands are lost, provided sufficient lands are to be had in the said townships, otherwise the selections to be made elsewhere within the ceded tract, which shall be paid for by the United States as provided in article 2 of the treaty as herein amended, in quantity equal to the loss, and such selections shall be made prior to the opening of such lands to settlement.

SEC. 6. That the proceeds received from the sale of said lands in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and paid to the Indians belonging to the Devils Lake Reservation only, as provided in article 3 of said agreement as herein amended.

SEC. 7. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $52,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for lands ceded to the United States for school, agency, church, and mission purposes, and for lands granted to the State of North Dakota, as herein provided.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36, or the equivalent, in each township, and such lands as may be reserved for school, agency, church, and mission purposes, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians, to dispose of said lands, and to pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read:

On page 10, line 14, after the word "park," strike out the words "more particularly for the use of the Devils Lake Indians."

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, by this bill it is proposed to modify and amend an agreement with the Devils Lake Indians, whereby the Fort Totten Indian Reservation, which belongs to them, shall be opened up for settlement.

The reservation contains in all 242,000 acres, of which, when the allotments are completed, 138,000 acres will be taken by the Indians, leaving 104,000 acres to be opened up for settlement.

The bill has been considered very carefully by the committee, and has been reported unanimously from the committee, and has the approval of the Department. Furthermore, its provisions are similar to those of the Rosebud bill, which passed this House a few days ago, the principal difference being that this provides for a tract of land containing about one-fourth as much as was embraced in the Rosebud bill.

I do not care to go into any detailed explanation of this matter, as I believe the House has a fairly good understanding of the provisions of the bill at this time, having just considered the other similar bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this legislation and believe that it is carefully drawn, that it is in the interest of the people in the region in which the lands are located, and in the interest of the Indians. I wish, however, to propose an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 10 and 11, page 9, strike out the words "forfeited and held for cancellation" and insert the word "canceled."

Mr. MONDELL. I offer this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I think it makes the language of that portion of the bill clearer than it is at the present time. In offering the amendment I use the language that is used in the desert-land law in cases where there has been a default in payments. I think it is best in a case of this kind, where there is a default which results in cancellation, to use language that has already been used in similar cases, which has been passed upon by the Department, and with regard to the meaning of which there can be no question. This amendment makes it clear that for nonpayment the moneys paid prior to the lapses in payment shall be forfeited and that the entry shall be canceled. I trust that the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming be accepted, because I believe it is a good amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. My attention was diverted at the time the gentleman was making his statement. Do I understand the gentleman from Wyoming to say that this amendment makes the bill conform to the language of other bills of a similar character heretofore passed?

Mr. MONDELL. It is the language used in the only bill we have passed prior to this time, relating to cash payments, a default in which forfeits the entry and prior payments. It seemed to me that there was some question with regard to the language as used in the bill and that it would be wise to use the language that has been used in cases similar to this, and with regard to which there can be no question.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If that is the purpose of the amendment, I am in favor of it.

Mr. MONDELL. The purpose of the amendment is to make the meaning clear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Wyoming be agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, when amendments can be voted on, I think it is an unusual course to ask the House to agree to them by unanimous consent. The gentleman can offer his amendment in the usual way. I have no desire to object to the amendment, but I object to the form in which it is presented.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound an interrogatory to the gentleman.

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is with reference to the appropriation provided for, $52,000 for the Government to purchase sections 16 and 36. I believe that is the amount.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman what has been the course in cases similar to this heretofore with reference to the Government purchasing these lands, and at what figure or price these lands were sold to entrymen?

Mr. MARSHALL. I wish, by way of answering the gentleman's question, to say he will understand that under the enabling act by which North Dakota was admitted into the Union provision was made whereby sections 16 and 36 were donated by the United States to the State for school purposes. Further provision was made that in the case of Indian reservations no selections could be made of these sections until the reservations were opened.

Now, then, the gentleman asks what the usual procedure has been. I will say that in three instances that I have in my mind which occurred in South Dakota, which State has identically the same provision in her enabling act as North Dakota—in fact, they were admitted under the same act—the Government not only paid for sections 16 and 36, but paid for the entire tracts. Sections 16 and 36 were given to the State of South Dakota, and the remainder was opened to settlement under the homestead law. In the case of the Big Sioux the price was $1.25 an acre. In the case of the Yankton Reservation the same thing occurred, and the price was $3.75 an acre; and in the case of the Sisseton Reservation the same thing happened, and the price was $2.50 per acre.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, in this case what would the entryman pay per acre for the land that he secured?

Mr. MARSHALL. In the case of the Big Sioux Reservation the entryman originally was to have paid $1.25 per acre for the first three years; after that 75 cents per acre, and after that 50 cents; and then the free-homestead law was extended; so that in the end they did not pay at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The acts have provided different prices for payment by the entryman. Now, the Committee in this case has raised the price to a sum higher than the usual price. My inquiry is why it would not be better policy to raise the price of the land to a sum sufficient so that there would not be required to be an appropriation directly out of the public Treasury.

Mr. MARSHALL. In the first place, the lands would not sell for any more money, at least not for any considerable sum greater, than the price asked for them—that is, $4.50 per acre. In the next place, it would be manifestly unfair to the settlers who propose to take these lands to make them pay the additional price over and above the original price intended to be paid to the Indians in order to cancel an obligation of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Treasury of the United States is now charged with this sum that ought, it seems to me, if possible, and do justice, to be made out of the land itself. And upon the last proposition, that the condition is now changed, that except under the provisions of the irrigation act the Treasury is not reimbursed by receiving the proceeds of the sale of these lands.

Mr. MARSHALL. The gentleman will understand that the money goes to the Indians. The facts are simply these: Under the plan heretofore pursued the United States bought all of these lands and either gave them to the people in free homes or undertook to collect for them from the homesteaders.

We have now started upon another plan, whereby the United States does not assume any responsibility regarding thirty-four of the thirty-six sections in a township, and simply carries out its obligation to North Dakota, and pays for the two sections and donates them to the State. In other words, the United States has gotten rid of seventeen-eighteenths of the obligation that has been incurred in bills prior to the time that the Rosebud bill came up here.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves the previous question on the bill and amendment to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARSHALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BEIDLER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWNLOW, for four days, on account of important business.

CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on the Census.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the following privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House what persons have been selected and employed by him and the dates and periods of time for which such persons have been employed in the Census Office under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1903, which provided as follows:

"The unexpended balance of the census appropriation which, by the proviso in the act approved June 28, 1902, entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' was reappropriated and made available for continuing the work of taking the Twelfth Census, and for all expenses arising under and authorized by the act to provide for the permanent Census Office, approved March 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the purposes indicated in said proviso during the fiscal year 1904; and that said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed for the purpose, be, and the same is hereby, also made available for such expenditures as may become necessary in complying with the proclamation of the President dated September 30, 1902, pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes,' including the cost of temporarily employing such number of persons as may be necessary for the performance of said work, at a compensation not exceeding that which has heretofore been paid employees in the Census Office for doing similar work, such persons to be selected and employed by the Director at such dates and for such periods of time as he may deem proper."

And how long such employees have continued under such appointment, and, if such appointments were discontinued, for what reasons they were so discontinued.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the Chair is of opinion that this is not a matter of privilege. It is not in the language of the rule addressed to the head of an Executive Department. The Chair merely wants to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, without questioning the Chair's ruling, I ask unanimous consent that it may be acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. ACHESON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3578) to authorize the Mercantile Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of North Charleroi, Washington County, to a point in Rostaver Township, Westmoreland County.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The bill, with amendments, was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman who has called up this bill whether it has been submitted to the Secretary of War and meets his approval?

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to report this bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The letter of the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War upon this proposition is printed with the report of the committee. It was submitted by the Secretary of War to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and the bill, with the amendments suggested, will be exactly as approved by the War Department.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and was passed.

On motion of Mr. ACHESON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF PUBLIC ROAD, WINTHROP, MASS.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 1909 may be taken from the Calendar and immediately considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of the following bill, the title of which the Clerk will report, and that the same may be considered in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1909) to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the request by the Speaker. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of this bill and to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the town of Winthrop, in the county of Suffolk, State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public road, the following-described tract of land: A strip of land 25 feet wide, extending along the northerly side of the United States military reservation at Fort Banks, from the easterly side of Elm avenue to the easterly side of Winthrop street, town of Winthrop, in the county of Suffolk, Mass.; and more particularly described as follows: "Beginning at the point of intersection of the northeasterly side of Winthrop street with the southeasterly side of the location of the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn Railroad Company's right of way, and running thence northeasterly along the southeasterly side of said right of way for a distance of 600 feet, more or less, to the northeasterly side of Elm avenue; thence southeasterly along the northeasterly side of Elm avenue for a distance of 25 feet; thence southwesterly along a line parallel to and 25 feet distant from the southeasterly line of the location of the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn Railroad Company's right of way to the northeasterly side of Winthrop street; thence northwesterly along the northeasterly side of Winthrop street to the point of beginning," the said land being so conveyed to the town of Winthrop in exchange for the land and easements comprised in Elm avenue, in said town of Winthrop, which was conveyed to the United States in 1891 and 1892 as a site for the construction of fortifications; and with a view to convert the said strip into as good a street as Elm avenue was at the time of its conveyance to the United States, the sum of $200 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the purpose of grading and making a road upon and through the said strip of land.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman to make some explanation of this matter. What committee reports it?

Mr. TIRRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs reports it unanimously. Mr. Speaker, in the years 1891 and 1892, to add to the fortifications of Boston Harbor, the United States Government purchased a certain tract of land in the town of Winthrop, Mass., which is really a part of the city itself, although under a different municipal government, being located about a mile and a half from the State capital of Massachusetts. This land was purchased and the fortifications were erected. It became necessary, however, to also take a right of way which had been acquired in fee and by prescription by a large number of persons who owned land in the rear.

This right of way ran directly through the center of the land which had been taken, and there was no way, unless another right of way was laid out in the rear of this land, by which those owning property and having rights of way across it could have access from their land to the public highway. So in the adjustment of this matter it was agreed between the Government of the United States and those who had these rights of way that if they released the same to the Government of the United States as a consideration therefor there should be laid out in the rear of the land taken a right of way which should be perpetually given for the use of those who had been deprived of the right of way which they had previously acquired.

That right of way, 25 feet in width, is not necessary for fortification purposes, and is not used by the Government of the United States. It is fenced off now in accordance with the agreement then made; has been used by the people to whom it was intended to be given since that time; but there has been no act of the Government in pursuance of that agreement by which the people have any assurance as yet that they may not be deprived of it. This matter was thoroughly considered by our Government. There was a specific report made by the Assistant Secretary of War, in which he sets forth this agreement, and in which he recommends that this right of way shall be given.

Now, the only change made, and that is a change in opposition to the recommendation of the Secretary of War, is to strike out the appropriation, so that the Government will be put to no expense whatever for this tract of land ceded. It will be in accordance with the original agreement and an act of justice and equity, and on reading the report setting forth all the details specifically, to which I have only in a brief way adverted, there is not a gentleman in this House who would not be satisfied with this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. When was this agreement made?

Mr. TIRRELL. In 1891 or 1892.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIRRELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 1319. An act authorizing Robert A. Chapman, of Alabama, his associates and assigns, to use the waters of the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the purpose of generating electricity—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10421. An act to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8686. An act to amend section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 8688. An act to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 32, in the city of Washington, D. C.; and

H. R. 4344. An act for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C.

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORDS TO INDIVIDUALS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5511) to authorize registers and receivers of United States land offices to furnish transcripts of their records to individuals.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That registers and receivers of United States land offices shall, in addition to the fees now allowed by law, be entitled to charge and receive for making transcripts of the records in their offices for individuals, the sum of 10 cents per hundred words for each transcript so furnished; and the transcripts thus furnished, when duly certified to by them, shall be admitted as evidence in all courts of the United States and the Territories thereof with the same force and effect as the original records.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read:

In line 10, after the word "thereof," insert the following: "and before all officials authorized to receive evidence."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this measure.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, under the law at the present time the Commissioner of the General Land Office has full authority to make certified copies of the records in the General Land Office, but there is no law authorizing registers and receivers of the local land offices in the various districts throughout the country to make like transcripts and certifications of the official records in their offices. A great many official records in the local land offices never reach the General Land Office, and many of them are important, affecting the title of real estate throughout the country.

At present the only way of getting the official records from those offices is to induce the register voluntarily to take certain books of record to the court that may be in session. Sometimes it is a hundred miles distant in a different judicial district. This measure has been suggested by people familiar with the practice, and the necessity for it has often arisen throughout the various land districts. It is a bill prepared in the Department and was introduced by me after conference with the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I can see no possible objection to it. The purpose is plain, and it is to meet a real necessity.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman what committee considered the bill?

Mr. MARTIN. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Was it a unanimous report?

Mr. MARTIN. A unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitting an estimate of appropriation for settlement of claims of certain employees of the Government—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting, with a favorable recommendation, an estimate of appropriation for the construction of a customs office building at Port Eads, La.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I present a memorial of the legislature of New York, relative to an appropriation for the improvement of the highways of the country. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, in Senate:

ALBANY, January 28, 1904.

Whereas Hon. W. P. BROWNLOW, a Representative in Congress from Tennessee, has introduced in the House of Representatives a bill providing for an appropriation by the Federal Government of $24,000,000, to be distributed among the States of the Union according to their population for Federal cooperation in road building; and

Whereas should such a bill become a law, the State of New York will receive as its share $2,100,000; and

Whereas there is great need for improving the highways of this State:

Therefore, be it resolved, That the senate of the State of New York, believing in the principle of national, state, county, and town cooperation in the construction of main highways, not only for the benefit of the agriculturist, but for the benefit of the consumers of agricultural products, and also believing in the great proposition that the expenditure of public moneys for the purpose of improving the internal wealth and commerce of the nation is of equal importance to the spending of money on rivers and harbors, heartily indorse the provisions of the Brownlow bill and desire its passage; and

Further be it resolved, That we ask our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use all honorable efforts in passing this bill in order to secure for the State of New York the benefits of national aid in road construction; and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, Chairman of the Agricultural Committee, and each of the Senators and Congressmen from this State.

By order of the senate:

J. S. WHIPPLE, Clerk.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I present a memorial of the legislature of New York relative to the enactment of legislation to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, in Senate:

ALBANY, January 27, 1904.

Whereas a bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress of the United States, No. 827, entitled "A bill to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service," which bill is designed to make provision for those connected with this important branch of the Government service, which service is constantly attended with peril, hardship, and self-sacrifice in devotion to the protection of life and commerce, numerous instances of heroic service to the cause of humanity being matters of daily record; and

Whereas, owing to lack of legislation making provision for those who may be incapacitated, owing to incidents of the service, accident, exposure, or years of service, no provision is now made for the protection of those whose duties are attended with great hazard to life and health: Therefore, be it

Resolved, If the assembly concur, that the Representatives in Congress from the State of New York be, and hereby are, requested to use their efforts in promoting the progress of said bill or some measure which, in their judgment, shall do ample justice to the class of persons designed to be benefited, and assist in its enactment into law, and that copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the Senators and Congressmen from the State of New York and to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which committee the bill has been referred.

By order of the senate.

J. S. WHIPPLE, Clerk.

Concurred in by order of the assembly.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 13th ultimo, authorizing the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota to dispose of the timber on their respective allotments, reported it with an amendment, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4100) to acquire certain ground for a Government reservation, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3546) relating to proofs under the homestead laws, and to confirm such proofs in certain cases when made outside of the land district within which the land is situated, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3204) permitting the Kiowa, Chickasha and Fort Smith Railway Company to sell and convey its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company, and the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company to lease all its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and thereafter to sell its railroad and other property to said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7024) to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill (S. 2436) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, being Order of Business No. 190 on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill just reported by me be given its place on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT GRISWOLD, CONN.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3800) donating gun carriages to the Connecticut commissioners for the care and preservation of Fort Griswold, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, to the commissioners appointed by the governor of the State of Connecticut for the care and preservation of the Fort Griswold tract for the purpose of a public park, as provided for in the act of Congress approved June 6, 1902 (vol. 32, pt. 1, Stat. L., p. 306), four barbette carriages for 8-inch Rodman gun, front pintle, and one barbette carriage for 24-pounder rifle, front pintle.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. GORMAN December 19, 1903, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate the reports upon the investigation of the irregularities in the Post-Office Department, by Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow, together with the reports of Messrs. Holmes Conrad and Charles J. Bonaparte, special counsel for the Government, on the charges made by S. W. Tulloch, formerly cashier of the Washington city post-office.

VISIT OF PORTO RICAN TEACHERS.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) for the transportation of Porto Rican teachers to the United States and return, and I ask that it may be read and now considered.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of War during the year 1904, at such time as requested by the governor of the island of Porto Rico, to transport from the island of Porto Rico to the United States and to return from the United States to Porto Rico, on one of the vessels engaged in the transport service of the United States, not to exceed 600 of the Porto Rican teachers in the public schools of that island, and in addition thereto not to exceed 25 necessary attendants, such teachers and attendants to be selected by the commissioner of education of the island, for the purpose of attending the various summer schools of the universities, colleges, and other institutions of learning in the United States during the year. But a subsistence charge of $1 per day for each day on such vessel shall be collected from each of such persons so transported; and the Government of the United States shall not be liable for, and shall not defray, the expenses of the teachers and attendants, or of any such of them, incurred while in the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana introduced a bill (S. 4125) to authorize the Little Rock and Monroe Railway Company to construct, maintain, and use a bridge across Ouachita River, in the State of Louisiana, at a point between Ouachita City and the mouth of Bayou Loutre; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 4126) granting an increase of pension and back pay to P. Q. Healy, alias John Quinn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I introduce a bill, with an accompanying statement, to which I ask the attention of the committee to which the bill shall be referred. I confess I hardly know where the bill ought to be referred. I am inclined to think that it ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands, and I will make that motion.

The bill (S. 4127) for the preservation of aboriginal monuments, ruins, and other antiquities, and for other purposes was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill should go, in the opinion of the Chair, either to the Committee on Public Lands or to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CULLOM. I debated that question myself. It occurs to me that the Committee on the Library would hardly have jurisdiction of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred, then, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4128) granting an increase of pension to Peter Kaufman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4129) granting an increase of pension to William Markman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 4130) to amend sections 1288, 1293, and 1294 of the Code of the District of Columbia, relating to marriage, so as to authorize marriages according to the custom of the Society of Friends or Quakers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4131) for the relief of Martha E. Conklin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4132) granting an increase of pension to Addison L. Scott; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4133) for the relief of Stephen Crotty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 4134) granting to the city and county of San Francisco, for water-supply purposes, the use of certain lands in a forest reservation in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 4135) granting an increase of pension to Jane Francis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4136) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Earle, administratrix of the estate of J. B. Earle, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4137) granting an increase of pension to George W. Hutchison;

A bill (S. 4138) granting a pension to Julia A. Johnson (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4139) granting a pension to John D. Henderson; and

A bill (S. 4140) granting an increase of pension to John M. Postlethwait.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 4141) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Dickey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 4142) granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Scott County, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4143) granting an increase of pension to Rufus B. Tucker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (S. 4144) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 4145) to quiet certain land titles in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4146) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph L. Bernard, deceased;

A bill (S. 4147) for the relief of the heirs of Mary C. Stirling and Ruffin G. Stirling, both deceased, and S. C. Stirling, H. R. Stirling, and J. Anna Stirling, administratrix of W. R. Stirling, deceased; and

A bill (S. 4148) for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, formerly Louisiana State Bank.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 4149) for the relief of Samuel S. Dennis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4150) for the relief of George H. Mellen, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut introduced a bill (S. 4151) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Spencer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 4152) granting an honorable discharge to John Kinchlow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4153) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4154) granting an increase of pension to Charles Lewis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4155) for the extension of S street, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4156) for the establishment of public convenience stations and bath houses; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 4157) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 4158) granting an increase of pension to John C. Rassbach; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4159) granting an increase of pension to George W. Gray; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4160) providing for a naval training station on Put in Bay Island, in Lake Erie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4161) providing for the expenditure of money hitherto appropriated for the improvement and maintenance of Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 44) as to the provisions of "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the payment of certain fees, purchase money, and commission paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to cover costs, expenses, etc., incident to the prosecution of the suit of the United States v. D. L. Boyd et al., now pending in the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina, for the purpose of determining the rights of about 600 or more persons who claim to be members of the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians and entitled to share in the distribution of the funds and in the enjoyment of the lands belonging to said band of Indians, and providing for a complete census roll of said band of Indians and of the Cherokee Indians residing east of the Mississippi River, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing that in readjusting the salaries and allowances of postmasters of the first, second, and third class no increase in salaries or allowances shall be made unless the mailing receipts of the office shall substantially balance or equal the receipts of the office from the sale of stamps, stamped envelopes, or stamped paper, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the consul at Moscow, Russia, from $2,000 to $2,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,524.10 to pay the owners of the Norwegian steamer Ragnar for damages arising from the collision between said steamer and the United States army transport Sumner in the Yangtze River, China, on March 18, 1902, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES C. WHITTEN—WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the papers on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate in connection with the bill (S. 3561, 57th Cong., 1st sess.) for the relief of James C. Whitten, there having been no adverse report on said bill.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit the following order, and ask for its immediate adoption. There is only a single copy of part 2 in the document room.

The order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the final report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, parts 1 and 2, made to the President, November, 1901, be reprinted in one volume, with the indexes thereto, and bound in cloth, for the use of the Senate.

NEBRASKA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expenses to be incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the leasing of the building used at this time for a post-office in that city, and particularly to investigate and report as to the action of CHARLES H. DIETRICH, a Senator from Nebraska, in connection with such appointment and leasing, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers signed by the chairman of said committee.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. PATTERSON rose.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from Colorado goes on, will he let me put in two or three nominal amendments to meet estimates that have come in? It will not take any time.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. On page 83 of the bill, at the end of line 19, I move to insert:

To pay the audited account of Alonzo P. Turner for paid transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington volunteers in 1855 and 1856, as per certificate No. 407770, $46.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 50, after line 20, I move to insert:

For expenses of hearings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 4, in line 15, I move to amend the committee amendment already adopted by striking out "six" and inserting "eight," so as to read:

For expenses, not salaries, of inspection of consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Department of State, $8,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls to the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that, in the last case, the former agreement to the amendment of the committee should be reconsidered and then let the amendment be amended as suggested. It would be entered in the Journal in that way.

Mr. HALE. Very well; let that course be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, there being no objection.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment now submitted by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to page 26, lines 7, 8, and 9, the amendment of the committee, inserting "$100 and" in the appropriation for heating apparatus for public buildings. The RECORD does not show that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HALE. That should be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I supposed it had been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, when I took the floor yesterday afternoon just before adjournment it was with the intention of occupying it a very short time, and the mere fact of adjournment has not changed my purpose. There were some matters referred to by Senators upon both sides to which I do not give my full assent, and as they relate to matters of history I think it quite well enough that the record should be kept clean in so far as the correct statement of causes and results will tend to do so.

It would be quite disrespectful to the particular item in the appropriation bill under discussion and the point of order if I were to omit all reference to them, and while I will say something about them, but very little of my time will be occupied in that way.

I am in pretty strong sympathy with the point of order taken by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and also with the proposition that legislation of this character is of very doubtful propriety. Many objections may be presented, many substantial objections, but in view of the fact that nearly all the nations of the world are participating in the exposition that is to occur this year in St. Louis, I think that, whatever our objections may be to this particular legislation, we may follow in the lead of the President in justifying a treaty about which he evidently feared questions might be raised, and that was justly open to the most serious constitutional objections, and that embraces a pretty clear disregard of treaty obligations, by the proposition that he presented, namely, that we are in this instance the mandatories of collective civilization. It is a ground that will cover a multitude of objections to any kind of legislation that may be more than local in its character, and in this case I propose to salve my convictions in voting for the exposition appropriation by the claim that, in view of the interests that are involved and the number of foreign nations who are intending to participate, the Congress is the mandatory of collective civilization, and therefore substantial objections to the appropriation should be put aside.

But, very properly, Mr. President, the discussion yesterday took a wider range, and immediately upon the fact being suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that we had a Treasury and revenues that would not permit anything but the most rigid economy in the matter of expenditures by reason of the possibility of a deficiency, the question of financial policy was put in issue, and might be properly discussed.

The proposition of prosperity received a great deal of attention. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] gave a very glowing picture of the prosperity of the country under Republican Administrations and the want of prosperity whenever a Democratic Administration took the reins of government.

I was impressed with this possibility, that all departments of industry were prosperous, in the opinion of the Senator from Ohio, except the trusts and syndicate industries, and that he desired to even up prosperity by introducing an amendment to the antitrust law which would give to the trusts and syndicates benefits that they could not now acquire, and remove from their front menaces with which they are constantly confronted.

I was struck with a peculiarity of the debate on both sides. It seemed to proceed upon the theory that whether we were in prosperous times or in bad times the condition, whatever it was, was properly traceable to the tariff schedules; that if the country was exceedingly prosperous then it was a Republican Administration that brought it about, and if the times were less prosperous, then it was by reason of the advent of a Democratic Administration or by a proposition in some Democratic platform to reform to a greater or a less degree the tariff laws of the country.

Mr. President, I believe we all concede that we have had good times, prosperous times, both in Democratic and in Republican Administrations. I think that it is conceded that from 1880 until 1890 the country enjoyed an unusual degree of prosperity, a period that embraced one full Democratic Administration and a Republican Administration and a part of a second one.

I refer to that for the purpose of suggesting what I have many times maintained. This proposition of prosperity is not so much a question of tariff schedules as it is of other causes quite far removed from tariff schedules. I do not believe that Providence does everything to bring about prosperity. I have no hesitation in admitting that bad laws and good laws have a great deal to do with the business condition of the country, with wages, with profits, with the quality of maintenance that the masses of the country acquire, and those laws may be tariff laws or they may be financial or other laws.

Nor do I believe that the amount of the balance that may happen to be in the Treasury this year or last year or next year is a sure indicia of business conditions. Nor is it so much a question of balance of trade or of exports and imports. Good times or bad times may exist with the balance of trade against us or in our favor, and either one or the other condition may exist with a surplus in the Treasury or a depleted one.

The condition of the Treasury depends too much, Mr. President, upon what may be mere accidental causes or unusual or extraordinary conditions for that to be a certain indicia of the real condition of the country.

That we did have unexampled prosperity from 1880 until well on to 1892 is borne out not only by the individual experiences of the elder people of the country, but by those who have written upon the subject, and I only take time to quote upon this subject from the History of American Coinage, written by Mr. David K. Watson, a stanch Republican of Ohio and a monometallist of the most approved type, who, writing upon the question of financial legislation, makes this statement with reference to the state of the country during the eleven or twelve years that I have called attention to:

It is said by the friends of free coinage that the effect of not coining silver has been to depress prices and cause hard times. Is this statement true? It is true that after 1892 prices generally declined and business depression prevailed throughout the United States; but it is also true that from 1880 to 1892 this country enjoyed its most prosperous period. Land brought good prices during those years, and in many cases almost doubled in value; farm products sold well; labor commanded higher wages than ever before in this country, and an idle man was a scarcity.

Then again:

The prosperity of the United States from 1880 to 1892 can not be denied. Mr. Mulhall, the most distinguished living statistician, has recently published a book entitled "The Balance Sheet of the World." In speaking of the United States he says:

"It would be impossible to find in history a parallel to the progress of the United States in the last ten years. Every day that the sun rises upon the American people it sees the addition of two and a half millions of dollars to the accumulation of wealth in the Republic, just one-third of the daily accumulation of all mankind outside of the United States."

Mr. President, Mr. Cleveland was elected in 1884. In 1888 he was renominated and defeated, and in 1892 he was again renominated and reelected. The Chicago convention which gave him his last nomination had in mind the degree of prosperity that existed under his first Administration, and after it was announced that he had received the necessary two-thirds vote the convention broke out into a refrain, the exact words of which I have not got, but it was to the effect of—

Grover, Grover,
We'll live four years more in clover.

During Mr. Cleveland's Administration, from 1884 until 1888, the country was as prosperous as it had ever been. Those four years formed a part of the twelve years that all agree in declaring to have been the most prosperous period in the history of the country.

Mr. Cleveland gave to the United States during his first term a Democratic Administration. True, Mr. President, he had made apparent his hostility to bimetallism, but it did not take form except in utterances. No law was enacted that interfered with the then existing condition of the finances.

When Democrats, however, undertake to suggest that Mr. Cleveland's second Administration, commencing with March 4, 1893, was a period of prosperity, either unusual or relative, or at all, they are doing violence to the experience of the country and to the history as that history has been written. I will not undertake just now to state what was the cause of the panic and the depression and the bankruptcies that fell upon the country. I will simply call attention to a few historical facts, and perhaps a proper conclusion may be drawn from them.

In 1891 we recall the failure of Baring Brothers. A shiver ran through the commercial and the financial world. A great banking institution that had existed for generations, with branches in all the great capitals of the world, suffered a complete collapse, and from the moment of the announcement of that failure prosperity commenced to wane. The banks commenced to withdraw their loans. They refused new loans unless in exceptional cases.

The reason was not one of tariff or of tariff schedules. It was because the financial world was troubled. It did not know how far the causes of the Baring Brothers failure might reach, and, as upon all such occasions, the men who controlled the money commenced to gather it in and refused to allow it to go out. The result of it was a diminution of the building and other industries of all the great cities—slow at first, but gathering speed as time progressed.

Then came the election of Mr. Cleveland. Following his election by orders in council the Indian mints were closed to the coinage of silver, and in August an extra session of Congress convened under proclamation of the President for the purpose of undoing the coinage laws and inaugurating the system that has existed since.

Mr. President, there are many here who recollect the conflict on the floor of the Senate and the House, commencing, I think, upon the 8th of August and not ending until the early part of November. We then witnessed the power of an Administration determined to control the votes of so-called representatives of the people both here and in another part of the Capitol.

I have never questioned but that President Cleveland received his election as the result of an understanding that should he be elected he would pursue the course he took and use all the power, all the tremendous power and influence of the White House, to strike from the statute books of the country what is known as the purchasing clause of the Sherman law.

Mr. President, during the second of Mr. Cleveland's terms this country did not have a Democratic President. Had Mr. Cleveland made known, even by insinuation, during the campaign that his first public act would be to use the powers of the great office for which he was a candidate to stop the purchase and coinage of silver, not all the money bags of Wall street, not all the banking syndicates of the country, could have saved him from the defeat he would have deserved. When he called the extra session of Congress and put it to the Senate and House that the silver-purchasing clause of the Sherman law should be repealed, we had the spectacle of a Democratic President championing a Republican measure, and by reason of the championship of that Republican measure bringing his own party into deserved odium and making certain its defeat at the ensuing election.

I was here, Mr. President, as a spectator during several months of that controversy. I did not know what influences were brought to bear, either here or elsewhere; but all of us saw the result of the influences in the falling away of Democratic Senators and Representatives from the support of what I have always maintained was the money of the Constitution and the money of the people. With what result? Mr. President, of course the balance of trade went against us; of course our exports decreased. Who will forget the business condition of the country commencing with the early spring of 1893, immediately following the closing of the mints of India and the enactment of a Republican financial measure under the championship of a so-called Democratic President?

Mr. President, that was the forerunner of the Coxey army. There was hardly a great city of this country that was without a company or regiment or a brigade of starving and workless men camped within its borders and, to prevent worse things, forcing contributions to keep them from starving. Thousands of them made their way to this capital. They camped outside of the city or in its immediate neighborhood. It was an era of gloom, of suffering. Liquidation did not end during the four years of President Cleveland's Administration. I recall that the mills of New England were closed down.

Men went out upon the strike by thousands and tens of thousands because they received notice that their wages must be reduced. The mining camps of the West for more than a year had the locks turned upon them; their shafts were unused; men with large investments, many of them, were pauperized, and tens of thousands of starving miners were turned out on the highways and byways without means of subsistence, except that which they could get from the generous communities of the country to which they made their way.

Mr. President, while I was here during the extra session of 1893 I recollect a conversation at the Shoreham Hotel with a leading New England Republican. I protested against the course of his party and their aid-de-camp, the President. I called his attention to the condition of industry in his own locality, and suggested to him that it was the logical and necessary result of the policy that was being pursued.

He was an ardent advocate of the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause. "Why," he said, "Mr. PATTERSON, you are mistaken; the manufacturers of the country have come to the conclusion that, in connection with the repeal of the silver-purchasing clause, there must be a readjustment of the industries of the country, and the owners of the mills can better treat for lower wages with men with empty bellies than they can with those who are remuneratively employed in their mills." So, Mr. President, Mr. Cleveland's Administration was four years of gloom.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a second?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I infer from the Senator's remarks that he would not look with great favor upon the possibility of a third Administration of Mr. Cleveland. I trust in this supposition I do the Senator no injustice.

Mr. PATTERSON. I certainly would not look with great favor, or with any favor, upon another Administration of Mr. Cleveland. As the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] said, he is hardly any longer in existence, hardly to be accounted with. But I feel a good deal as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said he felt, in his memoirs, in treating of a celebrated public character, that the time will never come when it will not be just and right to hold him up to the American people as an example of what a man who is false to his party and false to his country may accomplish; and I want to say to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that if there is any man to whom he and his friends should feel under lasting obligations it is to ex-President Cleveland, for he carried out the policy they advocated, and that, in my opinion, no Republican President would have attempted, notwithstanding it was a Republican measure. He made certain the election of Mr. McKinley, and made possible the retention of the Republican party in power ever since. The Democratic party since 1893 has been paying for the sins of a so-called Democratic President by reason of his carrying into effect a distinctively Republican measure.

When I am told that silver was a menace to the country I point to what Mr. Watson says; I point to the history of the country, that from 1880 until 1892 it was enjoying a state of unexampled prosperity; and I conclude the necessity did not arise to interfere with it, except by the misconception of conditions by one high in authority, or by reason of carrying into effect some preelection understanding between himself and the great money power of the country.

Mr. President, the prosperity the country has been enjoying is a little peculiar, quite peculiar. It has been unexampled prosperity for the rich and somewhat circumscribed prosperity for the poor. To be sure we have had bountiful crops; nature has smiled upon the country and upon the husbandmen; but with what net results? That whereas before 1896 we had comparatively few multimillionaires, the country is now graced not only with multimillionaires, but with billionaires, with hundreds of multimillionaires who before the era of great speculation set in were possessed of but ordinary wealth.

With the advent of the Republican party we have had the era of trusts, and with the era of trusts we have had an era of tremendous strikes; we have had unexampled combinations of capital and unexampled combinations of labor. The one necessarily led to the other. It became a question of self-defense, and the labor of the country undertook as best it could to meet the crushing and grinding power that was being organized under the new industrial plan known as the "trust system," beneath which it was inevitable that they would be ground to powder unless they presented a compact, solid organization to confront it.

Mr. President, many things that President Roosevelt has done I admire. I know of no braver act that any President has ever done than when he confronted the railroad presidents upon the one hand and the representatives of the working miners upon the other and said to the railroad combinations, "You must meet with these men and reach a settlement."

I admired Mr. Roosevelt when he instituted the suit against the railroad merger, and when he instituted one other suit, I believe, against the meat trust; but the performance, Mr. President, has fallen far short of the original promise. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, whatever the President has done in the way of attacking the trust evil, he has never even suggested to any of the legal representatives of the Government that the criminal clause of the trust law should be enforced.

The merger case was prosecuted, and prosecuted vigorously, and is now awaiting ultimate decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. But, Mr. President, there is the beginning and the ending of the efforts of this Administration to grapple with the trusts and to make them subject to the old law of honest competition and the welfare of the people.

I am inclined to think that the President of the United States, when he entered upon the performance of the duties of his office, made necessary by the greatest crime of the centuries, meant well to the people and meant well to the law. Early in his Administration he seemed to notify the great trusts that, so far as he was concerned, he would use all the powers of his office to subject them to the dignity and the power and the majesty of the law, driving out of existence that which the law denounced and which the common sense and the humanity of the country said was a menace to a free government's existence. But it looks, Mr. President, as though the President has ever since been doing penance for his rash act. With 300 trusts and over, either securing a complete monopoly of the industries in which they are engaged or approaching to monopolies as rapidly as it is possible for them to reach it, he has contented himself with two or three civil prosecutions, ignoring altogether the one single clause in the antitrust law that is a terror to the trusts, and that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] is now seeking to have repealed.

They deal with these things a little differently in some countries. Great Britain is not much of a trust country. They have large corporate interests there, and they have some great aggregations of capital engaged in the different industries; but, Mr. President, only a week ago last Tuesday, under instructions of an English judge in London, one of the great trust promotors was convicted and sentenced to seven years in an English prison—Mr. J. Whitaker Wright—for offenses on all fours with the offenses of Schwab, Max Pam, and Morgan in their efforts at monopolizing great branches of industry. He swindled the English people, the lords and the commons, and there was an English judge of sufficient virtue, and an English law of sufficient virility to take him by the throat and hold him at the bar of justice while a jury of twelve men were passing upon the merits of his case. With his conviction he "shuffled off this mortal coil;" he took poison and died within an hour. There would not be many tears shed, Mr. President, if some of the great lights of the financial world, who find a habitat in the United States and operate from the great commercial centers, should seek the same ending and find it from the same cause.

Mr. President, take the billion-dollar steel trust. Its victims are numbered by the thousands. The shipbuilding trust is as palpable a swindle as was ever put upon the country; and yet we find that its promoters and those who profited by it, who have had their bank accounts swelled with the stealings they took from thousands of the American people, yet live unassailed by the law, the only punishment they receive being the curses of their victims and the execrations of every honest and law-abiding man and woman.

What this country needs more than anything else is a President who is not dependent upon the great money power of the country for his election, and will not make promises, under cover or otherwise, for the purpose of receiving the support of the bankers, the great commercial speculators, and the promoters of trusts; a President who will feel that it is as much of a crime to rob the people of $500,000,000 in the way of watered stock as it is to rob some poor man of his purse or to steal a horse from the barn of some farmer.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I am as pronounced a bimetallist as any man in the United States. I live in the greatest silver-producing State in the country. I realized that the free coinage of silver would not only bring prosperity to the farmers and the workingmen as well as the business men of the country, but that it would bring additional prosperity to the people whom I in part represent. I realize, Mr. President, that the immensely increased production of gold has to a great degree filled the gap that was made when the coinage of silver was practically suspended. It is proof, to my mind, of the truth of the quantitative theory of money. I realize also that by one means or another the people of the country have been induced to pronounce against—I will not say bimetallism, but against the free coinage of silver at the old-time ratio. Even the people of Colorado realize that the proposition of 16 to 1 has for the time been decided against them, but it does not follow that by reason of that belief they will throw themselves unreservedly into the arms of either the bank syndicates or the creators of trusts or those who are spending their lives in organizing monopolies, in order that they may secure the money with which to conduct an aggressive campaign.

I am glad, Mr. President, with my views upon the money question, that there is yet a man in the West with power and virtue and influence enough to make himself felt, and to utter a protest against whatever tendency there may be now, or in the future, to surrender the party, of which I am honored in calling myself a member, to those who go from one side of the political teeter to the other as their interests—their own interests, not the interests of the country—may incline them.

Mr. President, I regard the Democratic convention of 1896 as a magnificent protest against the cruelty and encroachment of the money power. As a result of the Administration of Mr. Cleveland many of the Southern Senators commenced to doubt their ability to maintain their seats in this Chamber and the continued supremacy of the Democratic party in their States. I recollect exceedingly well, as the result of Mr. Cleveland's Republican Administration, Democratic ascendency was almost lost in Alabama, in Arkansas, in Georgia, and in South Carolina.

In South Carolina, to maintain possession of that State, under the lead of TILLMAN and others the Democrats were compelled to organize the Democratic party along Populistic lines. The Democratic campaign of 1896 was a magnificent protest. Tell me it has not resulted in good! If Mr. Cleveland had been renominated in 1896, or if any Democrat representing the Cleveland theory of Democratic politics had been then nominated, instead of receiving more than 7,000,000 Democratic votes in the United States the Democratic candidate would not have received one-half of them, and a number of Southern States would have gone against the Democratic nominee. The Democratic party would pretty nearly have gone out of business if it had not been for the platform of 1896 and the magnificent leadership that that convention gave to the common people of the country.

No one recognizes more than I do that measures can not and may not always be kept at the front. No one realizes more than I do that the verdict of the American people, when it has been freely spoken and unquestionably given, should be respected; and whatever measure I have advocated—distinguishing measures from principles—whenever the people of the country have finally declared against a measure, I care not whether it is for the free coinage of silver at whatever ratio, or for any other measure, then the party is worse than insane that insures defeat by continuing to advocate the measure that is against the declared convictions of the country.

It is not wise, Mr. President, nor is it productive of results, for any party to destroy its usefulness in behalf of great measures constantly arising by standing for measures and insisting upon the enactment of laws when the people have clearly permanently taken an adverse position against them. Without reference to how other men may be guided, I will be guided in my future political course, so far as measures are concerned, by the recognition of that proposition in all of its fullness.

There is a wide difference between measures and principles. It is for that reason that the Democratic party, through evil report and good report, through disaster and through success, has after the sober second thought of the American people made itself felt, stands to-day undismayed as a national political organization, ready to meet its political antagonist with reasonably strong hopes of success; with a conviction that success will come if the party remains true to the principles upon which it was founded, that all men are created equal, that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; standing in business for the open door of opportunity to the young and the old, to the rich and the poor; standing opposed through good and evil report to the new system that prevents competition, the business principle upon which the world has grown and prospered, and from the existence of which this country became the greatest commercial power upon the face of the globe, and standing opposed to the trust principle, that places monopoly in the hands of the individual and compels the many to be the slaves of the few.

Within the past few months, Mr. President, I have heard men upon this side and upon the other deprecate the growth of socialism. The policy of the Republican party is the provocation of socialism. The multiplication of trusts, the increase of their power, the placing of the monopoly of all the great industries in the hands of the few is a sure step, if it shall succeed, to an effort upon the part of those who oppose private monopoly to put the monopoly in the hands of the Government. If the monopoly is held by individuals or combinations, it means that their private greed and individual interests will determine prices and production and distribution. If the Government shall control the implements of production, at least the people of the country will have a voice and an influence in the matter of the creation and distribution of the wealth labor creates.

So far as I am concerned, I feel with those who oppose socialism, that it is the greatest evil with which the country could be inflicted. I am pained at its growth and realize that its growth will continue until the provocation to the growth shall be eliminated from our industrial system. For that reason, if for no other, it is my supreme conviction that the strongest laws which the country can enact and all the great powers of the Government should be placed at the disposal of the executive arm for the purpose of throttling the trust system, putting it out of commission, that competition, either great or small, between the small industries or great industries may once more have full sway; that the young and the old, the weak and the strong, may realize that the field of commercial conquest is open to them, and that they shall not be compelled, during their short term of life, either to get within the magic circle of the few trust magnates, which it is almost impossible to do, or content themselves with being the mere hired hands of the great combinations of capital.

Mr. President, so far as the prosperity of the present day is concerned I think we may say it is on the ebb. Business has its ebb and its flow; it has its high tide and its low tide; and I am inclined to think that the prosperity of the country is now on the ebb. To what extent the tide may lower I do not know, but we do realize that there are plainly heard mutterings of discontent on the part of the employers in the West and in the East. In the mills of textile fabrics, the woolen mills, in coal mines, in the steel mills, and in those devoted to every other industry we find the announcements being made that wages must be lowered; and the process of lowering wages is going on.

I clipped from yesterday's Post an Associated Press dispatch of the meeting of the coal operators and miners at Indianapolis, and I found that the matter of difference was that the mine operators or owners were insisting upon a 12 per cent decrease in wages and the miners were insisting that the wages were little enough. This is a statement of the differences between them:

> There was great excitement among the delegates when it was seen that the moment for a declaration of a disagreement had arrived. The scale committee had reported the present wage scale as their ultimatum, and the operators insisted that nothing less than the 1902 scale, which is equivalent to a 12 per cent reduction in wages, it is claimed, would satisfy them.

These are the grounds given by the operators for the lowering of the wages: That the wages have already been lowered in other mining localities, and therefore, if they would operate at a profit, they must also have lower wages. This same Associated Press dispatch states the claims of the two sides as follows:

> They use the statement that the H. C. Frick Coal and Coke Company, operating in the Connellsville field, in Pennsylvania; the Jamison Coal and Coke Company, of Greensburg, Pa.; the Meyersdale district operators, and the Pocahontas Coal Company, in West Virginia, have all reduced wages in the last month, and they insist that they must have a lower mining rate with which to meet this competition.
> The grounds upon which the miners take their stand is that the competition of the operators in the central competitive field and those outside is not as keen as the operators would have them believe. The miners say that, at least in Ohio and Pennsylvania, their men have not steady work, and that all over the central competitive field the cost of living is such at this time that they can not accept a cut in wages and maintain a fair standard of living.

So we find that as the net results of the year 1903, the year that is just behind us, business stagnation is commencing, the wages of the workmen are being cut, involving more than seventy-five or a hundred thousand in the mills of New England, and the cut is not confined to the cotton mills, for it extends to the woolen mills and to the paper mills. Wages are being cut, or there is a threat that they will be, by the steel trust. Notices are given by the railroads that their operating expenses must be reduced, including as their managers declare, a cut in wages; and here are 117,000 bituminous coal miners on the verge of a strike because of the insistence on a reduction of 12 per cent in their wages, while they assert the cost of living has not diminished in the least.

Yesterday's Post was rather instructive. There was another Associated Press dispatch which illustrates the extent to which the robbery of the trusts has gone, and that the thief has even entered the ranks of those who, if they do not abet them, at least apologize for them, and that they have been pretty heavily mulcted in losses. I find by an Associated Press dispatch of Wednesday that in New York—

> Governor Odell and other up-State Republican leaders, who were induced to invest large sums in the bonds of the United States Shipbuilding Company, have decided to begin a fight against Charles M. Schwab, Max Pam, and others connected with the concern.

It continues:

> One of the shipbuilding victims was Reuben L. Fox, of the Republican State committee. Mr. Fox is one of Mr. Lauderbach's clients. He got caught for $10,000 of the shipbuilding bonds. Governor Odell paid over $180,000 in real cash for $200,000 of the bonds.

Mr. President, while all this is going on the machinery of the criminal law is idle. Either there is no law to reach these mammoth swindles and the law is confined in its operations to the miniature get-rich-quick concerns, or else the power of money, the great money combinations, are able to paralyze not only the law, but the arms of those whose sworn duty it is to execute the law.

Taking it all in all I am inclined to think that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] should remodel his beautifully painted picture of yesterday. At least with his master hand he should limn in the picture the trusts when they receive the additional prosperity his bill is intended to give to them. I think it would be better for the cause of truth if he would paint prosperity in its truer light, showing that while the farmer is prosperous it is not because of the tariff schedules, but because of bright skies, bountiful showers, and propitious seasons, and the demands both at home and abroad, he being the agency through which this demand is supplied.

As to the prosperity that has fallen to others of the masses, there has been an increase in wages, but there has also been an increase in the cost of living. Few of the mere laborers and mechanics of the country have reached the point—even during the past few years—when ninety days' idleness would not make them a charge upon the community in which they live. The real beneficariies of the so-called prosperity, Mr. President, are the millionaires and the multimillionaires, the speculators, those who are able to float—with the aid of the wind that is injected into them—these great industrial bubbles, and by speculating them upon the markets tranfer the money of the masses into their own pockets.

I trust, Mr. President, the Democratic party will nominate a candidate for the Presidency, whoever he may be, who will not be tainted with a suspicion of an alliance with combinations of that character. I stand for the protection of the rich as well as the poor. Honest capital should be just as sacred, whether it be in large sums or in small sums, under a Democratic Administration as under a Republican Administration; but these abnormalities of capital consolidated for the purpose of dishonestly transferring the earnings of honest toil to their own bank accounts should be taught, both by laws upon the statute books and to be enacted, that a great thief is no more to be respected than a little thief, and any swindle, whether it is by floating a ship-building trust or a steel trust, will be visited by the arm of the criminal law as surely and as speedily as a swindle that consists in selling a brass ring for a gold one or a piece of cut glass for a diamond of the purest water.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the pending amendment in order? which question has been submitted to the Senate. Senators in favor of sustaining the point of order will say "aye." [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it. The "noes" have it, and the point of order is overruled by the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I accept this vote, of course, as indicating that the Senate favors the amendment. It is understood by every Senator that the vote was decisive of that question, and I shall not delay the Senate any longer.

I do, however, desire to repeat what I have said before, that if this is a proper object for the use of governmental funds, they ought to be applied as they are applied in other instances of governmental work. It ought to be a direct appropriation and not a loan. The fact that the committee has made it a loan rather than a direct appropriation strongly suggests to my mind that the committee was not entirely satisfied that it was altogether a suitable project for the expenditure of the public money. If it is the duty of this Government to aid these expositions and to see that they are made successful, then the Government ought to give that aid, as it does in all of its other expenditures, by direct appropriation. I should very much prefer, if compelled to vote for either proposition, to vote for a direct application of the money as we do to other useful public works.

However, the debate indicates, of course, that the Senate is determined to extend the aid in this way, and I do, as I can only do, protest against it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am in favor of assisting the St. Louis Exposition to get in condition to make a reasonable and proper showing, partly because it is an American exposition and partly because we have so connected ourselves with it that it seems to me it would be somewhat discreditable to let it fail.

I agree thoroughly with the Senator from Texas that if this is—and I think it is—a proper occasion for an appropriation of public money, it ought to be not as a loan, but as a gift. While I am not averse to seeing the Government reimbursed—as it may be, I suppose, as a stockholder in this concern—I should infinitely prefer to see the $4,600,000 made a donation than to have a precedent established that this Government has become a loaner of money. I am a member of the committee which reported this amendment. I expressed, very briefly, such an opinion in the committee. I do not now wish to be considered as interfering with or in any way delaying this appropriation, except to enter my protest against the method in which it will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have listened to the political debate which has been going on. I am somewhat averse to the discussion of political affairs on an appropriation bill, and for that reason only did I refrain from replying to some of the erroneous statements made on the other side of the Chamber. I wish to say that I shall take the opportunity some day, when a bill less important than an appropriation bill is up, to show that the disturbed financial condition of the country under Mr. Cleveland's Administration did not arise from any tariff legislation by the party then in power, but that the trouble had commenced before he was elected, as can be shown by the revenues of the Government. But I will not attempt to do that this morning.

NATURALIZATION OF PORTO RICANS.

Mr. SPOONER. Some days ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 2345) to make applicable the provisions of the United States naturalization law to Porto Rico, and for other purposes. I have looked into the bill. I had no objections to it so far as it applied to Porto Rico, but I had some doubts about extending it elsewhere. I have looked carefully into it and had a conference with the Secretary of War about it, and I have no objection to it. I therefore ask leave to withdraw the motion which I then entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the bill stands passed.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor was announced as the first bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest, although perhaps the Senator from Indiana was going to make the same suggestion, as he and I have conferred about it, that this is a bill which will lead to strong opposition and very considerable debate, which it can not have under Rule VIII, and if it goes over under Rule IX, as it will on an objection, some time we can agree when it shall come up and have the matter brought before the Senate, so that there can be full debate, consideration, and amendments matured for it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I realize fully that one objection carries the bill over. The Senator's suggestion is not quite so definite as I wish he were able to make it.

This, Mr. President, is a matter of very great importance. Our failure to provide suitable buildings for the proper accommodation of the business of the Government in Washington is an absolute shame. There is no great business organization in the country, there is scarcely a municipality or a State, that does not provide relatively more ample accommodations for the public business than we do for the transaction of the business of the Government in the national capital. Of course the question will lead to discussion, but unless we begin the debate we will never reach a conclusion. A bill similar to the one upon the Calendar was presented last session and went over upon the Senator's objection.

The committee is not wedded to any particular measure. If there is any better proposition than the one it has presented, it is quite willing to accept that. What it wants is to secure some additional accommodations for the three great Departments—State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor—and speedily. It is impossible to exaggerate the necessity of doing so. It is in the interest of the public service, and we should not delay unduly. Unless action is had at an early date, it is perfectly obvious to the Senator that the bill must fail at the present session of Congress. I appeal to him to enable us to expedite this matter as much as possible. We want the Senator and those who may share in his view to be heard to the fullest extent possible, but we do wish they would permit us to take up the bill at some early date.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am not going into the reasons why this great project will be thoroughly resisted in every way, because it is now in the way of doing the business of considering unobjected cases, in which many members of the Senate have an interest. The rule provides that a single objection carries it to the Calendar under Rule IX. That Calendar, like any other business, is subject to the action of the Senate in being taken up and considered.

All I want is that this measure shall take the course that everything else has under Rule IX. I can not agree to any time when it shall be taken up, because I am not in favor of expediting it, but I am in favor now of getting it out of the way, so that we may go on and consider, under the suggestion made the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the unobjected cases, and thereby relieve Senators from the necessity of continually getting up and asking unanimous consent. So my objection simply carries it to the Calendar under Rule IX, and it must take its course there.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am quite aware of the effect of the objection of the Senator, as I said before.

Mr. HALE. I can not agree now on any time, and, in fact, that would be improper in regard to a measure of this kind when so many other great public matters are before the Senate.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply desire to make an appeal to the Senator to see if he will not consult his convenience a little later and enable us to agree on some time for taking it up.

Mr. HALE. I think quite likely that that may be done, but I do not wish to bind myself in a promise. Let the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX, and then let us proceed with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

FISH HATCHERY IN OREGON.

The bill (S. 1607) granting to the State of Oregon certain lands to be used by it for the purpose of maintaining and operating thereon a fish hatchery was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, before the word "years," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described premises, to wit: The southeast quarter of section 19, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 30, all in township 2 north, of range 41 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, be, and the same are hereby, granted to the State of Oregon, for the use of said State in maintaining and operating thereon a fish hatchery: Provided, That in case said State of Oregon shall at any time for a period of five years fail to maintain and operate a fish hatchery on said premises, or on some part thereof, then the grant hereinbefore made of said premises to said State shall terminate, and said premises, and the whole thereof, shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to ascertain and determine whether or not such hatchery is being maintained and operated on said premises, and if he shall at any time determine that, for a period of two years subsequent to the passage of this act, the State of Oregon has failed to maintain and operate a fish hatchery on said premises, he shall make and enter an order of record in his Department to that effect, and directing the restoration of said premises, and the whole thereof, to the public domain, and such order shall be final and conclusive, and thereupon and thereby said premises shall be restored to the public domain and freed from the operation of the grant aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF DARIUS B. RANDALL.

The bill (S. 1537) to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $2,400 to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements situated on the Nez Percé Indian Reservation relinquished by said deceased to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé tribe of Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report of the committee be read. It is a very short one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, January 7, 1904, which report is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1537) to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians, having considered the same, beg to report as follows:

The amount to be paid to the heirs of Mr. Randall was recommended to be paid by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs many years ago, but for various reasons the money was not appropriated. A full statement of the case is contained in a communication transmitted to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior.

Your committee concur in the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior and recommend the passage of the bill.

The communications from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 26, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference of the 5th instant, of S. 3622, "A bill to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians."

In response thereto I transmit herewith a copy of a report of the 21st instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and its inclosure.

The Commissioner's report shows that this claim was favorably considered by his Office in 1879 and that he now recommends the passage of the bill.

The recommendation of the Commissioner meets with my approval.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 21, 1902.

SIR: This office is in receipt, by Department reference, for report, of S. 3622, a bill to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians, referred to the Department with request for a report thereon by Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill appropriates $3,161, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements situated on the Nez Percé Indian Reservation, relinquished by said deceased to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé tribe of Indians.

Under date of January 8, 1879, this office made report upon a communication from Senator ALLISON, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 681, to provide for the payment of Loyal C. Brown, administrator of the estate of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians, in which the Commissioner said:

"I am convinced that justice and good faith require the payment of compensation in the premises, and the only remaining question relates to the sum which should be allowed therefor. In the absence of a formal appraisement of the improvements of Mr. Randall, I am of the opinion that the sum of $1,500, as finally fixed by Messrs. Shanks and Monteith, should be adopted as the correct valuation."

He therefore recommended the passage of the bill when amended by striking out the sum of $3,161 and inserting in lieu thereof $1,500, with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from August 4, 1873, until paid.

It is not found that the Senate committee made any report on this bill, but on January 31, 1879, a report was made on a similar bill in the House of Representatives (H. R. Report No. 87, Forty-fifth Congress, third session), which recommended the passage of the bill with an amendment reducing the amount to $1,575, that sum to be deducted from the last of twenty installments to be paid the Nez Percé under the fifth article of the treaty of 1855. (12 Stats., 957.)

The twenty installments under said treaty have long since been paid. As the amount fixed in the present bill is less than the amount recommended in office report of January 8, 1879, with the interest therein recommended to be paid, this office recommends the passage of the bill.

A copy of said office report of January 8, 1879, is inclosed herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. C. TONNER, Acting Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 8, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for your consideration, a copy of a communication, dated the 3d instant, addressed to this office by Hon. W. B. ALLISON, chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 681, "to provide for the payment of Loyal P. Brown, administrator of the estate of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians," together with a copy of a written assignment of said improvements, dated August 4, 1873, given by Randall to Agent Monteith; also said agent's receipt therefor bearing the same date, and a letter from this office, dated February 18, 1875, to Hon. J. W. Nesmith.

Senator ALLISON requests the opinion of the Department upon the propriety of the passage of said bill, involving the inquiry whether any, and if any, what compensation should be allowed for said improvements.

I have the honor to report thereon as follows:

The eighth article of the treaty of June 9, 1863, with the Nez Percé Indians (14 Stat., 651) provides, among other things, for the establishment of necessary roads and highways upon the reservation belonging to said Indians and of hotels or stage stands at suitable and necessary points along said roads, the establishment and control of the latter to rest with the agent or superintendent, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

No such rules and regulations seem to have been prescribed until 1874, on the 21st of January, of which year those now in force were approved by the Secretary.

Under the foregoing treaty provisions and in pursuance of permission from Indian agents, Mr. Randall went upon said reservation, established a hotel and stage stand, known as the "Twelve-Mile House," on the Florence road, and made valuable improvements in connection therewith.

In 1873 Hons. J. P. C. Shanks, T. W. Bennett, and H. W. Reed were appointed a special commission to examine into the condition and wants of the Nez Percé Indians, and in their report, dated July 1 of that year, recommended, among other things, the removal of white settlers from their reservation.

Subsequently Messrs. Shanks, Bennett, and Agent Monteith called upon Randall and requested him to vacate his premises, assuring him that he should be compensated for his improvements. Acting upon this assurance he promptly delivered possession thereof to said agent on the 4th of August, 1873, giving the written assignment and taking the receipt hereinbefore stated.

It seems to have been agreed at such interview and when the improvements of Mr. Randall were turned over to said agent that the value thereof was $2,400 and that this sum should be the measure of the compensation allowed therefor. Agent Monteith reports, however, under date of November 23, 1874, that after said interview and delivery of possession he and Mr. Shanks, believing that their former estimate was too high, reduced it to $1,500, which sum it was agreed that the latter should report for payment. I am unable to find, however, any report from Mr. Shanks in relation thereto upon the files of this office.

In a report to this office from Agent Monteith, dated August 6, 1873, he inclosed a statement of Randall's improvements, in which their value was given at $1,575, but whether this sum was the agent's own estimate does not clearly appear.

On the 26th of January, 1875, this office made a report to the Department recommending the allowance of compensation for said improvements and submitting a draft in duplicate of a bill for that purpose, embracing also provision for another similar claim. Such duplicate drafts were submitted January 27, 1875, by the honorable Secretary to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, but this office is not advised of any action having been taken by Congress thereupon.

Inspector Watkins, in a report upon the condition and administration of the Indian service upon said reservation, dated August 2, 1877, expresses his conviction that said claim ought to be paid, and recommended that an appropriation be asked therefor.

I am convinced that justice and good faith require the payment of compensation in the premises, and the only remaining question relates to the sum which should be allowed therefor. In the absence of a formal appraisement of the improvements of Mr. Randall, I am of the opinion that the sum of $1,500, as finally fixed by Messrs. Shanks and Monteith, should be adopted as the correct valuation.

I have, therefore, the honor to recommend the passage of said bill when amended as follows:

In line 3 strike out "$3,161" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500, with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from August 4, 1873, until paid."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not ask for the reading of the letters. They merely show that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are in favor of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senate has passed a similar bill two or three times already.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so; if not, it ought to have done so.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRANT STATION BUILDINGS AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The bill (S. 1278) to provide for the erection of buildings for an immigrant station at the port of San Francisco, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed on lands now belonging to the United States at the port of San Francisco, Cal., the buildings necessary for an immigrant station, at a cost not exceeding $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DETENTION OF SEAMEN'S CLOTHING.

The bill (S. 3118) to amend the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners,' approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend so much of the act approved February 18, 1895, as reads "shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $100," so as to read "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500, or both."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is the report in that case long?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it is a short report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Commerce, January 7, 1904:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject-matter was referred, report the bill (S. 3118) to amend the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners,' approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes."

This bill is reported as a substitute for S. 2308, which was referred to this committee and by it referred to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for his views. This substitute was suggested by that official, as will appear by his letter annexed hereto, which letter, together with others, also annexed, will sufficiently explain the necessity for the proposed legislation.

The committee recommend that the bill pass.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 18, 1903.

SIR: The Department has received your letter of the 12th instant, inclosing S. 2308, entitled "A bill to amend the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes,' with the request to furnish your committee with such suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The purpose of the bill is to provide a more effective remedy against the illegal detention of seamen's clothing. The action under existing law is for a penalty, not a criminal action, and a warrant can not issue. The Department favors the purpose of the bill.

The bill referred, however, reenacts entire the act of February 18, 1895, in order to make the amendment mentioned. The application of that act, however, in various particulars, has been modified by later legislation, particularly by the seamen's act of December 21, 1898.

To reenact the act of February 18, 1895, entire, without regard to subsequent legislation, might raise questions foreign to the purpose of Senate bill 2308. The Department submits, accordingly, a substitute for Senate bill 2308, covering only the specific purpose proposed and involving no other matters, and recommends its passage.

Respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., November 23, 1903.

SIR: I beg to inclose herewith, for the information of your committee, a copy of a letter dated the 17th instant, from the United States attorney for the eastern district of New York, suggesting an amendment of the law so as to make the detention of seamen's clothing a misdemeanor, together with a copy of an act which he has drafted for that purpose.

Respectfully,

W. A. DAY,
Acting Attorney-General.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., November 17, 1903.

SIR: I am continually having trouble with the boarding-house keepers who detain seamen's clothing.

Chapter 97 of the laws of February 18, 1895, provided, among other things, "That the clothing of any seamen shall be exempt from attachment and that any person who shall detain such clothing when demanded by the owner shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $100."

It has been the custom of this office for years to have such boarding-house keeper arrested, when he or she detained such seaman's clothing; and acting under instructions from your Department, I procured some time ago a complaint to be made against a boarding-house keeper, and took it before Mr. Commissioner Benedict and applied for a warrant. He came to the conclusion, after examining the law, that a warrant could not issue, as the law provided for an action for a penalty and not for a crime. I then took the matter to Judge Thomas, and after reading the law over, he, too, decided that it was an action for a penalty and not a criminal action.

This morning four sailors came in whose clothing has been detained, and I have issued a summons against the boarding-house keeper. The result of this probably will be that when the time comes to try the action these sailors will be off on the sea, and the action will lie here for years without being tried, simply because we will not be able to get the witnesses to try it.

I think that this statute should be amended to provide that any person detaining a seaman's clothing shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and I am taking the liberty of inclosing you a copy of a bill to that effect.

I am, sir, yours, with great respect,

WM. J. YOUNG, United States Attorney.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT TILLAMOOK BAY, OREGON.

The bill (S. 2698) to establish a life-saving station at or near the entrance to Tillamook Bay, Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a life-saving station at or near the entrance to Tillamook Bay, on the coast of Oregon, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS AT TACOMA AND SEATTLE.

The bill (S. 2815) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, and repealing all laws inconsistent therewith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the annual salaries to be paid to the deputy collectors of customs of each of the United States subports, Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, shall be determined and fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who may raise and lower the same at his discretion as the business of the ports shall warrant; such salaries, however, not to exceed the sum of $2,500 each per annum.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] if a similar bill did not pass the Senate at the last session of the last Congress?

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. Yes; it passed the Senate at a former session, but it did not pass the House.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it the same bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. It is the same bill.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no change in it?

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. None.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read; it will take only a minute; it is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Commerce, January 7, 1904:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2815) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, and repealing all laws inconsistent therewith, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass without amendment.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 21, 1903.

SIR: Replying to a letter from the clerk of the Committee on Commerce, dated the 19th instant, inclosing copy of S. 2815, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, I have the honor to advise you that the passage of said bill will meet with my approval.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 9319) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak.; and

A bill (H. R. 3578) to authorize the Mercantile Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of North Charleroi, Washington County, to a point in Rostraver Township, Westmoreland County.

The bill (H. R. 1909) to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 5511) to authorize registers and receivers of United States land offices to furnish transcripts of their records to individuals was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 11128) to modify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Devils Lake Reservation, in North Dakota, to accept and ratify the same as amended, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT ON AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the annual report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, which includes a report on the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations in the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, in accordance with the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the said fiscal year.

The attention of the Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 5,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1904.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in a little doubt as to the reference of the message to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It transmits the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 5,000 copies shall be printed for the Agricultural Department in addition to the usual number to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the message of the President and the accompanying papers be printed as a Senate document, and that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing to determine about the extra copies. It is just the same as if it was an annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture that is sent here. It would be ordered printed and the usual number of copies would be printed, and then extra copies could be ordered afterwards

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the message and the accompanying papers be printed as a Senate document, and then referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then refer it with the request for extra copies to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. TELLER. I have diligently listened, but I am unable to know what is going on. I should like to know what the message is and what the documents are. We can not hear back here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President has sent to the Senate the report of all the experiment stations in the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Agricultural experiment stations?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The annual report.

Mr. SPOONER. Ought not the message and report to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the whole matter be printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the usual custom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves a reference to the Committee on Printing, because the President at the same time states that the Secretary of Agriculture desires to have 5,000 copies printed for the use of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM. That part of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The request for 5,000 copies.

Mr. TELLER. Will not the message go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is just the same as if the Secretary of Agriculture had sent in his annual report. This is the annual report of the Office of Experiment Stations. We simply receive it, and an order is made to print it, and under that order the usual number of copies, 1,700, are printed.

Mr. SPOONER. That leaves it in a condition ready to have extra copies printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. After that we pass a resolution providing how many copies shall be printed for distribution. This is just the same case. The Secretary of Agriculture asks that 5,000 copies be printed for his use. The Senate has no authority by a separate resolution to order 5,000 copies, as it will cost over $500 to print it, and we refer that part of the message to the Committee on Printing to consider the propriety of printing that number.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that it ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and not to the Committee on Printing. The message, so far as that suggestion is concerned, ought to go to the committee that will have the Agricultural appropriation bill before it. I do not mean that all the bundle of papers on the desk of the presiding officer shall go there. I think the motion of the Senator from Missouri as to those is all right, but it seems to me that the message itself should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that they may, when they bring in the agricultural appropriation bill, provide for it. That is the proper place to provide for it, it appears to me.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, the printing is always done separately. It is rare that on a regular appropriation bill any provision is ever made for printing a document. They are brought before the Senate on the report of the Committee on Printing, and the Senate orders the publication. There is a general fund for the payment of the printing. I think we would be more apt to get extra copies by letting it go to the Committee on Printing, as is usual in all such cases.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the message goes to both Houses. Does it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not necessarily so. This message would not go to both Houses.

Mr. TELLER. Not necessarily, but I should say that might be the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should think not. The annual report is sometimes sent to the Senate and sometimes to the House. Only one body orders it printed as a document, under the general rule.

Mr. TELLER. What I am anxious about is that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have this printing done, if he wants it done. That is about all I care in regard to the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think to let it go to the Committee on Printing would be a safer way to get it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me that if this report, which on its face would purport to be the results achieved in a scientific way by the experiments made at the various experiment stations which are conducted under Government patronage, involves or embraces anything that is valuable, and I have no doubt it is valuable or it would not come here, and the reports of experiment stations are always valuable to farmers, it ought to be printed in some kind of a permanent shape. To have it printed as an ordinary document, as a pamphlet, means its speedy destruction, and is practically a waste of public money.

If we have not any general law which provides for the publication of this report, like we have for the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture, it does look to me as though it is time there should be some provision of law under which such material as this shall be printed. It is the result of the scientific corps who are employed all over the United States at the various State experiment stations and who have been engaged in obtaining this information. It seems to me that this data, these facts, these experiments, should be put in a permanent shape, and that there should be a provision of law which would enable it to be done without this kind of a proceeding every year.

I suggest, as a farmer knowing something of the value of those experiments, that this message, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to determine what shall be done with it in the way of publication and what the form of that publication shall be. We all know the immense demand for the Yearbook of the Agricultural Department. I could very readily dispose of, and our farmers would be glad to get, 20,000 copies. My quota is some six or seven hundred copies, I think——

Mr. COCKRELL. Eleven hundred.

Mr. TILLMAN. And the entire State gets only some three or four thousand all told.

Now, this is equally as valuable and in some respects it is a more valuable document than the Yearbook, and I make a motion that these papers be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not prevent the publication of this document in the usual way, and just precisely as the Agricultural Report is printed. This is taking the exact course every public document that is printed for distribution takes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the Yearbook printed in this way?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Yearbook takes just the same course. We have 1,700 copies of the Yearbook printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. And then we have some 300,000 copies printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. We then pass a separate resolution authorizing the printing of a certain number of extra copies, so many for the Senate and so many for the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. TILLMAN. What I am after is enough copies. The trouble is to get enough of these reports printed. The Department of Agriculture asks for 5,000. Will Senators have none?

Mr. SPOONER. That question is not involved in the motion to print as a Senate document.

Mr. COCKRELL. What I moved was the usual, ordinary, orderly way of printing a public document. We order it printed. Seventeen hundred copies of all of them—of our bills and our reports and everything of the kind—are printed, and they are distributed to different places.

Mr. CULLOM. Under the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. But they are in pamphlet form. They are not bound in cloth.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a separate proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have stated that they are distributed all around to the different offices. Some go to the heads of Departments; they go to the committees and all that in an unbound form. They are not bound.

Mr. CULLOM. They have paper backs.

Mr. TILLMAN. Simply in pamphlet form.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; in pamphlet form. When that has been done Congress authorizes the publication of additional volumes, to be bound or not to be bound, just as the resolution authorizing them may direct.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who will determine how many copies shall be printed—the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Printing; that is the committee which reports back here on the question.

Mr. BATE. And after the report is made the Senate may amend it and order as many copies as it chooses.

Mr. COCKRELL. When the report comes here the Senate can double, or quadruple, or quintuple the number. What I propose is simply what has been done ten thousand times here by the Senate in an orderly way.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to make my friend's hair stand up any straighter, and I shall have to subside.

Mr. BATE. It seems to me that the whole object can be accomplished by sending the message to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. They would report back here and ask the Senate to authorize the printing. All that can be done by send ing it to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the exact proposition of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. To print the usual number in the usual way, and then a resolution to print 5,000 copies for the Secretary of Agriculture to go to the Committee on Printing, and when the Committee on Printing reports a resolution to print 5,000 copies for the Secretary of Agriculture, if the committee does not amend it so as to provide for printing some additional copies, I shall move that additional copies shall be printed both for the Senate and House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the papers, after they have been printed as a Senate document, go to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. COCKRELL. Only on the request of the Secretary of Agriculture. They go to the Public Printer and are printed just like any other documents that are sent there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the message of the President will go, of course, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. The message will go to the Committee on Printing, because the President makes a request for the printing of 5,000 extra copies, and we can not order that printing without the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order made is that the message of the President shall be referred to the Committee on Printing, and that the message and the papers accompanying the message shall be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that the maps and the illustrations shall also be printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; they all go together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order is made.

The resolution referred to the Committee on Printing was reduced to writing, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the Annual Report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

LINUS S. LUDINGTON.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3738) granting an increase of pension to Linus S. Ludington.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "Artillery," to insert "Heavy;" in line 8, after the word "Veteran," to strike out "Volunteer," and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Linus S. Ludington, late of Company G, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and One hundred and nineteenth Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to satisfactorily adjust and determine all differences between the United States and Colombia growing out of the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. MALLORY. The several serious questions, Mr. President, which have arisen out of our recent negotiations with Colombia and the more recent insurrection on the Isthmus of Panama have been discussed in the press of the country, in the other body of Congress, and in this body very effectually, and much to the enlightenment of the public. I scarcely think that anything I can say will change the opinion of anyone who has given close attention to the debate and has informed himself of the facts connected with the subject.

But I conceive it to be my duty, inasmuch as in my capacity as a member of this body I will be called upon to ultimately act on this subject, to give a brief narrative of the facts, to state my conclusion on those facts, and present the decision which I have reached thereon as to the action which I shall take regarding it.

Mr. President, when this Senate adjourned last March the most important of its acts accomplished was the ratification on the 17th of that month of the convention commonly known as the "Hay-Herran treaty," whereby for divers considerations the Republic of Colombia granted to the United States the right to construct, operate, and control a ship canal across Colombian territory in the Department of Panama, to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Enough has been said on this floor of the monumental and epoch-making character of the undertaking to which this Government was committed by that treaty to render unnecessary further reference to those considerations. It suffices to say that its ratification was accepted by the great majority of the people of this country as the beginning of the realization of a deeply cherished national hope that had been long deferred, and as the first practical step toward a consummation that would unfetter the trade and commerce of the world, open an indispensable avenue of communication between our Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and give us a strategic advantage of inestimable value should we unhappily ever become involved in war with one or more of the world's great powers.

It was generally understood in this country at that time, and correctly so, I believe, that the negotiations which led up to the formulation of that convention were sought for and initiated by Colombia, that her propositions with slight modifications were accepted by our Department of State, and that in ratifying it without amendment this Senate assented to concessions to Colombia in some particulars that strained to the limit the bounds of prudence and a just appreciation of the interests of the United States.

I think I can, without impropriety, express the belief, Mr. President, that the conviction that Colombia in initiating negotiations and making her proposals was sincerely desirous of speedily effecting a treaty which would be just and honorable to both nations, and that our unqualified acceptance of terms far less favorable to the United States than we could wish would secure its prompt ratification by the Colombian Congress, had a most potent influence in shaping opinion in this country and in securing almost unanimously favorable action by this body on that series of exceptionally important propositions.

The treaty so ratified was duly submitted to the Colombian Congress, which assembled at Bogota on June 20, 1903, and President Marroquin, by whose solicitation our Department of State was induced to listen to Colombia's overtures, delivered a message in which he perfunctorily expressed the opinion that it was the interest of Colombia that a canal should be constructed by the United States through her territory, but congratulated himself that the immense responsibility of coming to a decision in this particular case fell not on him, but on the Colombian Congress.

In brief, after having been the prime factor in persuading the United States to commit herself to a preference for the Panama route and to terms that we were led by him to believe were acceptable to Colombia, the Chief Executive of that State coolly remitted the whole matter to a Congress that was utterly ignorant of or indifferent to the transcendent importance of the subject. If he made any serious effort to induce that Congress to treat the matter in a manner and spirit worthy a question of such dignity and of such importance to the world in general and to the United States in particular, he failed most signally to make any record of it, and we are justified in believing that he was unwilling to do so.

Yet, Mr. President, despite this remarkable conduct on the part of her Executive, it was not unreasonable to expect that, through the legislative branch of her Government, Colombia would manifest a more courteous if not a more amicable disposition toward the United States. The facts that I have recited must have been known to the members of that Congress; they could not have been ignorant of the deep concern with which the people of this country would view any essential modification of the provisions of the treaty, nor of the very natural resentment that would be aroused in the United States should it appear that in her previous negotiations with us Colombia's action had been insincere and inspired by a purpose to deceive.

To say, Mr. President, that the treaty was deliberated, on or that it received any serious consideration while awaiting action by the Colombian Congress would be a misuse of terms.

It was made to serve from time to time as a pretext for more or less lurid oratorical outbursts, by which the political enemies and supporters of Marroquin exploited their opinions of that patriot, but that it was discussed with any intention of evolving a practical conclusion, of contributing to the realization of the great beneficent international undertaking for which the treaty was framed, is incontestably disproved by authentic evidence in our possession.

With an utter disregard of the gravity of their action—and I use the expression advisedly, Mr. President—the Colombian Senate unanimously rejected the treaty in its entirety on the 12th of last August. Subsequently a committee of three senators was appointed to devise and formulate a project or scheme for a treaty which would be acceptable to Colombia, and on August 29 that committee reported the result of its labors.

The most significant features of that project were the requirement that the New Panama Canal Company, which by article 1 of the Hay-Herran treaty was authorized to sell and transfer its rights, privileges, properties, concessions, etc, to the United States without paying the Colombian Government anything for that permission, should pay therefor on making the transfer 50,000,000 francs, and, secondly, that the government building the canal should pay to Colombia upon exchange of ratifications of the treaty $20,000,000 in American gold, which was a raise of ten million on what Colombia's plenipotentiary had stipulated for in article 25 of the treaty.

The treaty provided that beginning nine years after its ratification the United States would pay to Colombia, in addition to the $10,000,000, $250,000 annually during the life of the treaty. The committee's scheme provided for an annual payment of $150,000 in gold up to 1967, inclusive, and $400,000 thereafter, with the privilege of renewing the concessions every one hundred years on increasing the annual payment 25 per cent.

It also provided for mixed tribunals for the canal zone, and made pretty much the same provisions for the preservation of peace and order and for neutrality and sovereignty as were contained in the treaty, but the duty of looking after public sanitation was reserved to Colombia. So far as the constitutional question on which was based Colombia's alleged unwillingness to surrender any sovereign right on the Isthmus was concerned, there seems to be but little difference between the provisions of the treaty and the propositions of that committee.

It would appear, therefore, that the proposed increase of pecuniary profit to Colombia embodied in the committee's scheme was efficacious in disposing of objections based on constitutional grounds.

This project or scheme was referred to another committee, which, on October 14, reported at length thereon and recommended that it be indefinitely postponed.

In its report that committee presented various arguments in support of its conclusion and submitted for consideration certain new points, which are chiefly noteworthy as revealing the committee's ignorance of or indifference to the serious character of the problem confronting it, and its purpose to "hold up" the great undertaking with the view of possibly forfeiting the property and rights of the New Panama Canal Company and compelling the United States to purchase from Colombia that property and those rights. Those new points are set forth in Senate Document No. 51, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, page 84, and are in the following language:

The Herran-Hay treaty has ceased to exist, both because of its unanimous rejection by the Senate and because the time for the exchange of its ratifications, the 22d of September, has already expired, without any extension having been provided or asked for. Consequently the state of the case is the same that it was before the conclusion of the treaty. The first condition therein established was the permission granted to the new company to transfer its rights. The Senate having refused to accept this condition, the company has remained under obligations to fulfill its contract, and the Colombian Government is still under obligations to respect all its provisions and to cause them to be respected.

How can it be asked that Congress shall enact a law of authorizations to negotiate with a foreign government when the rights and privileges of the New Panama Canal Company are still in force?

The treaty concluded April 4, 1893, which amended those of March 23, 1878, and December 10, 1890, granted to the New Panama Canal Company an extension of ten years—that is to say, until December 31, 1904. Consequently, even without a new extension, the company will be in the full enjoyment of its rights and privileges until October of the coming year. But there is another consideration: The legislative decree No. 721 of 1900 granted to the company a new extension of six years, which begins to be reckoned next year and will end October 31, 1910.

One point now remains to be examined, which has so often been discussed by the press, a point which, now that the matter is under discussion, should be defined.

Is the extension granted by that legislative decree valid or not? In the first case—that is to say, if it is considered valid—seven years must elapse before the extension expires, and therefore any law concerning authorizations seems premature, as three sessions might still be held which would be able to examine the matter and to legislate concerning it with better data and evidence than the present Congress has; and if the extension is not valid, the aspect of the question changes entirely, and the basis of discussion will be quite different.

By the 31st of October of next year—that is to say, when the next Congress shall have met in ordinary session—the extension will have expired and every privilege with it. In that case "the Republic will become the possessor and owner, without any need of a previous judicial decision and without any indemnity, of the canal itself and of the adjuncts that belong to it, according to the contracts of 1878 and 1900."

When that time arrives, the Republic, without any impediment, will be able to contract, and will be in more clear, more definite, and more advantageous possession, both legally and materially. The authorizations which would then be given by the next Congress would be very different from those that can be given by the present one.

It is seen, therefore, that it is the duty of Congress to decide, as a previous question that can not be shirked, concerning the validity of the extension granted in 1900. We venture nothing on the subject, and we respect, in advance, the decision of Congress in so delicate a matter. Supposing that it does not ratify said extension, it is well to observe now that it would be necessary to include in the budget the appropriation that would be necessary to repay to the company the sum of 5,000,000 francs with interest.

Mr. President, by article 1 of the Hay-Herran treaty Colombia, through her plenipotentiary, expressed a willingness to permit the New Panama Canal Company to transfer to the United States its rights, privileges, properties, concessions, etc., without paying Colombia one cent for that permission; by the scheme proposed by the committee, which reported on August 29, it appeared that the wisdom of the Colombian Senate, as embodied in a select committee, found that 50,000,000 francs would be a fair compensation to Colombia for granting that permission, provided the United States would also pay to Colombia $20,000,000 in American gold; while the last committee, which for divers reasons recommended the indefinite postponement of this scheme, advised a campaign of masterly inactivity, whereby at the end of a year Colombia would possibly become the owner of the canal and its adjuncts, and presumably be in a position to sell the same to the United States for at least $50,000,000—the $40,000,000 we were to pay to the New Panama Canal Company for its rights, property, concessions, etc., and the ten millions we were to pay Colombia under article 25 of the Hay-Herran treaty.

Whether this can be regarded as the high-water mark of the cupidity of Colombia's representative statesmen and the limit of their capacity to drag a great international transaction down to the moral level of a gipsy horse trade we will never know, because President Marroquin, whose enemies have never charged him with a want of perspicacity, dissolved the session of Congress on October 31, before the project of August 29 could be brought to a vote or the report of October 14 had come up for discussion.

This was the lame and impotent conclusion of our effort to secure an isthmian canal by a treaty with Colombia. The hope had been inspired by Colombia; she had led us to believe that if we would abandon the Nicaragua project she would gladly assent to the essential provisions of the convention which her plenipotentiary had signed, only to demonstrate, at last, that she was actuated by no higher motive than to wring from us the last dollar which our eager wish to secure that canal and the resources of our Treasury would enable her to extort.

Mr. President, I do not doubt the right of a sovereign state to amend or reject a treaty, even when its material provisions are the results of her own suggestions; but I affirm that in such a case her grounds of nonconcurrence must be fair and reasonable, and she can not disclose an insincere or unworthy motive for her action without giving a just cause of offense to the other high contracting party.

That I am not singular in ascribing such insincerity and unworthiness of motive to Colombia may be gathered from the utterance of Señor Caro, a prominent Colombian senator, who, in addressing the Colombian Senate on this subject, is reported by Minister Beaupré to have said:

That the minister for foreign affairs had the notes of the American minister read to the Senate, in secret session, with the object of convincing that body of the necessity of accepting the Hay-Herran treaty, in view of the menacing attitude outlined in those communications. Finding in that secret session that the Senate disapproved the treaty and was determined to act accordingly, the Government, through Senator Lorenzo Marroquin, its spokesman, obtained a resolution demanding that those notes be read in public session, with the object of making it appear that the rejection of the treaty was influenced by a sentiment of indignation at the threatening attitude assumed by the United States minister.

This comedy became known to the Government of the United States, and it has resented it.

He was not influenced, generally, by what was reported in the newspapers; but the statement universally given expression to in the press of the United States that the Washington Government resented the criticism made against the United States minister in carrying out the orders emanating both from the President and Secretary Hay can not be without foundation. This was only one instance proving that the Colombian Government had not acted in good faith in these negotiations. The refusal on the part of President Marroquin to sign the treaty before presenting it to the Senate was another.

Whatever reasons the Government adduced as to there being no necessity for such a signature was outside the point. The intention was clear that the treaty was not signed because the Government wanted to have a loophole whereby to escape their obligations to the United States. In other words, it did not want to be under the obligation of coming forward to defend and support a treaty which was signed by its order. It was bound in good faith to the United States to do so. It was for Congress alone to accept or reject it. Had such a course been followed there would have been no reason to look forward with alarm to the attitude which the United States might adopt.

The Colombian Government had nothing to fear from the United States had it clearly done all in its power in supporting the treaty. No responsibility would then have attached to this country for the rejection of the treaty by Congress, a body which had the perfect right to reject or accept as it pleased. What he feared was that the United States might take the Isthmus from us under the just plea that we had acted in bad faith with them. The only strength which a small nation has is its good faith.

Señor Caro was apparently endowed with the gift of prophecy.

The Colombian Congress adjourned sine die on October 31. During its session, and pending action on the Hay-Herran treaty, it became evident at Bogota that if the treaty were rejected the people of Panama would in all probability make a serious effort to sever their political connection with Colombia because of their practically unanimous conviction that the construction of the canal by the United States was essential to their temporal salvation.

So little of a secret, in fact, was this that the appointment by President Marroquin of Señor Obaldia, a citizen of Panama, as governor of that Department evoked a storm of adverse criticism, based on Obaldia's well-known views regarding the connection between the canal and Panama's welfare. It was even publicly discussed in the Senate, and our Secretary of State was informed by Minister Beaupré, in a dispatch dated October 21, that the minister for foreign affairs of Colombia had, on the day previous, thought proper to declare in the Senate that in case of an insurrection in Panama the United States would be bound, under the treaty of 1846, to support the Government against Panama.

That the Colombian Government was seriously impressed with the menacing aspect of affairs on the Isthmus is apparent from the fact that on the 3d of November, at 8.30 a. m., some 470 Colombian troops, destined to garrison Panama, were landed at Colon, which, added to the Government troops at that time in the city of Panama, constituted a force of about 1,000 Colombian soldiers in the two isthmian cities. On the same morning, at 10.30, the commander of the third-rate U. S. cruiser Nashville, which vessel had arrived in the harbor of Colon at 5.30 the previous evening, received the following dispatch from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, viz:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., November 3, 1903.

[Translation.]

NASHVILLE, Care American Consul, Colon:

Maintain free and uninterrupted transit. If interruption threatened by armed force, occupy the line of railroad. Prevent landing of any armed force with hostile intent, either Government or insurgent, either at Colon, Porto Bello, or other point. Send copy of instructions to the senior officer present at Panama upon arrival of Boston.

Have sent copy of instructions and have telegraphed Dixie to proceed with all possible dispatch from Kingston to Colon. Government force reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels. Prevent their landing if in your judgment this would precipitate a conflict. Acknowledgment is required.

DARLING, Acting.

The same order was, on the same date, sent to the commander of the U. S. S. Dixie, then at Kingston, Jamaca, with a battalion of marines, numbering some 400 officers and men.

Orders to the same effect were at the same time sent to the commander of the Boston, at San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua, and of the Marblehead, at Acapulco, Mexico, commanding them to proceed with all possible dispatch to Panama and to prevent the landing of any armed force, either Government or insurgent, with hostile intent within 50 miles of Panama.

At 3.40 p. m. on the same day the Acting Secretary of State sent the following telegram to our consul-general at Panama and our consul at Colon, viz:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., November 3, 1903.

Uprising on Isthmus reported. Keep Department promptly and fully informed.

LOOMIS, Acting.

And at 8.15 the same evening received the following reply, viz:

PANAMA, November 3, 1903.

No uprising yet. Reported will be in the night. Situation critical.

EHRMAN.

At 9.50, one hour and thirty-five minutes later, our Acting Secretary of State received the following dispatch, viz:

PANAMA, November 3, 1903.
(Received 9.50 p. m.)

Uprising occurred to-night, 6; no bloodshed. Army and navy officials taken prisoners. Government will be organized to-night, consisting three consuls, also cabinet. Soldiers changed. Supposed same movement will be effected in Colon. Order prevails so far. Situation serious. Four hundred soldiers landed Colon to-day Barranquilla.

EHRMAN.

It thus appears that up to 6 o'clock in the evening of Tuesday, November 3, the Colombian Government was in undisputed possession of the territory of Panama, and that her sovereignty and lawful authority over it and the people living there were equally undisputed. Immediately on landing at Colon, on the morning of the 3d, Generals Tobal and Amaya, who commanded the newly arrived Colombian troops, proceeded by rail to Panama to arrange for quartering their soldiers, leaving Colonel Torres in command at Colon.

When the uprising occurred at Panama, Tobal and Amaya, with Governor Obaldia and a few other Colombian officials, were arrested by the revolutionists, and the Colombian troops, with their commander, General Huertas, quartered in the city of Panama, promptly gave in their adherence to the cause of the revolutionists. At the Colon end of the railroad Torres was endeavoring to arrange for transportation of his troops to Panama by rail. The railroad company declined to transport his troops without a request from the governor at Panama, and this fact was communicated to Commander Hubbard, of the Nashville. That afternoon about 6 o'clock Commander Hubbard was notified by the superintendent of the railroad that he had received the necessary request for transportation of the troops and that they would leave for Panama at 8 o'clock the next morning, November 4. In his report, under date of November 8, to the Secretary of the Navy, Commander Hubbard, referring to this, makes the following statement, viz:

At about 5.30 p. m. I again went on shore, and received notice from the general superintendent of the railroad that he had received the request for the transportation of the troops and that they would leave on the 8 a. m. train on the following day. I immediately went to see the general superintendent, and learned that it had just been announced that a provisional government had been established at Panama; that Generals Amaya and Tobal, the governor of Panama, and four officers, who had gone to Panama in the morning, had been seized and were held as prisoners; that they had an organized force of 1,500 troops and wished the Government troops in Colon to be sent over.

This I declined to permit, and verbally prohibited the general superintendent from giving transportation to the troops of either party.

It being then late in the evening, I sent early in the morning of November 4 written notification to the general superintendent of the Panama Railroad, to the prefect of Colon, and to the officer left in command of the Colombian troops, later ascertained to be Colonel Torres, that I had prohibited the transportation of troops in either direction, in order to preserve the free and uninterrupted transit of the Isthmus.

From this it would appear that at that hour it was the wish of Torres, in command of the Government troops at Colon, and of the provisional government at Panama, that the Colombian troops at Colon should be permitted to go by rail to Panama at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 4th, and it can not be doubted that this very singular, significant, and amicable adjustment of the transportation problem would have been arranged had not Commander Hubbard felt constrained by his orders to prevent it.

At 10.45 on the morning of the 4th the train from Panama arrived at Colon, and Torres and his command learned for the first time of the uprising at Panama and the arrest of their commanding officer. It was reported to Commander Hubbard at about 1 o'clock that day that Torres had notified the prefect of Colon, who had informed our consul at Colon, that if Generals Tobal and Amaya were not released by 2 o'clock that day, he, Torres, would open fire on Colon and kill every "United States citizen" in the place.

Thereupon Commander Hubbard advised all American citizens to take refuge in the shed of the railroad company, which advice was complied with so far as the men were concerned, while the women and children went on board the German steamer Marcomania and the Panama Railroad steamer City of Washington. In the meantime, between 1.30 and 2 p. m., forty-two United States marines were landed from the Nashville and took possession of the railroad building, while the Nashville herself patrolled close into the water front, prepared to use either small arm or shrapnel fire.

For about an hour and a half the Colombian troops, who had surrounded the railroad building, held a more or less threatening attitude, but about 3.15 Colonel Torres, who had apparently cooled down some, sought an interview with the officer commanding the marines, and after expressing himself as most friendly to Americans, claiming that there had been a misapprehension, expressed a wish to send the alcalde of Colon to Panama in order to have General Tobal direct the discontinuance of a show of force. The train was furnished, and the alcalde left for Panama.

At about 5:30 p. m. Torres proposed to withdraw his troops to a point near the outskirts of Colon if the marines would return to the Nashville, leaving the police in charge of Colon until the return of the alcalde the next morning. This proposition was accepted and complied with by Commander Hubbard and peace reigned in Colon during the night of the 4th.

Without dwelling longer on the details of this incident, I will state briefly that General Tobal did not give the desired order; that the marines were again landed before the arrival of the alcalde, on the morning of the 5th; that Torres and his force returned into Colon a little later; that affairs again assumed a menacing aspect; that at 7.05 p. m. the Dixie arrived at Colon with some four hundred United States marines, a portion of whom were landed in the city that evening, and that at 7.45 p. m. Torres and his command sailed for Cartagena on the British steamer Oronoco.

This left the Department of Panama in peaceful possession of the revolutionists, who had already organized a junta or provisional government, and through their committee on November 4 had notified Mr. Felix Ehrman, United States vice-consul-general at Panama, and our Department of State of the separation from Colombia of the Department of Panama with the purpose of erecting itself into the sovereign Republic of Panama.

On November 7, under instructions from our Department of State, Mr. Ehrman addressed the following communication to the committee of the Provisional Government, viz:

PANAMA, November 7, 1903.

Messrs. J. A. ARANGO, TOMAS ARIAS, and FEDERICO BOYD, Committee of the Provisional Government, present.

GENTLEMEN: As it appears that the people of Panama have, by unanimous movement, dissolved their political connection with the Republic of Colombia and resumed their independence, and as there is no opposition to the provisional government in the State of Panama, I have to inform you that the provisional government will be held responsible for the protection of the persons and property of citizens of the United States, as well as to keep the isthmian transit free, in accordance with obligations of existing treaties relative to the isthmian territory.

I have the honor to remain, gentlemen, very respectfully,

FELIX EHRMAN,
United States Vice-Consul-General.

It will be observed that our Department of State was prompt to impress on the new Government of Panama the latter's obligation to keep the isthmian transit free, in accordance with existing treaties relative to the isthmian territory.

On November 5 the committee informed our Department of State that they had appointed Señor Philippe Bunau-Varilla confidential agent of the Republic of Panama near our Government and Dr. Francisco V. de la Espriella as their minister of foreign affairs.

On November 11 Mr. P. Bunau-Varilla notified our Secretary of State that the Republic of Panama had designated him as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States, with full powers to negotiate; and on the 13th the President received Mr. Bunau-Varilla and accepted from him his credentials as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

At the beginning of this session of Congress the President transmitted to the Senate for its action thereon a treaty with the Republic of Panama, and in his annual message expressed the opinion that by it our interests are better safeguarded than by the Hay-Herran treaty and that this treaty is better in its terms than those offered to us by Costa Rica and Nicaragua. I quote from his message in this connection the following expression, viz:

At last the right to begin this great undertaking is made available. Panama has done her part. All that remains is for the American Congress to do its part and forthwith this Republic will enter upon the execution of a project colossal in its size and of well-nigh incalculable possibilities for the good of this country and the nations of mankind.

Mr. President, I have endeavored in the foregoing narrative to state as succinctly as I was able the material—and only the material—facts that should, in my judgment, determine my action as a Senator regarding this treaty.

The details and intrinsic merits of the treaty itself can be dealt with only in executive sessions of this body; but it is urged with much vigor and eloquence, first, that the conduct of the executive branch of our Government in dealing with Colombia and Panama is quite incapable of defense or justification, and, secondly, that one who disapproves or condemns the Executive's action in any particular in that connection can not favor the ratification of the treaty without ipso facto condoning a flagrant international wrong.

To sustain the first of these propositions it is argued that certain occurrences, both in Panama and in this country, precedent to and practically coincident with the uprising in Panama, demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that some official or officials of the United States in position of high responsibility, through some unknown medium, incited the Panama leaders to revolt against Colombia by intimating, suggesting, or otherwise communicating to them the favorable course of action which the Executive of the United States would pursue in case of an uprising on the Isthmus.

It will be admitted that there were circumstances which gave a strong coloring and plausibility to this contention, but we are relieved of any occasion to speculate concerning them by the positive and unqualified denial of the President, made in his message to Congress on the 4th of last month. That denial is comprehensive and complete, and, so far as I am concerned, disposes of the charge definitely and conclusively.

In support of the same proposition it is also urged that the Executive violated the act of Congress commonly styled the "Spooner Act," in that when the Colombian Senate rejected the Hay-Herran treaty he did not, as required by that law, abandon the Panama route and proceed to negotiate with Nicaragua and Costa Rica for the right of way via San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua.

My understanding of the object and terms of the Spooner Act compels me to differ with those who hold this opinion.

While with the light we now have on the motives of the Colombian Executive and Congress it seems that they were not disposed at an early day to make any compact with us under which we would be able to secure a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company and perpetual control of a canal zone across the Isthmus on reasonable terms, still their action was not conclusive of Colombia's purpose to adhere to a policy so antagonistic to her own interest, and Congress had expressly permitted the President to keep the matter open with the Government of Colombia until a reasonable time for securing the desired rights had elapsed.

The Colombian Congress did not drop the matter with the rejection of the treaty on August 12. While they had thrown its propositions overboard with as little compunction or hesitation as if those propositions had been an orphaned litter of blind puppies, they had not abandoned consideration of the great subject to which they related, and at the time of their dissolution that Congress had before them a series of counter propositions, which were undoubtedly intended for the consideration of the United States. Can it be justly said, in view of the magnitude of the subject and the circumstances attending the negotiations with Colombia, that when the Colombian Congress adjourned the Panama route was effectually and finally barred against us, and that any further effort to secure what this Government deemed the most desirable route would involve an unreasonable consumption of time? In my judgment, Mr. President, this can not be done; and if it can not, this point of criticism of the Executive is not well taken.

The point has also been dwelt on by some of those who criticise the action of the President as being contrary to the requirements of the Spooner Act, in that he had no right to treat with any other sovereignty than Colombia for the Panama Canal concession, because the Spooner Act required him to secure the right of way across the Isthmus from the Republic of Colombia. To my mind, Mr. President, this contention subordinates the spirit and object of the Spooner Act to its letter, and is contrary to the plainest rules of statutory construction.

The territory over which we desired to secure control was as distinct and well defined as a city lot or block. The purpose to which we desired to put it—viz, a canal route across the Isthmus of Panama—was the only purpose for which we could use it, and it was quite immaterial from what owner or sovereignty we were to obtain it. To obtain the concession for that route was of the essence, to obtain it from Colombia was simply incidental. I do not think, Mr. President, that this point can be successfully maintained, and I shall dismiss it with this brief reference.

It is further urged that the Executive in recognizing the existence of a government in Panama, through the action of our consul-general, Mr. Ehrman, on the 7th of November, only four days after the outbreak of the revolution, violated a plain canon of international law, because it is a principle of law governing the recognition of all governments, and particularly those that have seceded or withdrawn from political connection with existing states, that they should not be recognized until they have established a stable government and have manifested ability to maintain their independence.

The same is said with equal force concerning the action of the President in receiving Mr. Bunau-Varilla on the 13th of November as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Panama and accepting the credential tendered by him.

Under our Constitution the President is vested with authority and discretion to receive ambassadors and other public ministers. It is for him to determine whether or not he shall by receiving such a diplomatic official commit the United States to a recognition of the sovereignty and independence of the state sending the envoy.

I am quite certain that there are considerations connected with this case which would have deterred most of our Executives from taking this important and conclusive step when it was taken, and I myself believe that the President was guilty of error in acting as precipitately as he did.

But, Mr. President, in my judgment the principal wrong involved in that error was suffered by the United States, for by it a precedent has been set which is alike menacing to our peaceful relations with foreign nations and to the preservation of our well-deserved reputation for an exalted sense of right and justice.

I differ with those, Mr. President, who affirm with much emphasis of assertion that had it not been for the interference of the armed forces of the United States with the freedom of movement of the Colombian troops the revolution would have been speedily crushed. Our action may have prevented a conflict and bloodshed, which I hold, however, to be no excuse for that action under the then existing conditions; but I am free to say that it is not clear to me that it could have been crushed by Colombia, even if the United States had kept her Navy and marines out of sight of the Panama coast. The revolutionists had gained absolute control of the city of Panama, and with the Colombian troops there, who had joined the revolutionists, had at their command a force largely superior to that which General Tobal landed at Colon on the morning of the 3d of November. The people of Panama had every reason to wish for separation from the Colombian Republic, and it stands to reason that they were practically unanimous in favor of independence and autonomy. Their territory was separated from the rest of Colombia by about 300 miles of as rugged mountain wilderness as can be found on this hemisphere. On the east and south this barrier rendered them practically safe from invasion. On the west and north they had a friendly republic from which no present hostility was to be apprehended. Colombia herself was absolutely bankrupt financially, and politically was torn to pieces by perennial contests between irreconcilable factional leaders. Panama could be approached only by water, and the Colombian navy was so feeble and moribund as to be incapable of performing any more warlike duty than the transportation of such few troops as their limited size would permit. We certainly would not have permitted them to bombard either Panama or Colon.

Panama would have had the sympathy of the people of the United States, and of all people who view with approval the efforts of the downtrodden and oppressed to strike off their political shackles, and I doubt not would have been able to procure all the financial and material aid that was necessary to enable her to make a vigorous defense of her territory. If these considerations are of weight it would not seem that the alleged disparity of strength between Panama and Colombia, based on their very unequal populations, was so great as to make the effort of Panama to maintain herself against the attack of Colombia as hopeless as has been contended for.

Again, Mr. President, while the principle of international law that I have referred to is undisputed, it is also an accepted doctrine that a state, when called on to recognize the sovereignty of a new-born state, is justified in shaping her action according to what she believes to be her best interests. Conceding that the requirements for recognition have been complied with, it does not follow that the state from which recognition is sought is bound to recognize unless she sees that it is to her interest so to do.

In other words, it may be said that while a new-born state should not be recognized as sovereign and independent until she has placed herself in the position required by the law of nations, the fact that she is in such position does not impose on another state any obligation to recognize her at any particular time. Whether the recognition shall be prompt or long deferred is a matter entirely in the discretion of the recognizing state. On this principle our Government has acted in numerons instances in dealing with the question of recognizing new states.

To recognize as independent a state that has seceded from another state before the former has established a government or demonstrated her ability to maintain her independence, is an act of hostility to the latter state, and may justly be assigned as a cause of war against the recognizing state. To do so after a government has been established and ability to maintain it against the enemy has been demonstrated, is not inconsistent with the obligations of neutrality and can not be a just cause of war.

While, as I have indicated, it is my opinion that there was reason to believe that Panama could successfully resist the assaults that Colombia might have made on her, it is a fact that as to this there was and still is a wide difference of opinion, and she certainly, at the time of her recognition by our Government, had not shown or attempted to show what she could do in that regard.

It was purely a matter of conjecture, and will ever remain as remote from an accomplished fact. Neither was the other requirement of law for Panama's recognition an existing fact. She was not a republic, either in form or in substance, and her government was a committee, composed of a very limited number of men who had grasped the sovereignty of the state provisionally and with the avowed purpose of ultimately, at some other time, organizing such a government as is recognized by civilization. In recognizing the so-called Republic of Panama, under these circumstances, the President undoubtedly furnished Colombia with a just cause for a declaration of war against us.

This, Mr. President, was a step which I am quite sure can not be justified under that provision of our Constitution which vests in the Executive the right and power to recognize a sovereign state. The true interpretation of that clause of our Constitution would, I think, impose on the Executive the duty of ascertaining beyond any question whether his act of recognition could be justly construed as an act of hostility by any nation that had reason to object to such recognition, and if he found that his action could be so construed then it would be his duty to defer recognition, at least until he could have an opportunity of consulting that branch of our Government to which the Constitution confides the grave responsibility of declaring war.

There may be, undoubtedly, some exigencies in which the Executive has to perform some act that will probably lead to war; but such exigencies are rare, and it is very clear that the framers of the Constitution in vesting in the President the right to receive ambassadors and other public ministers did not contemplate that the power so conferred should ever be used as a substitute for a declaration of war.

To my mind, however, Mr. President, the feature connected with this incident of the Panama revolution that is most objectionable and indefensible is found in the fact that, try to defend it as we may, the Colombian Government in a time of peace, when her relations with us, though perhaps not cordial, were certainly not hostile, was prevented by our Government from attempting to assert her undeniable right to suppress disorder within her own territory, and that it is a fact that the peaceful organization of the Panama Government was probably due to our interposition.

When, in addition to this consideration, it is borne in mind that we were most solicitous to secure a right of way for a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, and that by our precipitate recognition of the independence of Panama we made a long stride toward the realization of that desire, it would seem to a disinterested and impartial judgment that the United States had abandoned her time-honored traditions and had recklessly subordinated the preservation of her high repute among the nations of the earth to the sordid purpose of material profit.

But, Mr. President, while it may be admitted that in the matter of recognition of the Republic of Panama something may be said, if not in justification, at least in palliation of that unprecedented step, and that some of the criticisms evoked by it have been extremely harsh and bitter, the remaining point to which those who have criticised the Executive's action have earnestly called attention is to my mind much more serious and much more difficult to defend.

In a former part of my remarks I called attention to dispatches sent by our Acting Secretary of the Navy on November 2, 1903, to the United States cruiser Nashville at Colon, the Boston at San Juan del Sur, the Marblehead at Acapulco, and the Dixie at Kingston, Jamaica. It will be observed that the dispatch directed to the commanding officer of the Nashville and the others were of similar import, ordered him to "prevent the landing of any armed force with hostile intent, either Government or insurgent, either at Colon, Porto Bello, or other point," adding that a Government force was reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels and that their landing should be prevented if in the judgment of that officer such landing would precipitate a conflict.

This dispatch was sent and reached its destination before a single hostile arm was raised against the sovereignty of Colombia on the Isthmus of Panama. We were at peace with Colombia, with her diplomatic representative at our capital, and our minister residing at Bogota. We had only a short time previously emphasized our recognition of the sovereignty of Colombia over the Department of Panama by undertaking to gain the consent of Colombia to the construction by us of a canal across the Isthmus.

Under the law of nations these orders to our naval commanders were in flagrant violation of the sovereign rights of Colombia and can not be successfully defended or justified, unless it can be shown beyond question that Colombia had yielded up to the United States the right possessed by every sovereignty to suppress disorder and unlawful violence within her own territory. Clearly, if we had no treaty right with Colombia empowering us to interpose between her and her prospective domestic lawbreakers, those orders commanded our officers to commit an act of war against Colombia.

It will also be observed that subsequently, after the uprising had occurred at Panama, our naval officer in command of the Nashville landed marines for the purpose of preventing Colombian troops who were on their way to Panama from being transported to that city. The officer in command of the Colombian troops was informed by the commander of the Nashville that he would not be allowed to proceed to Panama, and a conflict and probable bloodshed were averted only because the Colombian commander desisted from any forcible effort to carry out his purpose.

This conduct on our part is, of course, also unjustifiable under the law of nations, and can not be supported unless it can be shown that Colombia by treaty or concession gave the United States the right to take this action.

I have listened, Mr. President, to some of the arguments in justification of the Executive in the matter to which I am now referring, and I have read with due care and attention the arguments furnished us by the President himself in his annual message and in that of January 4 but I have failed to hear or discover anything in those arguments approximating to a justification of that action.

Article 35 of our treaty of "peace, amity, navigation, and commerce" of 1846 with New Granada, to the rights and obligations granted and imposed by which Colombia succeeded, contained reciprocal stipulations on the part of the contracting parties which may be briefly summarized as follows:

The Government of New Granada guaranteed to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama, upon any mode of communication then existing or thereafter constructed, should be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States and for the transportation of any articles of produce, manufactures, or merchandise of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States. * * * And the Government of the United States, in order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of the advantages mentioned and as an especial compensation for said advantages and other favors acquired by the treaty, guaranteed, positively and efficaciously, by that stipulation the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama, with the view that free transit from one to the other sea should not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while the treaty should exist; and in consequence, the United States also guaranteed in the same manner, to wit, positively and efficaciously, the right of sovereignty and property which New Granada then had and possessed over the said territory, to wit, the entire Isthmus of Panama.

The construction put upon this guaranty of neutrality by all of our Secretaries of State who have had occasion to refer to it in their State Papers has confined the obligation on the part of the United States to the preservation of the neutrality of the Isthmus against any warlike acts on the part of any foreign nation.

It has on more than one occasion been declared by such authority that the duty imposed on the United States by that stipulation did not require us to interfere in the domestic broils of New Granada or Colombia. It has been contended by some of our publicists, and with some show of reason, I think, that under that guaranty the Uinted States had the right, in case Colombia was unable to suppress disorder in Panama whereby the open and free transit across the Isthmus was obstructed, to interpose with such force as was necessary to remove such obstruction and preserve uninterrupted and unembarrassed transit by restoring the supremacy of legitimate authority.

This would be consistent with the expressed purpose of our guaranty of neutrality and with the purpose of Colombia in conceding to us free transit without interruption or embarrassment. Undoubtedly, under that clause of the treaty, we had the right when requested by her to give our aid to Colombia in suppressing disorder or insurrection on the Isthmus, whereby free and open transit was likely to be interrupted, but we were under no obligation to do so, and that right is very different from the right to prevent Colombia from taking proper steps to suppress an insurrection against her authority.

The fact that the parties to the treaty thought proper to insert after the guaranty of neutrality the further guaranty of the right of sovereignty and property of New Granada on the Isthmus discloses their intent to exclude the idea of any release of her sovereign rights over the territory other than that which was necessary to enable the United States to comply with her guaranty of neutrality. Had there been no clause in the treaty guaranteeing the sovereignty of New Granada, the fact that she yielded any more of her sovereignty than was necessary, in order to enable the United States to perform her duty as a guarantor of neutrality, could not be inferred or gathered by implication from anything in the treaty.

Sovereignty, Mr. President, has been defined more or less tersely by different authorities on international law. From some of them I quote the following. It is—

The supreme power by which any state is governed. (Wheaton's Elements, etc., p. 115.)

The supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power by which any state is governed. (Cooley.)

The political authority, whether vested in a single individual or a number of individuals, to order and direct what is to be done by each individual in relation to the end and the object of the state. (Halleck.)

The union and exercise of all human power possessed in a state; it is a combination of all power; it is the power to do everything in a state without accountability; to make laws, to execute and apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contribution, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or commerce with foreign nations and the like. (Story.)

Vattel, book 1, section 4, defines a sovereign state to be:

Any nation or people, whatever may be the form of its internal constitution, which governs itself independent of foreign powers.

This supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power is necessary and essential for the self-preservation of a state, and is never yielded or surrendered, even in a minor degree, except for most compelling reasons. If relinquished to any considerable extent it necessarily means the destruction of the state's independence, which is the very life and soul of the nation.

Of the absolute and undeniable rights of states says Wheaton:

One of the most essential and important, and that which lies at the foundation of all the rest, is the right of self-preservation. It is not only a right with respect to the other states, but a duty with respect to its own members, and the most solemn and important which the state owes to them.

And Chancellor Kent tells us that—

The right of self-preservation of a nation, as well as of an individual, is paramount to all other considerations.

There is no right of sovereignty more essential and fundamental than that which empowers it to suppress and punish violation of its laws. Without it a state can not preserve its existence, and the surrender of it necessarily means the destruction of the state. Therefore every implication is against the intent of a state to give up this fundamental right, and it can only be conceded when it is done in positive, unequivocal, and express terms.

Therefore I claim, Mr. President, that had the United States not guaranteed the sovereignty of Colombia over the Department of Panama by article 35 of the treaty of 1846, it could not have been inferred, in view of the subject-matter of that treaty, the situation of the parties thereto, and the circumstances connected with its negotiation and execution, that it was the intent of either of the high contracting parties that Colombia should relinquish, in the slightest degree, her sovereign right to suppress rebellion against her authority, or lawlessness of any kind, in that territory.

Neither can that be inferred from any expressions contained in article 35, because it is in no sense inconsistent with any of the provisions of that article that Colombia should retain a right so necessary to the preservation of her sovereignty. But, Mr. President, by a distinct and substantive clause in article 35 the United States guaranteed to the Republic of New Granada and its successors, positively and efficaciously, the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada had in that territory.

In view of these considerations, can it be consistently argued that in preventing the Government of Colombia from transporting troops from one point to another in her territory of Panama, merely on the suspicion that this might result in an interruption of transit across the Isthmus and in prohibiting her, after it was ascertained that an uprising had begun in the city of Panama against her authority, from landing troops within 50 miles of the line of transit, which troops were necessary to quell resistance to her lawful authority, we did not in so doing violate our guaranty of Colombia's sovereignty over that territory?

That our Executive and Department of State regarded it the duty of Colombia not merely to protect the persons and property of citizens of the United States in Panama, but also to keep the isthmian transit free in accordance with Colombia's obligations under the treaty of 1846, is apparently admitted by the communication of our vice-consul-general at Panama under instructions from our Department of State to the committee of the provisional government under date of November 7, 1903. In that communication our representative used the following language:

I have to inform you that the provisional government will be held responsible for the protection of persons and property of citizens of United States, as well as to keep the isthmian transit free, in accordance with obligations of existing treaties relative to the isthmian territory.

If the obligation to keep the isthmian transit free was imposed on the new-born Government of Panama because of its having succeeded to the rights and duties of Colombia under the treaty of 1846, the query naturally arises, How could our Government consistently have denied to Colombia only a few days before the right and duty, under the same treaty, to comply with the same obligation?

If Colombia could not be permitted to take necessary steps to prevent a mere possible interference with free and open transit across the Isthmus, how could it be logically or justly required of Panama to do that very thing under identically the same treaty with Colombia?

I confess, Mr. President, that I am at a loss to understand how the conflicting attitudes of our Executive in this matter can be reconciled. I regret to say that the argument of the President embodied in his message of January 4 does nothing to relieve this point of the embarrassment in which it is involved, though it does much to show that any obligations of ours or rights of Colombia under article 35 of the treaty of 1846 were not embarrassing him.

He tells us, among other things, that it was his intention to consult Congress as to whether, under the conditions occasioned by the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty and the adjournment of the Colombian Congress without further action, it would not be proper to announce that the canal was to be dug forthwith, that we would give the terms we offered and no others, and that if such terms were not agreed to we would enter into an arrangement with Panama direct, or take whatever steps were needful in order to begin the enterprise.

It is fair to infer that such a course commended itself to him as worthy of deliberate consideration, and if such is the fact it brings out in startling relief the President's unique conception of our international rights and furnishes a key to much that is connected with this whole subject that is otherwise quite inexplicable. The proposition which the President contemplated submitting to Congress was, in plain English, to tell Colombia that if she would not concede to us all that we sought from her in her territory on the Isthmus we would, in the face of our treaty with her, in defiance of her rights under the law of nations, ignore her sovereignty over the Isthmus, deal with Panama direct, and take what other steps we thought necessary to occupy and use her territory.

In view of his subsequent summary disregard of Colombia's rights in the premises, the only surprising feature of this declaration by the President is the statement that he contemplated consulting Congress about the matter.

The fifth paragraph of article 35 of the treaty of 1846 is in the following language:

Fifth. If, unfortunately, any of the articles contained in this treaty should be violated or infringed in any way whatever, it is expressly stipulated that neither of the two contracting parties shall ordain or authorize any acts of reprisal, nor shall declare war against the other on complaints of injuries or damages, until the said party considering itself offended shall have laid before the other a statement of such injuries or damages, verified by competent proofs, demanding justice and satisfaction, and the same shall have been denied, in violation of the laws and of international right.

If, as the President evidently seems to think, Colombia in rejecting the Hay-Herran treaty violated or infringed on any of our just rights under article 35 of the treaty of 1846, the duty imposed on him by the provisions of that paragraph, which I have just quoted, of laying before the Colombian Government a statement of the injury complained of and demanding justice and satisfaction therefor, was as obligatory as any other requirement of that treaty and should have been complied with.

There are other points bearing on this subdivision of the question to which I might refer, and which probably are as worthy of consideration as any that I have here developed, but I have already consumed more time than I intended when I first entered on this subject, and I shall content myself with observing that in my judgment, for the reasons I have given, the action of the Executive in preventing the Colombian Government from landing her troops on her own territory, in a time of peace, and in preventing the Colombian authorities from attempting to suppress an insurrection against the law and authority of that State was a gross violation of international law and of our treaty then existing with Colombia.

Mr. President, the next and last question which presents itself for consideration in connection with this subject is whether, disapproving as I do most unreservedly and emphatically the Executive's action in the two particulars last discussed, I can favor the ratification of a treaty with Panama providing for the construction of an isthmian canal across the territory of that State without condoning the wrong which I have disapproved.

The question is one of serious importance and involves the assumption of a responsibility of the weightiest character. It would have been an easy matter if I could by any conscientious course of reasoning have brought myself to believe that the Executive's action in all the particulars I have referred to was free from reproach. It would have been easier and, perhaps, more politic in me, viewing the important questions involved as I do, to have remained silent and to have cast my vote in the way in which I believe a great majority of the people whom I, in part, represent on this floor would have me to vote.

By so doing I might have avoided some of the criticism which the more pronounced course that I am pursuing naturally invites. But, Mr. President, I am quite satisfied that I can favor the ratification of the pending treaty or any other treaty with the Government of Panama, if in their details they meet with my approval, and at the same time logically retain my right to disapprove of the action of the Executive in its dealings with Colombia.

Article II, section 3, of the Constitution vests in the President the right and power to recognize new states by receiving ambassadors and other public ministers. It is a power exclusively in the President, and the occasion for its exercise and the conditions under which it is to be exercised are left exclusively, and necessarily so, in the sound discretion of that officer.

It is a power that should not be used improvidently or with an improper motive, because when exercised affirmatively it fixes a status of the state recognized and of this Government, with relation to each other, imposing and conferring duties and rights on them, respectively, that can not thereafter be logically or rightfully denied or contested by either Government.

When the Executive of this Government has once fixed that status, the question of the correctness, justice, or wisdom of his action in so doing is no longer a practical question, so far as the action of the other two coordinate departments of our Government is concerned. The individual members of our highest judicial tribunal may, as individuals, disapprove or condemn the Executive's action in such a case, but in their judicial capacity, as a coordinate branch of the Government, they are bound to accept and recognize as a conclusive fact the status which has been fixed by the authority in whom the Constitution has confided the exclusive right and duty to perform the act by which that status is fixed. This principle is so well established by numerous decisions of that tribunal that it may be said to be a part of the fundamental law of the land.

The reasoning that applies in the case of the judiciary, Mr. President, is equally as forcible when we come to consider the position or attitude which the legislative department of our Government, or the Senate when acting alone in its executive capacity, under the treaty-making power, should take when confronted with an instance of recognition of a new state by the Executive, under circumstances which Congress or the Senate regards as unjustifiable.

A discretion to act or not act vested exclusively in one of our coordinate branches of Government can not be controlled by either of the other branches, and when once exercised can not be ignored or denied by either without infringing on or usurping the exclusive right or duty of the branch that has been vested with the discretion.

An act of Congress that has been constitutionally passed over his veto is binding on the President, though he may regard it as inspired by unpatriotic motives and as grossly unjust.

The income-tax decision is regarded by many of us as absolutely wrong, but the Senate in its legislative capacity can not deny that it is the law to-day. For this reason it would be wrong, if not revolutionary, in my judgment, Mr. President, for Congress to refuse to provide compensation for a minister who, having been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, had under that authority undertaken to represent this Government at the capital of a state, solely because a majority in Congress believed the state in question had been unwisely, improvidently, or in any way unjustifiably recognized by the President.

The remedy or redress in such a case lies not with Congress nor with the judiciary.

It is possible that if the gravity of the Executive's abuse of discretion, in such a case as I am considering, were to present itself to a majority of Congress as of sufficient enormity, it might be practicable under the constitutional provision for impeachment to take such action as would at least exert a deterrent influence in the future; but the only certain, efficacious, conclusive, and practicable redress lies with the people of this country, who vested the Executive with that function of their sovereignty which he abused, and who by their suffrages can constitutionally express their approval or disapproval of his conduct.

Congress undoubtedly, in such a case, if it deemed proper, and the Senate alone, as in the instance of the pending treaty, might, in order to emphasize its disapproval of the Executive's action in recognizing Panama, ignore the existence of that State, and refuse to take any Congressional or Senatorial action regarding such an entity as the Republic of Panama; but I hold, Mr. President, that such a course could not be justified on any constitutional ground, and that it would lead us only into a bewildering and endless labyrinth of inconsistencies and anomalies. What Congress or either of the Houses thereof ought not to do, the individual members of those Houses ought not to desire them to do.

Since Panama has become a sovereign State, she has probably in that character and by reason of her geographical position and the recognition of her sovereignty by our Executive succeeded the Republic of Colombia in the enjoyment of the rights granted, and has incurred the obligations imposed by article 35 of our treaty of 1846 with New Granada. By that treaty the Government of the United States is obligated to preserve the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama, which includes the entire territory of the Republic of Panama, against all foreign assailants.

It is also probably obligated to preserve the sovereignty and property rights of the Republic of Panama in the territory of Panama. By the status which was given to the Republic of Panama immediately on its recognition as a state by the Government of the United States, the Republic of Colombia assumed, so far as this Government is concerned, a different relation to Panama from that which had formerly existed, and became a nation foreign to Panama.

The conclusion, therefore, follows that should Colombia undertake to invade the territory of Panama, and Panama be unable to effectively resist such invasion, the United States, under our treaty of 1846 with New Granada, would probably be bound to use such of our military and naval force as would be necessary to expel the Colombian troops from the territory of Panama. This necessarily would mean war with Colombia, a condition which may possibly exist at an early day, and, as patriotic citizens and legislators of the United States, all of us would feel obligated to vote the necessary supplies and take all legislative action required to carry that war to a successful conclusion by protecting and maintaining the integrity of Panama as a state.

Should this Senate, therefore, reject the pending treaty for the reason assigned, we might very possibly be placed in the attitude of authorizing the expenditure of the blood and treasure of our people in order to maintain a state legally if not justly recognized by our Government, the sovereignty of which our Government is obligated by a treaty to defend, yet with which we Senators are unwilling to treat. I trust that we will escape the embarrassment of such a situation.

The Republic of Panama will doubtless exist as an independent state for many years, unless the Government of the United States shall conclude to benevolently assimilate her. Conceding that this Senate should reject the pending treaty, because by not so doing it would condone the unjustifiable action of the Executive, and next year, or the year thereafter, or at some time in the not remote future, the same or a similarly favorable treaty with the Republic of Panama, covering the same subject, were presented to us for ratification, what would then be our attitude concerning the propriety of ratification?

If there is any moral delinquency involved in ratifying it now, would a mere lapse of time serve to condone that delinquency and make what is wrong now right and just then? If not so, Mr. President, it will be impossible for anyone who now believes that he can not vote for the ratification of the treaty without condoning the much-discussed action of the President to ever look with favor on a proposition for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama so long as the Republic of Panama exists.

It is possible, Mr. President, that when the pending treaty comes to be carefully considered and analyzed there may be reasons developed why it should be amended, or even rejected; but, viewing our function and constitutional limitations as I do, I fail to see any sufficient reason why a member of this body who disapproves and condemns the President's action as I do—emphatically and unqualifiedly—should, for that reason alone, feel it his duty to antagonize the treaty.

Such action might be construed as a rebuke to the President, but, in my judgment, it would be a rebuke administered in a method and manner which we are not authorized to employ. I know of nothing more tangible or practical that it would accomplish than to remit to an indefinite future and to the multitudinous contingencies and uncertainties of the years to come the realization of a superlatively desired object of the people of the United States in general and of my own constituency in particular.

Such a step, involving an overwhelming disappointment to many millions of our citizens, and the probable destruction of any reasonable hope for an isthmian canal during our generation, should not be taken lightly nor for any but the strongest and most convincing reasons. The fact that the President has erred most seriously, as I affirm, in performing a constitutional duty imposed on him, and on him alone, is not, in my judgment, such a reason.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to take any part in the discussion of the Panama question. I have felt that it was in able hands, and that the committee having charge of the matter primarily would present every phase and feature of it. Practically everything that could be said in regard to this question has been, from some standpoint, discussed. But we each have our differing views as to the effect and the force of the various matters involved in the Panama question.

I do not feel called upon to apologize for any act or thing that has been done by the Republican Administration in dealing with this question. No apology is necessary, because no act of the Administration has been beyond the scope of its powers and without the scope of wisdom.

The question of the recognition of the Government of Panama is a settled and determined question; it is not open for further consideration to the end of modifying or changing the act; it is not within the power of this body to do so, and were it within its power, I am satisfied that it would not meet with the approval of the majority of this body that any change should be made in any act that has been done by the Administration. The question stands to-day upon the wisdom of the negotiations that have taken place between this Government and the Government of Panama. Anything back of or behind the hour of the recognition of that Government is merely a question of inquiring into matters that can not in any way affect the action of the Senate; and in the discussion of this question as lawyers or the consideration of it as a court we do not need to go behind that day.

It may, however, be interesting that we should for a moment consider the circumstances that led up to the situation which confronts us to-day. We gather wisdom for dealing with the present question from a consideration of the conditions and circumstances out of which it grew.

The proposition to dig a canal across the Isthmus of Panama is practically as old as is the history of that country. I have no doubt the aborigines, bending the prows of their canoes against those banks, sought to find some way to cross from ocean to ocean, and since the days of the Spanish navigators who discovered this ligament binding together the two continents upon this hemisphere, the question has never been quiet. During the Administration when the affairs of state were in the hands of John Quincy Adams, steps were taken to secure the construction of such a canal.

Those efforts were not relaxed until in 1843 the Government of New Granada sent its representatives to the strong governments of the earth to see if it could not enter into some arrangement with them that would result in the construction and operation of this canal. To England, to France, to Germany, and to the United States their representatives went. That action resulted, so far as we are concerned, in the making of the treaty of 1846, which gave us a right of way and a right to participate in the enjoyment of any other rights across the Isthmus. Whatever right passed, whatever is within the purview of the term "right of way," came to us by virtue of that treaty. We paid for those rights; we entered into a solemn obligation with the Government of New Granada that we would perform certain things in consideration of the rights which they had conceded to us.

At that time, of course, it could not have been contemplated that there would be a canal as we understand it to-day, because the world had not then advanced to that point; the means of crossing the Isthmus were not up to the broad and splendid scale of the possibilities of to-day; but that was the foundation that ultimately led to the commencement of the project of digging the canal.

The treaty with reference to the right of way with those Governments contemplated that the enterprise should be a private one assisted by a government. At that time it was not contemplated that any government would undertake this as a national project, but only that they would give their encouragement and assistance to the persons or the corporations who might be willing to enter upon it.

We obtained by virtue of the treaty of 1846 this right of way, and in order to understand just what was contemplated we must look to the instructions that were given by the Government of New Granada to its representatives who went out for the purpose of securing this contract at the hands of other governments. We find a translation of them in Senate document No. 17, on page 28:

> Mr. Mosquera is authorized, first, to conclude a treaty with the Governments of Great Britain, France, the United States, Holland, and Spain, or with one or more of them, in order that the said Governments may charge themselves with the enterprise of opening a canal of large dimensions across the Isthmus of Panama.

That was in 1843, three years before the consummation of the treaty which emanated from those instructions and that effort. So, in interpreting the treaty of 1846, we have to resort to the familiar rule of taking into consideration the things which led up to it, the intent of the parties who made the contract, and we find their intent expressed in the instructions given to their minister who ultimately negotiated that treaty.

That treaty was not negotiated with Colombia. Senators have spoken of it as a treaty with Colombia, and of Colombia's rights under the treaty. That treaty, so far as the Isthmus of Panama was concerned, was one in which the guaranty of sovereignty and of neutrality ran with the land to which it was applied—to Panama. Panama was one of the states or provinces which by compact constituted a larger government at that time. She was recognized as such and spoken of as such by Mr. Polk in the message with which he transmitted the treaty to the Senate. It was the Province of Panama.

New Granada, being the center of power that governed Panama and the other provinces that constituted the Government of New Granada, speaking for this province and for the things that peculiarly belonged to it, to wit, the Isthmus of Panama and the right to cross it, entered into a treaty with the United States that the United States should guarantee the neutrality and the sovereignty of Panama. The language confines that guaranty to Panama. They did not undertake to guarantee the neutrality or sovereignty of New Granada, but only that of Panama. So long as Panama was a part of the Government of New Granada, of course no question could arise as to the local application of this treaty, but just as soon as Panama ceased to be a part of the Government of New Granada, then the question did arise as to the application of this provision in the treaty that guaranteed the neutrality and the sovereignty.

I maintain, Mr. President, that our guaranty in the treaty of 1846 does not extend, nor did it ever extend, beyond the geographical limits of Panama; and in whatever hands we find the Government of Panama, there is where the obligation of the treaty attaches. It did not attach to Bogota or to any other portion of what then constituted the Government of New Granada, but attached to Panama, and from the hour that we recognized Panama as a sovereign Government, it did not become us, nor was it necessary for us to consider the rights or the will of any other government than that of Panama. If we guaranteed the neutrality and the sovereignty in Panama, then after the recognition of Panama we could go there and we could prevent the troops of any other country on earth from landing there, because our obligation attached to that political geographical government, and no other.

If that is true, all the criticism as to the protest and the rights to be given to Colombia, as represented by its Government at Bogota, falls to the ground and the President was entirely within the scope of his power; he was within the letter and the spirit of the law that governed him when he dealt solely and alone with Panama as a separate government. I do not care, Mr. President, if that Government had not been organized an hour. More than one of the great governments of the earth has come into power in an hour, and the power has been sustained through centuries. The process of revolution is not a growing process. It is one that turns with the hand of time—quick, conclusive, just as though it had come up through the process of a constitutional convention and ratification by the people.

The Government of Panama is recognized by all the great powers of the earth. In what position would we stand to-day if we were to attempt in any measure to discredit its sovereignty or its existence? With whom else could we deal for any rights that related to the Isthmus of Panama to-day but with the Government of Panama? Would a treaty with Colombia give us any right without discrediting not only our act in recognizing the Government of Panama, but the act of every other government that has recognized it? We are certainly not in a position to make any admission here by implication that would discredit our act. No; we must recognize the fact, first, that Panama is the sovereign, and the only sovereign, power with which to deal, and we must measure the acts of the Administration as they are applicable to that sovereignty and not as they are applicable to the sovereignty of Colombia.

Colombia is said to have inherited the rights of New Granada. Perhaps she did. The fact is, as history tells us, that she seized them without conscience and without right; and it ill becomes a Government that has acted as Colombia has acted in connection with this matter and with this treaty to attempt to draw fine lines and split hairs on questions of international law and international morals.

The Government of Colombia lost its sovereignty over Panama by reason of its own perfidy, and it stands to-day a political outcast among the nations of the earth, having discredited its own representatives in their contracts with this Government.

As has been illustrated and pictured here through the dispatches and records which have been read in connection with the speeches of other Senators, Colombia has been guilty of acts of connivance that would discredit either an individual or a nation in any civilized portion of the globe.

Colombia recognized officially the existence of the Republic of Panama on the 6th day of November. It had existed then—and I care not whether it had a constitution or whether or not its government had been formed—it existed at least from the 4th day of November. It had been in existence three days at the time that Colombia recognized its existence.

This is what the Colombian Government, speaking through its official, says in regard to it on the 7th day of November, 1903, as we have it from our representative there:

Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay.

[Telegram.]

UNITED STATES LEGATION,
Bogota, November 7, 1903.
(Received 7.30 p. m. November 10.)

November 7, 2 p. m. General Reyes leaves next Monday for Panama invested with full powers. He has telegraphed chiefs of the insurrection that his mission is to the interests of Isthmus. He wishes answer from you before leaving to the inquiry in my telegram of yesterday and wishes to know if the American commander will be ordered to cooperate with him and with new Panama Government to arrange peace and approval of the canal treaty, which will be accepted on condition that the integrity of Colombia be preserved. He has telegraphed President of Mexico to ask the Government of the United States and all the countries represented at the Pan-American conference to aid Colombia to preserve her integrity. The question of the approval of the treaty mentioned in my telegram of yesterday will be arranged in Panama.

He had gone from Bogota to Panama for the purpose of arranging it or trying to arrange it with this new Republic, the existence of which he acknowledged. He further says:

He asks that before taking definite action you will await his arrival there, and that the Government of the United States in the meantime preserve the neutrality and transit of the Isthmus and do not recognize the new Government. Great excitement here. Martial law has been declared in the Cauca and Panama. Answer.

BEAUPRÉ.

That was the view taken of it at Bogota. They recognized that a new republic had come into existence. They were fearful that the United States Government would enter into such arrangements as would recognize that new Government of Panama, and their fears were well founded.

If that is a true and correct summing up of the situation, it seems to me that all of the discussion that has taken place—and I say it without disrespect to any gentleman who has discussed the question—of hair-splitting distinctions as to the hour and minute in which this thing and that might be done has been needless. That is a matter which rests entirely in the discretion of the President of the United States, a coordinate branch of the Government, and over whom in that respect we have no power of review. It seems to me that it is a profitless thing to engage in a debate here as to what he might or might not do when we have no power, even though he erred, of correcting him. We can only sit here as carping critics of the acts of a coordinate branch of the Government. Suppose we differed with him as to the wisdom of an act, his wisdom is placed above ours by the Constitution of the United States, and it does not make any difference what the ninety men in this body may think of it.

Mr. President, that is about all I desire to say as to that phase of the question. The building of the canal that is to cross the Isthmus of Panama commences at a port on the Atlantic and extends to one on the Pacific. Every step between those ports is a part of the construction and maintenance of that canal; and it is a question of vast importance to us. We must protect it. We must first construct it. It is admitted on all sides that it will be constructed and that we will construct it. After it is constructed we must maintain it in times of peace and in times of war. We must, in the exercise of the statesmanship vested in us as a legislative body, anticipate the conditions that may and that most surely will arise in connection with that matter.

Across the mouth of the Caribbean Sea there is a chain of islands extending from the coast of South America to the coast of our Atlantic seaboard, owned and controlled by the strongest nation of the earth. There are Bermuda, the Bahamas, and Jamaica, and half of that chain of islands extending from Porto Rico to South America, owned by England, controlled absolutely by her, constituting picket posts in the ocean at our very door. These islands in the sea are but the picket posts of the nations that occupy the continents, and it behooves us at this time to consider our relations to this great enterprise from this standpoint, too.

We have one lone little island, the island of Porto Rico, about halfway between the port of New York and that of Panama, and this island is about the only picket post that we have upon this great frontier of the future commerce of our nation in time of peace and of our Navy in time of war.

If I may digress from the line of the discussion of the Panama question so far as to refer to a resolution which I had the privilege of offering in this body, which proposed that the proper steps should be taken by the appropriate Department of this Government for the acquisition of the island of Santo Domingo, it will accord with the general line of the suggestions that I am making.

Santo Domingo is the nearest piece of land in the ocean to-day to the Panama Canal that can, under any conditions, be obtained, or the control of which can be obtained by the United States Government. It is right at the doorway of the canal. We lost Cuba. We should not have lost it, in my judgment; but we lost Cuba. Whatever its future relations with this Government may be I know not, and the future will have to take care of that question; but next beyond it lies this great island of Santo Domingo.

It seemed to be taken for granted, when the suggestion of acquiring that island was made, that it was more expansion; that it was more imperialism; that it was an effort to reach out and get new people and new territory. I had no such intention in offering the resolution. It was merely that this country might secure there, midway between our ports and this canal, a foothold that would enable us in times of war to protect not only the canal, but to protect our other little possession of Porto Rico, lying alongside of it.

Every ship that goes from the Atlantic seaboard through this canal must pass right through a little narrow channel between the island of Cuba and the island of Santo Domingo, so narrow that modern guns could cross it twice in their range. It was in view of those conditions that that suggestion was presented for the consideration of this body, and it is a part of the scheme and plan of building this interoceanic canal that we look to it at this time, not as a part of the measures under consideration by the Senate, but that it should be borne in mind as something we have got to take up and settle.

Aside from the commercial advantages—and I would not urge them; they are known; it is not a new question, but aside from the commercial advantages of its ownership—the dominion and control over that island is necessary to the security of the investment that we are about to make in the construction of the Panama Canal, and I commend it to the careful attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. President, as has been often and appropriately suggested, the question as to the terms of this treaty or the character of it is not a question for discussion at this time or in this place; but the questions that led up to the negotiating of this treaty are a proper subject for consideration, and I believe that it has been of great benefit, not only to the enterprise of building this interoceanic canal, but of great benefit to the people of the country that they are advised by the very able discussion of this question which has taken place in this body of all the phases and features of the negotiation made by the Administration, which resulted in submitting the treaty to the Senate.

I feel that the question can be left with perfect safety in the hands in which the law has rested it; that the execution of this arrangement, if it shall be made and after it is made, may be left with safety to the conservative wisdom of the administration that will have charge of the execution of that, as of all other laws that we make.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the allusion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to Santo Domingo reminds me of a memorable struggle I witnessed in this Chamber during the first term of President Grant. With the approbation of officers of the Army and the Navy, who had just come out of the war, and on their recommendation, President Grant favored the acquisition of Santo Domingo. Delegates came here. Negotiations for a treaty were begun; but before making the treaty the President took the advice of prominent Senators. I will not designate who they were except to say that they were members of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The treaty was negotiated. It was approved seemingly by everybody, but dissatisfaction with the Executive on the part of a few restless spirits in this body led to a discussion more bitter and more acrimonious than the discussion we have had on this occasion. Every conceivable evil motive was attributed to President Grant in his negotiation to acquire Santo Domingo.

The island would have cost us nothing; it was offered to us. The treaty was negotiated, and it was a fair one, but it was beaten by two or three votes—I do not remember exactly how many. It failed, however, to get the necessary two-thirds, although it came very near being ratified.

I do not suppose that there is anybody in the United States now, or has been since that time, who has not regretted that that treaty was rejected. It was done on account of the acrimonious feeling of opposition to President Grant by those who did not like him. He had not given them the appointments to office they wanted; he had not recognized them; he had not flattered some of them as they thought they ought to be flattered; he had not bowed down to some of them as they supposed they ought to be bowed down to. It was a mere personal fight on General Grant that lost Santo Domingo to the United States; and it was a sad fight for the United States.

Without implying that anybody here could be influenced by any such motives, I do not think great questions ought to be decided in such a manner. I should hate to see questions in which the Government is interested, in which the honor of the United States is concerned, decided on political grounds, particularly on spiteful grounds against the Executive. Even though we do not like the Executive, we ought not to criticise and oppose acts in which the honor of the country is involved, and the opposition to the acquisition of Santo Domingo was one of those disgraceful acts committed here—not intentionally so, but growing out of passion, heat, and trivial matters which ought not to enter into the consideration of such a great question. It belittled the men connected with it, and when the history of those times is written those men will not shine as they otherwise might.

But I shall not debate the details of that controversy. I do not wish to rake up the past; I am willing that it shall now rest. I simply want to repeat that that proposition was defeated by an acrimonious personal controversy against President Grant, in which the parties making war on him were all wrong. We lost Santo Domingo, which we ought to have had, as it is the chain of defense, as was properly stated by the Senator from Idaho. I hope and believe that none of that feeling will enter into this question when we come to vote on the pending treaty. I believe every Senator here will vote on this treaty according to his judgment as to the result to be accomplished. The saying of a few things against the President will amount to nothing. That is all very well; but I believe in the final action we shall rise higher than Senators did at the time they rejected the Santo Domingo treaty. I am glad to see my Democratic friends recognizing the fact that the accomplishment of the great object which the United States wants to accomplish is paramount to any criticism that can be made of any administration.

DISTRICT COURT FOR OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3117) to expedite business in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon. It is a short bill, reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in case of the absence of the United States district judge for the district of Oregon from that district, or of his disability, a circuit judge of the United States of the circuit to which the district belongs may hold the district court and perform the duties of the district judge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 8, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 5, 1904.

PENSION AGENT.

Andrew T. Wood, of Mount Sterling, Ky., to be pension agent at Louisville, Ky., vice Daniel R. Collier, deceased.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 5, 1904.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

William W. Russell, of Maryland, now secretary of the legation at Caracas, Venezuela, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Panama, Panama.

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY.

Chaplain William T. Helms to have the rank of commander in the Navy from the 1st day of October, 1903.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Leonard S. Calkins to be postmaster at Nevada City, in the county of Nevada and State of California.

MISSISSIPPI.

Henry C. Majure to be postmaster at Newton, in the county of Newton and State of Mississippi.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Franklin A. Barkley to be postmaster at Lincolnton, in the county of Lincoln and State of North Carolina.

William J. McDaniel to be postmaster at Rutherfordton, in the county of Rutherford and State of North Carolina.

Robert S. Templeton to be postmaster at Mooresville, in the county of Iredell and State of North Carolina.

NEW JERSEY.

James W. Danser to be postmaster at Freehold, in the county of Monmouth and State of New Jersey.

NEW YORK.

Eugene P. Strong to be postmaster at Bay Shore, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York.

VERMONT.

John Metcalf to be postmaster at Fair Haven, in the county of Rutland and State of Vermont.

TREATY WITH HAITI.

The injunction of secrecy was removed February 5, 1904, from a naturalization treaty between the United States and the Republic of Haiti, signed at Washington on March 22, 1902.

The injunction of secrecy was removed February 5, 1904, from a treaty between the United States and Haiti, signed February 28, 1903, extending the time within which may be effected the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of naturalization between the two countries, signed March 22, 1902.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 5, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if I can agree with the gentleman on the other side as to the length of general debate. How many hours does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] desire?

Mr. LAMB. I should think two hours on a side would be sufficient.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose we agree on three hours. I have had no requests for time on this side. I think three hours are ample. I shall not take any time myself. Let us say not to exceed three hours in all.

Mr. LAMB. We would like to have two hours on this side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well, not to exceed four hours, two of which will be under the control of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. LAMB. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be limited to four hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate may be closed in four hours. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11825, the agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. POWERS of Maine in the chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a few minutes in explaining a few of the salient points of the bill, the increases in salaries, etc. By reference to the report the committee will see that the bill of last year carried a total of $5,478,160, and this year it carries $5,711,240, an increase of $233,080. In making this comparison I paid no attention to the emergency sums for the foot-and-mouth disease and the cotton-boll weevil, which were carried last year in the regular appropriation bill, and the cotton-boll weevil in the deficiency bill this year. The committee will also notice, on the bottom of the first page of the report, that the increase from 1897 to 1903 is from $3,182,902 to $5,711,240, an increase of almost $3,000,000 in seven years. On the following page (page 2) the committee will see the increases by bureaus, and will notice that all along the line the increases have been generous and sufficient to keep the Department in what I call progressive motion.

There are but two increases in the statutory salaries, and these are not made permanent. Five hundred dollars has been added to the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and $500 to the salary of the Chief of the Division of Entomology, but these increases are in the nature of additional compensation only while the offices are held by the present incumbents. The precedent for that was established some years ago in the case of the First Assistant of the Interior Department. There have been no other increases of salaries. There have been some new places provided for on the statutory rolls, which, as we read the bill under the five-minute rule, I will explain.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague what salaries these gentlemen get now.

Mr. BURLESON. The Chief of the Division of Entomology gets $2,750.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry gets $4,500, and the Chief of the Division of Entomology gets $2,750.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, the increase in each case is $500.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir; but this increase is to apply only to the present incumbents.

Mr. PAYNE. Are these gentlemen young and in good health?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are in good, vigorous health. I hope both of them may last a good many years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What is the ground of this increase of salary in the Bureau of Chemistry to $39,500? Has it any relation to the pure-food bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry on investigations into adulterated products from abroad; also, to continue the cane-sirup investigations in Georgia, in addition to the general work of the Chemistry Bureau which it has been pursuing for years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then the legislation in the pure-food bill does have some connection with this?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes. That clause in the pure-food bill covering imports from foreign countries is taken bodily from the agricultural appropriation bill, word for word.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And is it a fact in this connection that it will be necessary to employ additional chemical assistants?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; we have provided for that. We have given an additional sum of money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are any further questions to be asked, I will endeavor to answer them. If not, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. LAMB. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire very briefly to address myself to a feature of the agricultural appropriation bill which has been reported by the able chairman of the Agricultural Committee for present consideration.

During the first session of the present Congress I introduced a resolution which had for its principal object the restoration of the original purpose of the Government distribution of seeds. The original aim of the seed distribution, Mr. Chairman, was undoubtedly laudable. The end in view was the ascertainment of the capacity of the soil. It was the desire of the Government to extend material assistance to the producing masses by enabling them to determine the utmost capabilities of the land which gave them nourishment and life.

In order to show the original purpose of the Government seed distribution, I desire to read that section of the law creating the Agricultural Department in 1862 and to show the purpose which inspired the lawmakers of the country in the inauguration of this custom. Section 527 of the Revised Statutes of 1878 reads as follows:

> The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our country to another.

Now, it is a matter of common knowledge that the distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture has departed from this useful and admirable intention. In order to support this statement, I send to the Clerk's desk the report of the Secretary of Agriculture and call attention to that paragraph which deals with the seed distribution. I ask the attention of the House to the language of the Secretary in comparison with the language of the original law, in order to show how completely the present distribution of seeds has departed from the original intention. I ask the Clerk to read.

> With regard to the securing and distributing of miscellaneous garden and flower seed, the fact remains that this work does not accomplish the ends for which the law was originally framed. There are collected, put up, and distributed now, on Congressional orders, nearly 40,000,000 packets of miscellaneous vegetable and flower seeds each year. These seeds are the best that can be obtained in the market, but from the fact that large numbers of packets are wanted, the seed obtained can be of standard sorts only, such as are to be found everywhere for sale in the open market. As there is no practical object to be gained in distributing this kind of seed, it seems very desirable that some change be made. To this end it would seem wise to limit our work entirely to the securing and distributing of seeds, plants, etc., of new and rare sorts. There is still much to be done in the way of securing seeds, plants, etc., of this kind from abroad, but still more to be accomplished in careful investigations of our own possibilities in this direction. There are many valuable plants scattered all over this country which are still little known outside of their respective localities. These should be collected, tested, and distributed. There are also great possibilities of improving agricultural industries by distributing specially bred seeds and plants.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the report of the Secretary of Agriculture reveals a condition which demands immediate remedy. The Government of the United States has entered the open markets of the country for the purchase of nearly 40,000,000 packets of standard seeds. These seeds are of the commonest varieties. They are distributed at enormous expense throughout the country, regardless of the character of the soil, the nature of the climate, and the occupation of the inhabitants. They subserve no scientific purpose. They add nothing to the existing knowledge of the soil. When we are told by the Secretary that vast benefit may be accomplished through the distribution of new and untried seeds and plants of native and of foreign origin, it seems almost a crime against the agricultural interests of the country that the useless and wasteful system of the present should be permitted to continue.

I shall dismiss with the contempt it deserves the intimation that the present system is a valuable campaign adjunct and that the seeds are sown that they may flower into myriads of votes. Such an intimation is a reflection on the integrity of Congressmen and the intelligence of their constituencies. I resent the insinuation that any Member of the House owes his seat to the senseless method now in operation.

The American people understand and condemn this practice. Not a farmer is deceived by this pretended kindness. When the regular distribution is made there are no other places in the United States where these packages of seed—these Government chromos in pink and blue—are objects of greater merriment and keener ridicule than the rural post-offices around which the people gather to receive the annual dispensation of free garden seed. When the American Congress shall recognize the fact that there is as much intelligence among the people, as much ability to discover fraud, as within these storied walls, then the standard of American statesmanship will have been infinitely uplifted.

The system is erroneous in principle. It is violative of the proper functions of government; it involves a dangerous philosophy. There is no greater reason for the dissemination of standard seed, bought in the open markets and incapable of developing the possibilities of the soil, than for the gratuitous distribution of any other commodity of ordinary purchase and sale. I desire at this point to present a letter from a constituent which illuminates this proposition:

> DEAR SIR: I wish you would send me the seed and other things which I mention below: One peck of some good early corn, 1 bushel of cotton seed, and some good sorghum seed, and a union suit of clothes—a coat 38 in size, and pants 33-34—and anything else you are mind to send me. I am in need of all these things, and they will be gladly received.

[Laughter.]

Now, this gentleman had as complete a right to expect from the United States a suit of clothes, "or anything else," as he expresses it, as the seeds of standard kind. [Applause.]

It is almost universally admitted that the present custom should be changed. It can be made of unlimited value to the American farmer. It has degenerated into a miserable farce, obnoxious alike to Congress and to the people. Let us end it now. If the immense sums now expended for the mere donation of common seed to a favored few could be utilized in the manner so emphatically indicated and so justly desired by the Secretary of Agriculture, the American farmer and the American nation would profit inconceivably. It is a shameful condition of affairs that the agricultural masses, for whom fewer appropriations are made than for any other element of our citizenship, and who contribute most largely to the support of the Government, should be made the profitless beneficiaries of such empty and unpardonable legislation.

With no desire to occupy the rôle of an iconoclast or the attitude of a reformer, I shall offer an amendment at the proper time to the present bill, embodying the change which justice commends and which the Department of Agriculture will indorse. I trust that the amendment will be adopted. For if the current custom of indiscriminate distribution shall indefinitely continue, if this Congressional comedy shall drift into a continuous performance, we shall ultimately be driven to the mournful admission that we are not statesmen, but seedsmen; and it will be in order for some distinguished seedsman, some sainted hero of a score of memorable distributions, some legislative knight upon whose shield is blazoned a radish in its glory or a turnip in repose, to rise in his place with becoming gravity and move, Mr. Chairman, that the American eagle be taken from the mace and supplanted by a package of vegetable seed as the supreme emblem of the genius, the character, and the principal occupation of American statesmanship. [Laughter and applause.]

The following poem taken from a weekly newspaper in my district will indicate the trend of public sentiment on this question:

THE CONGRESSIONAL GARDEN SEEDS.

The time is at hand when I trustfully look
(How my mind on the prospect feeds)
When the mail comes in for a package or two
Of Congressional garden seeds.

'Tis strange how our "Member" my name recollects,
How he knows my desires and my needs!
'Twould glad him to notice my joy when I get
My Congressional garden seeds.

There's lettuce and onions that tardily sprout,
And "punkins" of several breeds,
And "pa'snips"—I'd scorn 'em except for the fact
They're Congressional garden seeds.

The soil I dig deep, I plant 'em with care,
Perspiration from every pore bleeds,
Then I "shoo" out the hens lest they bring up too soon
My Congressional garden seeds.

Each day to my garden with zeal I repair
And struggle with clods and with weeds,
Till a few straggling sprouts show the germinant strength
Of Congressional garden seeds.

All summer I labor and patiently wait,
Fighting slugs, borers, bugs, centipedes;
And I prune, and I water, I spray the weak shoots
Of Congressional garden seeds.

Though I sing as I gaze at my blistered hands
And my back for a short respite pleads,
Yet for "souvenirs" vainly I look; then I cuss
The Congressional garden seeds.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. I will ask the gentleman if he will not please insert with his remarks the amendment which he proposes to offer in order that we may be advised as to what the provisions of it will be?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; I shall be pleased to do so if we do not reach the matter to-day.

I want to say that this amendment will improve the present distribution of seeds; that it will carry out the original purpose of the law, and that it will provide for the distribution of new, uncommon, and untried seeds, for their special breeding, and for the better development of the agricultural possibilities of the country.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman does not wish to be understood, then, as opposing the distribution of seeds to the people?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am opposed to certain features of the present system.

Mr. CANDLER. You simply want to change the system. You still want the people to have the seeds.

Mr. SHEPPARD. You have stated my position correctly.

Mr. LAMB. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL of California. Mr. Chairman, I expect to devote the time that has been assigned to me for debate on this bill to the discussion of an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill at the proper time. I shall direct all my remarks to matters that are really germane to this bill. I believe that every Member of this House recognizes the importance of this measure. I believe that every Member of this House is ready to admit that agriculture is the foundation and the strength of the Republic, and that there is no department of this Government with which we should deal with so much generosity as the Department of Agriculture. In suggesting an amendment to this bill, I do not intend thereby to cast any reflection upon the honorable committee that has had this measure under consideration; but I believe that I have personal knowledge of facts and circumstances which, if they had been fully presented to the committee, would have resulted in the change that I now seek to make.

Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to offer an amendment to this bill, upon page 18 thereof, in line 17, inserting the words "forty-seven thousand" instead of "forty thousand dollars" for the purpose of carrying on the pomological investigation of the Department of Agriculture; and further providing that the sum of $10,000, instead of $3,000, as now provided by the bill, may be used by the Department for the purpose of cooperating with the experiment station of California in the eradication of the disease of the grape known as the "Anaheim disease."

I do not want to place myself in the position of advocating only the interests of my State, the State of California, for I believe that this is a subject that interests every State in this Union in which fruit is grown or in which the grape is cultivated. While it is true that in California we raise more grapes and make more wine than all of the other States of this Union combined, yet it is a subject that will appeal to every Member upon the floor of this House.

Now, what do we want to do? The Department of Agriculture two years ago went into the State of California and established experimental vineyards for the purpose of discovering some practicable method of dealing with the phylloxera and Anaheim disease, which have wrought untold ruin and untold suffering upon the people of my State. In that State they have established but two vineyards. They have done splendid work, but that is not enough. The United States viticulturist in the employment of the Department of Agriculture has recently visited California and spent several months in the study of this question, and has made preliminary arrangements for the establishment of seven more experimental stations in that State in order that the great problem might be properly and amply dealt with.

Now, the Department of Agriculture comes to you and says that this is a necessary work, that this work should be carried on in the interest not only of the people of that great State, but in the interest of the entire country. There is no reason why this House should be at all penurious or overeconomical in allowing the Department to carry on this work.

Now, gentlemen, a great many of you do not represent vineyard districts, but I presume that every man on this floor knows something about the wine industry; but I want to tell you that you do not realize the importance of the wine industry of the State of California. The value of the vineyards in that State to-day is estimated at $38,000,000. There is to-day $100,000,000 invested in the business in that State. In 1885 a disease took a deadly hold on the vineyards of that State, known as the "phylloxera," and if you gentlemen had lived in that State as I do, if you had witnessed the ruin and destruction that was wrought by that dread disease, you would have no hesitation in giving the money that we now ask for. Now, in the county of Napa, where I have made my home for twenty years, the vineyards were simply wiped out. Those people who had all they possessed destroyed before they could hardly realize it, those men who had built comfortable homes upon lands that they owned, simply became tenants of the banks who were compelled to foreclose their liens. In the counties of Napa and Sonoma, where some six or eight million gallons of wine had been produced annually, the vineyards were simply swept out of existence, and these men who had gone there and built up their little vineyards, hoping in a few years to get their reward, were suddenly left penniless.

Now, the phylloxera was finally met by resistant vines, although there were ten years when that country was reduced almost to poverty in every vineyard section of the State. But no sooner had they planted their resistant stock when another disease came upon the vineyards of California, starting in the southern part of that State, and known as the "Anaheim disease." You gentlemen come in here with tales about the boll weevil and you appeal to us for help, and I am heartily glad that you got what you wanted, but I submit that the boll weevil in the cotton of the South was no worse than the phylloxera and the Anaheim disease in the State of California; and if this great Government of ours can come to your relief, if it can say we will reach out and help you, we will give you a quarter of a million dollars to deal with this great destroyer that is attacking your fields, are you going to say that this State of mine, when it comes to you and asks merely for the sum of $7,000, shall not receive the aid that has been given freely and generously to other great industries?

You do not know anything about California. I wish I could take you to that State and show you what we have. Why, the report of the United States viticulturist states there is an area in California that is peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of the grape larger than the entire area of France, and yet in the Republic of France they are to-day producing 1,500,000,000 gallons of wine each year, whereas in the State of California we are producing but 23,000,000 gallons.

Now, if you desire to build up that great Commonwealth, if you desire to build up agriculture in the Far West, if you want to give the vineyards of California a fair chance to thrive and to flourish and to grow, if you want that State to become the peer of sunny France, that leads to-day in the production of wine, I say you can well afford to grant these people the few dollars that they now ask.

Go out into the West! Ask yourself as you look out upon the great fertile prairies that have surrendered to the genius of man and have been converted to the good and welfare of this great people—go out into my own State, into all these great Commonwealths that have been carved from that mighty West, and I ask you what has made them great? What has placed it in the power of the farmers west of the Mississippi to pay off their mortgages and deposit their earnings and profits in the local banks and even loan to Wall street? It is agriculture, successful agriculture, good crops.

Do you people in the East think you would prosper as you now prosper; do you think that this country would be as wealthy in the East if it were not for the great domain that lies beyond the father of waters, where its fields have made it what it is? Now, I say that my State, where we stand first in the production of grapes, when we come to you and tell you that these things are needed, when we ask for but a small sum, when the Secretary of Agriculture, who has given attention to these facts, who has investigated the cost of carrying on this work, when this Department tells you that this sum is necessary to carry on this work successfully, why is it that it can not be given to us? The Secretary placed his estimate with the committee at $47,000 for carrying on all the pomological investigations, including every kind of fruit, including all viticultural interests, and that estimate has been cut down to $40,000. I have no complaint to lodge against the committe, but I think they were not aware of what they were doing to my State when they refused to give the Secretary of Agriculture the money that is absolutely necessary to carry on this work.

As I have already said, the two stations we have there already are doing good work; everybody recognizes that fact. This United States viticulturist has paved the way for seven more. Are you going to say that his work shall be for naught? Are you going to say that we must put this off for one year? I say not. Give them the paltry sum they ask; let there be in the State of California nine experiment stations. The two largest are only 10 acres each and the other seven will average 3 or 4 acres, and it is only with these experimental vineyards that these diseases can be properly dealt with. You know that private enterprise will not take hold of this subject. You have already had experience with that; you know that men as individuals, private citizens, will not take up a great public work like that; it requires governmental aid.

The work of the United States is done in conjunction with the work of the State of California. They are laboring together, helping each other, cooperating in a matter of State and national interest. Now, gentlemen, when the time comes, I want to offer this amendment, and I hope the Committee on Agriculture will not object to it. It is a small matter indeed, but it is necessary. The Department thinks it is necessary, our people think it is necessary, and why should it not be granted? We are going along trying to solve this great problem. As I say, if I could but fasten on your minds the losses that have been sustained by the vineyards of California I believe you would unanimously grant all we desire.

Mr. BURLESON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BELL of California. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that a complete remedy for phylloxera has been discovered in France?

Mr. BELL of California. Yes; and we have been planting resistant vines and endeavoring to graft onto the resistant stocks and thus get rid of the phylloxera.

Mr. BURLESON. The amount carried in this bill was partly intended for the experiments about which the gentleman from California has been talking, and what the committee refused was the amount for the experimental shipments in fruit and investigations affecting the fruit trade here and abroad. Such experiments are now being conducted by the fruit growers in the East on their own account and much more satisfactorily than the Government can make them.

Mr. BELL of California. That is partially true. The Secretary of Agriculture asked for $5,000 for the purpose of making his investigation of the Anaheim disease in the State of California. You have reduced him to $3,000. I say if you can not give us the $7,000, give us the $5,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that the amount asked for experimenting with the disease has partly been allowed, but the amount that was asked for the purpose of investigating with reference to shipments of fruit and investigations of market conditions affecting the fruit trade here and abroad which are now being carried on by large dealers of fruit on their own account in the East and New England States has been refused?

Mr. BELL of California. I think the gentleman is slightly mistaken. I have looked at the estimates of the Department. I wish to settle it now, because the Secretary has asked for $5,000 and you have allowed him $3,000.

Mr. BURLESON. He asked for an allowance of $10,000, and they have allowed him an increase of $3,000. As a matter of fact, as I understand it—I may be mistaken—the allowance has been given him for conducting all the experiments relating to the diseases of grape vines in California of which you have spoken. The amount denied him was for the purpose of conducting investigations and experiments with reference to the shipment of fruit, these investigations and experiments being conducted now by the shippers of fruit in New York and New England on their own account. They say that the experiments by the Agricultural Department have been of no particular benefit to them on this particular line. For these reasons the committee refused the increase asked for this purpose.

Mr. BELL of California. Will the gentleman read the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture for dealing with the Anaheim disease? I have just come from the committee room, and I found that it was $5,000. I have talked with Mr. George Hussman, and he says that the work can not be done for less than $10,000.

Mr. BURLESON. How long have the scientists of the Agricultural Department been investigating the disease of the grapevine referred to by the gentleman?

Mr. BELL of California. For the last two years.

Mr. BURLESON. If that is so, the amount carried in the bill last year provides for the investigations and experiments the gentleman desires. His desires can be met out of the lump sum even without any increase. I mean out of the $37,000 carried in the bill last year.

Mr. BELL of California. Is it not a fact that the Department of Agriculture estimated $5,000 for these experiments this year?

Mr. BURLESON. That may be; but for the experiments and investigation last year money was appropriated and is carried in the $37,000, and in addition to that sum we now give $3,000.

Mr. BELL of California. I have my information from the United States viticulturist, and I talked with Doctor Galloway this morning and found he had asked for $5,000 for the purpose of carrying on these investigations. The committee gave him the discretion to expend $3,000. He may have taken into consideration that he had some moneys that he could use, which, added to the $5,000, would be sufficient; but he has put his estimate into your committee at $5,000.

Mr. BURLESON. I think I am safe in assuring the gentleman that there will be no curtailment of these experiments.

Mr. BELL of California. I know that the United States viticulturist believes that the work can not be conducted for less than $10,000. However, as to that point I am perfectly willing to take the estimate of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, I have just one word more to say, and that is this: I say that for the treatment of this one disease, this anaheim disease, we should receive at least the amount that the Secretary of Agriculture has estimated. I am willing to rely upon the estimate that is in the hands of the committee. That amount is $5,000, as I read it this morning, and we should certainly have that amount to deal with this question; but in asking for the entire $7,000 additional I say we are not asking for anyting unfair or unjust; that our industry warrants it. California never yet has come on her knees to the United States Congress and asked for large appropriations. She does not propose to, but if you protect an industry in one section of the country I believe that you should grant some measure of protection to an industry that is almost as important, at least as important to the people of that State as other industries are to other sections of this Union. I think that the bill should be amended, and at the proper time I shall offer that amendment.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUCKING].

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if I can have your intelligent ear for about five or six minutes on a purely business proposition connected with this bill, I shall consider it a very great favor indeed. The Agricultural Department is now engaged in manufacturing and giving away in unlimited quantities to all who may ask for it a certain preparation known as "blackleg vaccine," which is used for the purpose of curing or preventing the disease known as the "blackleg" among animals. In my district, in the city of Detroit, Mich., is located a house which has expended about $350,000 in getting ready to manufacture and put upon the market this preparation. There are other establishments of the same kind throughout the United States. This house is known as Parke, Davis & Co., and its preparations are sold all over the world. It is the largest house engaged in the manufacture of pharmaceutical products of standard kinds in the world. It employs 275 traveling salesmen, and employs in its plant over 2,000 people.

The Agricultural Department is now manufacturing this blackleg vaccine and giving it away, as I say, in unlimited quantities to any person who may apply for it. Thousands of doses are given away to single individuals, firms, and corporations. Now, it is not my purpose to ask that this business be stopped entirely, but I am going to offer an amendment to this bill limiting the number of doses that shall be given away to any one person, firm, or corporation to 100. The abuse of this is so great as to destroy entirely the business of this concern which has prepared itself at great expense to do the business. The abuse is principally in the far Western States, where the wealthy ranchmen, who are well able to pay for this vaccine to private individuals who are engaged in the business, get from this Bureau all of this vaccine that they choose to ask for. Now, I submit that it is not right that the Government should engage in this business and destroy private enterprise in that direction, and that there is no more justice in the Department manufacturing and giving away in unlimited quantities this product than there would be to do the same thing with quinine or smallpox vaccine, boots and shoes, or anything else, for that matter. The business was started in the beginning in the Bureau on the idea that it was experimental.

Mr. BURLESON. Right on that point, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LUCKING. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that the issuance of this blackleg vaccine by the Department is upon the idea that there is a chance to stamp out blackleg altogether, and that then there will be no necessity for Parke, Davis & Co. or any other firm manufacturing it, or the Government either? If the gentleman will permit me a moment more of his time, I would like to read an extract from the statement of the Secretary made before the Agricultural Committee while they were considering this bill.

Mr. LUCKING. Very well.

Mr. BURLESON. Secretary Wilson says:

Blackleg is a disease that affects young animals, mostly calves; sometimes yearlings, and, very rarely, 2 year olds. The people had great difficulty in getting serum that was powerful enough to treat it. We make it here for probably a tenth of a cent a dose; and we send out, say, a million and a half doses a year, free to the people, and the result is that wherever we send it blackleg is disappearing. We are pushing this work with the theory that if we can prevent blackleg it will die out.

In that same connection he says that blackleg vaccine is made in the laboratories of the Bureau of Animal Industry, which would be maintained anyway, and that, too, at a trifling cost.

Mr. LUCKING. I understand. That is the claim of the Bureau and I was going to state what their claim was when the gentleman interrupted me. I understand that the claim can not be supported. They have made the same claim for years past, and it is my information that blackleg is a disease which ramifies and which will continue from time to time, the same as smallpox or any other disease, and that there is no justification for the position which the Bureau takes in that direction. I submit that it is not fair to private enterprise and that it is not within the legitimate functions of government. In this connection I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk an editorial from the Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter of the United States, which I am informed is the leading journal in that line. I ask the attention of the committee to that, and at the proper time I shall move to make the amendment suggested.

Mr. BURLESON. Before the gentleman takes his seat I should like to finish the reading of this statement of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LUCKING. The gentleman will undoubtedly have all the time he wants for any remarks on this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to read this statement now in connection with the gentleman's remarks, so that the whole matter may be thoroughly understood by the House.

Mr. LUCKING. All right.

Mr. BURLESON. Secretary Wilson further says:

We are pushing this work with the theory that if we can prevent blackleg it will die out.

It is the same with rabies. If you muzzle every dog in the District of Columbia and allow no other dog to come in rabies will not come in. You could not do that. The love for the pup is stronger than the love for man, woman, or child in the District of Columbia, and dogs can not be muzzled here. That is the theory on which we are trying to experiment with blackleg, and we are succeeding. The day should come when there will not be a particle of blackleg in the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, Mr. Secretary, these laboratories are maintained by the Bureau of Animal Industry and its manufacture costs a mere trifle.

Secretary WILSON. Yes. Of course we are interfering with the trade, and if we destroy blackleg in cattle we will destroy their trade in blackleg serum altogether. The economic question is whether we should maintain blackleg for the benefit of these manufacturers.

I hope for these reasons, so well stated by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. LUCKING. That has been the contention of the Bureau for several years past. They could make the same statement, "our theory is so and so," with reference to smallpox or any other disease which springs up from time to time. The question is simply whether we shall maintain that kind of business in a Government bureau. It does not seem to me that it is proper.

Mr. HAY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LUCKING. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman, I believe, represents the city of Detroit?

Mr. LUCKING. Yes, sir; my district is wholly in that city.

Mr. HAY. Then let me ask the gentleman how much has been spent by the Government at the city of Detroit for rivers and harbors within the last ten years?

Mr. LUCKING. I do not know that anything has been spent inside the city limits of Detroit.

Mr. HAY. I mean, of course, for the benefit of that city.

Mr. LUCKING. For the waterways of the Great Lakes I can not tell how much has been spent—perhaps the gentleman can—a great many thousands, no doubt—perhaps millions—for the benefit of a commerce which is the wonder of the world and the special pride of all Americans to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the cattle industry the pride of all Americans? Is not the beef industry of the United States its chief industry?

Mr. LUCKING. It is one of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then it is entitled to as much protection as any other industry.

Mr. LUCKING. Within reasonable limits we have not any objection. We think the quantity of this article distributed by the Department should not exceed 100 doses to any one person, firm, or corporation. We believe that an abuse has grown up in the Department in connection with this matter.

I ask the Clerk to read what I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE OF SERUMS.

The annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture makes some interesting disclosures which lead to the conviction that the Department officials were not sincere in their original announcement that the manufacture and distribution of vaccines and serums would be confined to the scientific demonstration of the value of these remedial agents, and that the commercial production and distribution would be left to private establishments. It appears that instead of leaving the production and distribution to legitimate manufacturing firms the Bureau of Animal Industry has steadily increased the manufacture and free distribution of these products.

In 1892 the Government factory produced and distributed over 1,688,000 doses of blackleg vaccine virus, while during the past fiscal year the amount was increased to over 1,729,000 doses, and this despite the fact that it had been shown that not only many wealthy ranchmen had been supplied with Government vaccine, although amply able to pay for the commercial product, but that ranchers' supply establishments and many veterinary surgeons had been obtaining the Government product free of cost and sold it to cattle owners. The Chief of the Bureau naively remarks that the demand for the preventive remedy continues to increase, and consequently he asks for an increase in the appropriation for the increased manufacture and free distribution of this product. In other words, the Government is asked to increase the appropriation in order to enable the Bureau of Animal Industry to increase its competition with legitimate manufacturers and supply its products to a larger number of cattle owners and to enable supply concerns and veterinarians to reap a richer harvest in selling the product which the Government furnishes free of cost.

This is a class of competition the legitimate manufacturers can not contend against, and should receive the most emphatic condemnation of the lawmakers at Washington. The Government has demonstrated the value of these preventive remedies, and should now leave the manufacture and sale to those who conduct pathological laboratories as commercial enterprises. There is no need for the Government to enter into competition with private enterprise of its citizens in the manufacture of the serums, vaccines, and viruses, as the various private laboratories are able to supply all requirements, and at prices to those requiring them which are neither excessive nor burdensome.

The specious plea that the production at the public expense and free distribution is to benefit only those unable to benefit by these remedial agents does not hold good, and, as we have before shown, these supplies are diverted from their legitimate purpose and the needy are not benefited. As well might the Government engage in the manufacture of quinine or, in fact, almost any commercial product. Determined effort should be made to prevent Congress increasing the appropriation by giving the legislators full information of the working of the Government serum factory and the abuse of the Government's generosity, as well as of the unfair competition with legitimate manufacturers, who are taxed to support this unjust competition.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CURRIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4122. An act to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes; and

S. 3916. An act to amend section 2699 of the Revised Statutes, relating to compensation of collectors of customs.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution for the transportation of Porto Rican teachers to the United States and return.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LAMB. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to submit any remarks at this time in reference to the bill under consideration, and there would be no necessity for doing so but for the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], to whom we listened a moment ago, in reference to the seed distribution which is yearly made by the Agricultural Department. Somehow or other I feel that whenever anybody strikes a blow at the distribution of the seeds which go to the farmers and laboring men of this country and to the people generally something should be said in reply to any suggestion proposing to reduce this distribution.

The gentleman suggested that the amendment which he proposes to offer would change the system; but he added that he did not desire to be understood as saying that he was opposed to the distribution of valuable, rare, and uncommon seeds to the people, but that he was opposed to the distribution of standard seeds, like the bulk of those which are distributed under the present system.

I am glad that the gentleman expressed himself as favorable to the distribution of some seed and that he would not favor the discontinuance of seed entirely. If there is any system which will advance this distribution in any way and increase rather than decrease the quantity of seed, I as a friend to the seed distribution would not oppose it, but I would want to be absolutely sure that it did not curtail the distribution now being made under the present law by present methods.

The farmers of this country get less than any other class of people from the Government in return for the expenditures which they are required to make. While we are making very large appropriations for all the other Departments of the Government—and I am opposed to no necessary expenditure to any Department which is for the good of the country or for the advancement of its interests or welfare—yet, while we make these large appropriations for the other Departments of the National Government—very large in proportion to the appropriations made for the Agricultural Department—it seems to me that instead of talking about cutting off the few benefits that the farmers receive at the hands of the Government through this most beneficent Department, we should enlarge the operations of that Department; and instead of reducing the distribution of seeds to the people, I would rather favor seeing it enlarged to such an extent that the requests which come up from all over the country might be readily met by the representatives of the people here on this floor.

The gentleman read a letter which he had received from a constituent of his, in which the writer asked him to send not only some seeds, but also said that he wanted a suit of clothes and one thing or another—I do not at this time remember all the items. Now, while the gentleman read that letter from some constituent who thought the Government was prepared not only to furnish seeds to the people, but was willing and anxious, through its Representatives—of whom there are none more obliging than the gentleman himself—to furnish them with clothes, he did not read to us a single letter or request which he had received from the honest, patriotic farmers of this country, asking in earnestness and seriously that he should send them the seeds to which they are entitled and which they desire to use for the experiments contemplated and intended by the Agricultural Department.

Why, Mr. Chairman, only a moment ago I put my hand in my pocket and found eight or ten letters which I received only this morning. Among them are four requests for seeds, and I dare say the gentleman has received something of the same kind this morning in his mail; if he has not, he will get such letters before the day is passed, and I venture to say he is not only receiving such requests to-day, but almost every day. The people of his district, like the people of other districts, are asking for seed provided for in the last appropriation, an appropriation just like this appropriation.

Here is one I have just received:

ABERDEEN, MISS., February 3, 1904.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER, Jr., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please send me some garden seeds.

A simple request, it is true, but one that is entitled to consideration at my hands and at the hands of the Government of the United States.

Here is another one:

FOLLY, LEE COUNTY, MISS., February 3, 1904.

Please send me some garden seeds. I will appreciate it very much if you will also send me a package of flower seeds.

He not only wants the benefits to be derived from the garden seeds, but wants the flower seeds to beautify his home and make it more attractive for the good wife who presides therein.

Here is another one:

STURGIS, MISS., February 3, 1904.

Please send me some cotton seed, and I will appreciate it also if you will send me a package of garden seeds.

Here is another one:

VERONA, MISS., February 3, 1904.

Please send me some flower seed.

A modest request from a most excellent lady. God bless the ladies! They are God's noblest, sweetest, and best gift to man, and I am always delighted to hear from them and to comply with their requests when possible. [Applause.]

I simply read these four, which I find in this small package of letters that I received only a moment ago, to demonstrate the fact that the people of this country want these seeds sent to them, and when we send them we are but responding to the popular demand on the part of the people throughout the United States of America, for I dare say practically every Member of Congress receives similar requests. And if there is any class of people in this country to whose request we ought to respond and to whom we ought always to be glad to listen, it is the farmers who till the soil and who bring about the balance of trade in this country in our favor as against the world. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Seventy-one per cent of the foreign export trade of this country in the past year consisted of farm products.

Mr. HILL of Mississippi. Does not this bill provide that the Secretary of Agriculture shall distribute seeds which are fit for the climate and locality in which they are to be planted? And does he not have that requirement in view in making the distribution?

Mr. CANDLER. It does; and it provides that the Agricultural Department shall provide fit and suitable seed for the different sections and localities of the country and distribute exactly the character of seeds which I understand the gentleman from Texas proposes to provide for in his amendment, as well as the varieties now being distributed, which he calls standard seed and which he desires to discontinue and stop.

The bill says:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

And further provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such seeds, get the best seeds he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned and in which same are to be distributed, and such seeds shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States.

I thank my colleague, Mr. HILL, for that suggestion. And there is no better way, so far as that is concerned, for testing the fitness of the different varieties of seeds for the soil of this country throughout the length and breadth of it than by making an actual test with the seeds themselves by putting them into the soil. You may theorize about it, you may have your ideas, and you may come to your conclusions, but when the seed is planted and you have an actual opportunity to see the product with your own eyes and to enjoy the fruits that result from it, you no longer have to theorize, but you have a real test. Then you can see absolutely and beyond question the benefits to be derived from it and the soil that is suitable to the seed that you have planted therein.

Now, as I stated a moment ago, if there are any people in the United States of America to whom we ought to listen, it is the farmers of this broad land, and I suppose that if I had asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] the question when he was upon the floor—and if I am not correct he can correct me—how many seeds he had sent out to his district, I would not be surprised if he had responded that he sent out his quota allowed to him under the general distribution, and that in addition thereto he went out and in order to supply the requests from his people he secured by his persuasive powers—which are great—all he could of our very kind friends from the cities who had any to spare, and then possibly applied to the Secretary of Agriculture to get an additional amount to send to his constituents.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the gentleman that I have not used all these methods.

Mr. CANDLER. Well, I have; and it has given me great pleasure to send to my constituents my full quota under the general distribution, and to secure an additional amount, so as to supply promptly the personal requests which have come to me since my quota went out.

Mr. BURLESON. Is that an answer to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas that this practice ought to be abolished?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; for it shows that the people want these seed—and in my judgment they ought to have them—and therefore I contend that the practice ought not to be abolished.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I admire the persistence of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. CANDLER. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I admire the spirit and the purpose of the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, and it in no way conflicts with the argument which I have made.

Mr. CANDLER. Is that an answer to my suggestion that the people want the seed sent out and that the distribution each year of seed as heretofore should not be discontinued or abolished?

Mr. SHEPPARD. When I first came to Congress I used almost every possible method of getting as many seeds as I could, and it seemed to me that that was the principal occupation of a new Member.

Mr. CANDLER. That is one of his occupations. You have not lost your ardor in that respect, have you?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No, indeed; but it was through that experience that I began to see the defects of the present system.

Mr. CANDLER. Have you not had numbers and numbers of personal requests for seeds after you have sent out all that you had?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, quite a number; and now I will ask you if you ever received a request from any constituent of yours for articles of clothing or anything of the kind?

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, yes; I received a letter from one gentleman requesting a hat for himself [laughter] and also one for his wife—a man in Mississippi never forgets his wife [great laughter]; but the fact that your constituent asked for some clothes and mine asked for two hats is no reason to abolish the seed distribution or to change the system now in practice.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, proceeding a little further, because I had just remarked that if there was any class of people in the United States to whom we should listen it was the farmer. Why? Because we find from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture that but for the farmers of the United States during the past year the balance of trade would have been against us and that we are indebted for our progress in the markets of foreign countries absolutely to the farmers of the United States of America. You talk to me about protection that is given to the manufacturers and the protection that is given to the various industries throughout the United States; they have never been able to protect us against the foreign powers or to keep the balance of trade in our favor.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not true that the farmers of this country, who have kept the balance of trade in favor of this Government, have been given less appropriations than any other Department of the Government?

Mr. CANDLER. It is true. The appropriation is about $100,000,000 for the War Department, and I dare say that the appropriations for the Navy Department will be about the same, making, practically, $200,000,000 for the implements of warfare in a time of peace, and this appropriation is between five and six millions of dollars for the Agricultural Department, the Department of the people who are pursuing their honest labor and toiling to make a living by the sweat of their brows on the farms throughout America.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman know how much money has been expended for seeds during the time that they have been distributed by the Department?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. SIMS. Will it altogether exceed the appropriations for the St. Louis fair?

Mr. CANDLER. It might not. I have not had an occasion or the opportunity to investigate that question.

Mr. SIMS. And they are coming here to borrow $4,600,000 more.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, yes; I understand they want to borrow that amount for a short time. The money is now loaned to national banks, where it is being used for their interest, and it would be withdrawn from the national banks if the loan is made and loaned to the fair and be put into circulation in the South, where the people would derive some benefit from it; and then in a few months it will be returned from the treasury of the fair to the Treasury of the United States, after being accumulated by the fair from the patronage of the world. And hence the money, or a large portion of it, will be left in the South—and that will do us no harm.

I am advised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] that the appropriation for the Navy Department will be about $95,000,000 for this year, and hence, as I said a moment ago, the appropriations for the War Department and the Navy Department—for these two Departments—will be, in round numbers, $200,000,000 to provide implements of war in a time of peace, and for the peaceful tillers of the soil of the United States of America we only appropriate, in round numbers, about $6,000,000. One hundred and ninety-four million dollars less is given for the benefit of the farmers who till the soil; and I assert, without fear of contradiction, that there is no appropriation that is made to any department of the Government that is as valuable to the Government, as useful in the development of our foreign trade and in sustaining our prosperity as the appropriation to the Agricultural Department. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER. I sincerely thank my amiable friend from Virginia for his kindness. He can always be depended on to stand by the farmers. Now, I want to call attention to this appropriation for the distribution of the seed. It is, "$290,000, of which amount not more than $48,000 shall be expended for labor in the city of Washington, D. C., and $40,000 to collect and purchase valuable seeds, plants, etc., from foreign countries for experimental tests to be carried on in cooperation with the agricultural experiment stations, and not less than $202,000 shall be allowed for Congressional distribution;" hence the net appropriation for Congressional distribution of seed by Members of Congress is only $202,000.

Mr. BOWIE. Only two-thirds of that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and two thousand dollars is for the purchase of seed. Forty-eight thousand can be used for labor, and $40,000 for purchase of seeds from foreign countries. The gentleman from Mississippi stated the matter correctly.

Mr. CANDLER. I thank the gentleman from New York. Forty-eight thousand for labor and $40,000 for foreign seed is taken out of the $290,000, leaving $202,000 for Congressional distribution, and two-thirds of the seed purchased with that amount goes to the Representatives and Senators to be distributed among the people, and one-third is retained by the Secretary for distribution to be made by him. I am glad, however, to bear testimony to the fact that the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, who is a farmer himself, is always very accommodating—at least I have found him so—and is always greatly interested in the welfare of the farmers and the development of agriculture in every part of this magnificent country, and hence is always ready to aid Members of Congress in responding to the personal requests of their constituents by supplying them with additional seed, as far as it is possible for him to do so out of the one-third of the seed which is reserved to be distributed by him.

Now, then, I want to call attention to this point in reference to the balance of trade, which has been kept in favor of this country by the farmers. I have the facts and figures, which are contained in a statement made by the Secretary of Agriculture, in which it is shown that we owe absolutely to the farmers the fact that the balance of trade to-day is in our favor.

I read from the last annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture:

> The immense exports from the farms of the country lead to an examination of the so-called "balance of trade." This examination reveals what seems to have escaped the attention of the public, and that is that the favorable balance of trade, everything included, is due to the still more favorable balance of trade in the products of the farm.
> During the thirteen years 1890-1902 the average annual excess of domestic exports over imports amounted to $275,000,000, and during the same time the annual average in favor of farm products was $337,000,000, from which it is apparent that there was an average annual adverse balance of trade in products other than those of the farm amounting to $62,000,000, which the farmers offset and had left $275,000,000 to the credit of themselves and the country.
> Taking the business of 1903, the comparison is much more favorable to the farmers than during the preceding thirteen-year period, since the value of domestic exports over imports was $367,000,000, the entire trade being included, while the excess for farm products was $422,000,000, which was sufficient not only to offset the unfavorable balance of trade of $56,000,000 in products other than those of the farm, but to leave, as above stated, the enormous favorable balance of $367,000,000.
> During the last fourteen years there was a balance of trade in favor of farm products, without excepting any year, that amounted to $4,806,000,000. Against this was an adverse balance of trade in products other than those of the farm of $865,000,000, and the farmers not only canceled this immense obligation, but had enough left to place $3,940,000,000 to the credit of the nation when the books of international exchange were balanced.
> These figures tersely express the immense national reserve-sustaining power of the country under present quantities of production. It is the farmers who have paid the foreign bondholders.

To recapitulate, but for the farmers last year there would have been a balance of trade against us of $56,000,000, but the farmers canceled that and left $367,000,000 to our credit. But for the farmers in the past fourteen years there would have been the enormous sum of $865,000,000 against us, but the farmers met that, settled it, and left the marvelous and almost incomprehensible sum of $3,940,000,000 to the credit of America. The crowning glory of this country is her wonderful agriculture and the amazing results it has accomplished. [Applause.]

It is the farmers who have paid our foreign bondholders and saved this country from peddling out its securities in the markets of the world and changed it from a debtor nation to a creditor nation, and if that be true, and it is a statement that can not be doubted or questioned, am I not correct when I say we owe more to the farmers of America than to any other class of people in all this country, and that instead of abolishing or curtailing the few things that they do receive at the hands of the National Government we ought to enlarge them and give them better opportunities and better benefits and greater favors, if possible, than we have ever given them in the past? [Applause.] Let us give them more seed, aid them in building "good roads," extend rural delivery of the mails as rapidly as possible, build the canal, do everything in our power to build up the agricultural interests of the country and to make the life of the farmer comfortable, profitable, and happy, and thereby render the greatest service possible to all of our constituents, because when you build up the farming interests of the country you build up every other interest in the country. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] says if we continue this system we will be known as "seedsmen" rather than "statesmen;" and I may be called a "seedsman" rather than a "statesman" because I stand here and advocate the distribution of seed to the people, and especially to the farmers; but you may call me what you please, and name me what you may, as long as I stay here, so help me God, I will raise my voice in the farmer's interest and contend for those things which I believe to be for his good, and thereby help him if I can, and by helping him benefit all the people, because to him we owe more in the past, and we are going to owe more in the future, than we owe to any other class of our citizenship. [Great applause.]

to our shores, and it is the farmer who in time of war stands ready to go to the front and bare his breast to defend the country that he loves. It is the farmer's wife who kisses her bright-faced boy good-bye and faces the loneliness, difficulties, and dangers of isolated country life and tells him to go and remain so long as his services are necessary in the defense of his country and for the good of his people. It is she who under like circumstances gives her husband to the same cause, and whether it be in success or in difficulties, whether it be in time of peace or in war, whether it be in prosperity or in great financial crises, it is the farmer to whom we must turn at last for relief, and, thank God, we have never turned to him unless he came to our rescue and furnished the relief which was required. [Applause.]

I applaud the sentiment and the truth expressed by John Trotwood Moore in his work entitled "A Summer's Hymnal," wherein, in substance, he says: The farmer's life is a loyal and patriotic life, sustained by a faithful hand, that has grasped so often the burden of duty and carried it so unselfishly. It is a hard hand, it is true, but it is faithful and honest, and in its rough grip more gentleness dwells, more truth and honor lay, than in many another of softer parts and finer turn. It may be rough, like the roots of the oak, twisted and hardened, gnarled and knotted, in the primal fight for life with the elements of nature. But unbeautiful as it is, it has borne its full burden in the fight of civilization and the battle of the world. It may be misshapen and its joints large from strain and toil, and the veins may run through it like channels of a stream deep cut, and it may be curved in like the turn of a plow handle and deep set like the grip of an ax helve, and deep set and scarred.

But if to-day there comes an upheaval of the earth in the fusion of rock and matter, and this hand, of all earth's civilization, alone leaves its imprint there to be read eons of ages hence by beings of enlightenment and light in the museums of a higher civilization, well may it stand embedded in some kindred block of stone, not to point to the name and lineage of some prehistoric race, but through all the ages of time it would stand as the "Track of duty," the "Emblem of patriotism" in "the Man age of earth." [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, this would seem to be a proper time to call the attention of the House to a slight error in the last annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. This report is a very able and interesting one, as are all the reports that have been made by the present Commissioner, and the error to which I allude is one so slight that ordinarily it would not be worthy of mention, but it has been used for purposes so serious that I deem it best to call the attention of the House to it, and through the House the attention of the country.

On page 158 of this report appears a table entitled "Receipts under the oleomargarine law during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903." In that table appears this item: "Collections on oleomargarine imported from foreign countries, $3,171.16." At the rate of the internal-revenue tax of 15 cents a pound, this would be an internal-revenue tax upon over 21,000 pounds of imported oleomargarine.

On page 160 the Commissioner continues his figures for the months of July, August, and September of the current fiscal year, and in this table appears the item of $2,708.65 internal-revenue tax collected on imported oleomargarine, at the rate of 15 cents a pound. This would indicate an importation of over 19,000 pounds.

When I came to read this report these figures attracted my attention, figures which show that there were over 40,000 pounds of oleomargarine imported into the port of Chicago during three months, June to August, inclusive, 1903. On imported oleomargarine there is an internal-revenue tax of 15 cents a pound, and on imported oleomargarine there is a customs tax of 6 cents a pound. This would make a total tax of 21 cents a pound on 40,000 pounds of oleomargarine imported and withdrawn from consumption in Chicago in three months.

As I say, these figures seemed so astonishing to me that I made some inquiries, especially to find where this oleomargarine came from, because I happen to know that Chicago is the place where they make the best, the purest, and the sweetest oleomargarine that is turned out anywhere in the world. It is a product which is now considered by all skillful cooks superior to any kind of dairy butter for most forms of cooking and, I may add further, Mr. Chairman, a product for use on the table superior to nine-tenths of the so-called dairy butter. So I was astonished to find that 40,000 pounds of imported oleomargarine came into Chicago in ninety days, and I naturally wondered where it came from.

I made some inquiries at the Bureau of Statistics, but could get no information, as they had no such statistics. The Customs Bureau in the Treasury Department could throw no light on the subject. When the Commissioner of Internal Revenue took the matter up he found that these items were the result of a simple mistake, as appears from a letter which he sent to me under the date of January 19, 1904, which I will read. It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, January 19, 1904.

Hon. H. S. BOUTELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In regard to your inquiry relative to imported oleomargarine received in the first district of Illinois, as shown by the Commissioner's Annual Report for the fiscal year ended June 20, 1903, pages 158 and 160, you are advised that a letter has this day been received from Collector Hertz, of Chicago, stating that he made no collections on account of imported oleomargarine during the months of June and August, 1903; that during the month of June he collected $3,171.16 and during the month of August $2,708.65 on account of oleomargarine taxed at the rate of one-fourth cent per pound; that his report on Form 23 was erroneous, and that the items which should have appeared opposite abstract 26½ were dropped one line to abstract 26½, which made the collections from oleomargarine at one-fourth cent per pound appear under oleomargarine imported from foreign countries at 15 cents per pound.

Therefore it is clearly shown that no oleomargarine imported from foreign countries was received in the first district of Illinois during the last fiscal year, or during the months of July, August, and September of the present fiscal year.

Respectfully, J. W. YERKES, Commissioner.

So that this whole story of 40,000 pounds of oleomargarine imported, on which a combined internal-revenue and customs tax of 21 cents a pound was paid, has simply no foundation in truth in it, and was the result of a mere clerical error made by some subordinate who filled out the blank. It would seem hardly worth while to take up the time of the House to call attention to this matter if it had not been made the basis of some very serious representations, both in the press and elsewhere. Of course the two conclusions at once drawn from the fact that such importations took place were these: First, that the present oleomargarine law was a revenue measure, and I think it would astonish the most ardent friends and supporters of this unjust and discriminating law to have it referred to as a revenue measure.

In the second place, this large importation on which had been paid the internal revenue and customs tax would tend to show that the oleomargarine industry must be an industry in which there is a hidden, secret, and enormous profit to warrant the importation of this article and the payment of a tax of 21 cents a pound on it in addition to the transportation and the cost of manufacture. And so these quotations have been used throughout the country as tending to support these two statements.

But the most serious feature of it all was that in the supplemental brief filed by the Government in the pending cases in the Supreme Court to test the constitutionality of the oleomargarine law. On page 24 of the brief these erroneous figures from this report of the Internal Revenue Commissioner were given to the court with these erroneous deductions that naturally were made therefrom that the law was a revenue law and that the oleomargarine industry was enormously profitable.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I took occasion to at once call the attention of the Department of Justice to the fact that there was no truth whatever in the items as given in the report, and the Solicitor-General of course at once called the attention of the court to the error which had been contained in their brief.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not the truth that the effect of the oleomargarine bill, as passed here by Congress, has been to suppress the industry of oleomargarine to the benefit of the dairy industry?

Mr. BOUTELL. Why, certainly; that was the only object of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That was the intention of the bill?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Using the taxing power to aid one industry to the destruction of another?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Has that been the result of the bill?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes. Almost every oleomargarine factory in this country has been on its last legs for some months, and if this case in the Supreme Court is decided against the manufacturers, it will destroy the industry. I think they have suffered long enough without having to run up against such a mistake as this, used in such a serious way.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly; if I have the time, I should be glad to have the gentleman ask me anything he wishes.

Mr. LAMB. I will yield the time to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. The gentleman states that the oleomargarine factories of this country are on their last legs.

Mr. BOUTELL. I understand they are in very serious condition.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the total oleomargarine production for last year was 72,000,000 pounds?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes, but that was very much below what it was the year before, I think 50 per cent less than it was two years ago.

Mr. BURLESON. In other words, this pernicious law has accomplished the object it was intended to accomplish?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What was the production of oleomargarine last year?

Mr. BOUTELL. I could not give the exact figures.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. How much above 72,000,000 pounds?

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. It was 125,000,000 pounds.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman consider an industry on its last legs when it manufactures 70,000,000 pounds a year?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes, considering the number of factories and the fact that they made 125,000,000 of pounds the year before.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, its legs will be long enough to carry it a good while yet, I think.

Mr. BOUTELL. Not if the present unjust law remains in force.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] want to use any more time? If not, I will move that the general debate be closed and that we now take up the reading of the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I would like to know if there is any provision made in this bill which will permit the Secretary of Agriculture to pay for the services rendered by crop reporters in the different States for sending in their reports?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not paid in money. They are paid in the way of documents and bulletins and horse books—things of that sort. I presume the gentleman refers to the crop reporters?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I mean the crop reporters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understand there is no complaint made by them nor is there any demand on their part that they shall receive anything. It is a voluntary work, and the Government pays them the compliment of sending them documents and bulletins and farm publications generally.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know that the Government up to this time has not been paying them, but I want to know if this bill contains any provision looking to a change in that regard?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill does not do it, and an effort to amend the bill in that respect of course would be enacting new legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the gentleman stands ready to make such a point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should have to make it.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is all I desire to know about.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD].

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the provisions of this bill embraced under the Bureau of Statistics and Salaries on page 42. The report says that this item has been increased $15,100. I suppose there is no objection on the part of any Member of this House to this provision, but representing, as I do, one of the greatest trucking sections in the United States, I feel it incumbent upon me to call the attention of the Members of the House to this item, so that it may be thoroughly understood and every Member may know the purpose of the increase and the necessity that exists and the claims these crops have for recognition and help by the General Government. The farmer engaged in growing truck produces wealth for the country and is entitled to the same consideration given growers of other important crops.

We are all familiar with the interest the Government takes in the statistical division of the Agricultural Department with reference to crop reports, frost conditions, and acreage, with reference to cotton, wheat, and other important crops raised in the United States. Mr. Chairman, there has been no report upon the subject of tobacco, rice, or trucking crops which are grown in nearly all of the States of the Union. I desire to submit for the consideration of the House a few statistics in relation to the trucking industry that I have gathered from the Agricultural Department through the courtesy of Doctor Corbett.

The trucking industry in the United States is so diverse in its nature, covers such a wide range of crops and climatic conditions that even those engaged in the industry have no adequate conception of its extent and importance. The reports of the last census, however, offer figures which enable us to present in a brief and concise form an idea of the magnitude of the industry. We are accustomed to look upon the trucking industry as a very small factor in the general agriculture of the country, but compared with the great staples corn, cotton, wheat, oats, orchard fruits, etc., the products of the truck farms take an important position. There are in the United States 5,739,657 farms, which produce crops valued at $2,910,138,663, of which amount each of the crops listed contributes the amount set opposite it in the table.

Crop.	Acres.	Value.	Value per acre.
Corn	94,916,911	$828,258,326	$8.73
Hay and forage	61,991,166	484,256,846	7.85
Cotton	24,275,101	370,708,746	15.27
Wheat	52,588,574	399,945,320	7.03
Vegetables	5,753,191	242,170,148	42.09
Oats	29,539,098	217,098,584	7.35
All fruits	----------	131,423,517	----------
Truck (alone)	----------	118,255,243	57.36
Orchard fruits	----------	85,751,840	----------
Tobacco	1,101,483	56,993,093	51.74
Small fruits	----------	25,030,877	----------
Rye	2,054,292	12,290,540	5.98
Subtropical fruits	----------	8,542,863	----------

From the foregoing table it will be noted that vegetable crops hold the fifth position in rank among the great sustaining crops of the country. The trucking industry, which is a purely commercial subdivision of this vegetable industry, ranks eighth among the great wealth-producing crops. With the exception of the aggregate value of all fruit crops, the truck industry stands next in value to the cereals and is $34,000,000 more than the value of the orchard fruits of the country. This industry returns more than twice as much to the nation as the tobacco industry and about fourteen times as much as the subtropical fruits of the country. The reason that the truck business has never been considered one of the important factors in the agriculture of the country is the comparatively small area which it covers in any particular locality. There are in all only 5,753,191 acres devoted to this industry, and for that reason it has not figured largely in the general farm operations of the country, some of which, like corn, cover 94,916,911 acres.

The character of the industry, however, is indicated by the value of the crop per acre. The average value for corn is $8.73, and for cotton $15.27, while for truck it is $57.35, almost four times as much as for cotton and seven times as much as for corn. This explains the rank of the industry and indicates its intensive character. In comparing these figures it must be borne in mind that they represent the average for all sections of the country, all grades of producers, and the whole range of trucking crops. If special crops were to be selected and the returns of the most successful grower made the basis for comparison the differences between the cereals and truck crops would appear still more striking. In many instances corn is made to yield as much as $60 to $70 per acre, while truck crops may be made to return as high as $800 to $1,000 per acre. Such returns, however, are only obtained under the best of conditions, with intelligent management, both as regards cultivation and marketing.

For purposes of comparison the general averages will be most satisfactory, as they do not represent extreme conditions, but results which can be attained by any skillful and painstaking grower. The figures presented under the head of "truck" by no means represent the commercial standing of the industry. The census reports the total vegetable industry as having a value of $242,170,148. Of this, truck is allowed $118,255,243, the market garden $67,399,348, the family garden $46,477,087, or a total of $232,131,678, thus leaving $10,038,470 as the value of the vegetable crops used by the canneries of the country, which is undoubtedly very close to the true value of the product. Taking, then, the aggregate value of the truck, the market garden, and the cannery crops, we find the wealth production from the growth of vegetables to be $195,693,061. This makes no account of the $46,477,087 worth of vegetables grown in family gardens.

If the corn, hay, and other cereal crops were to be measured by the actual amount put upon the market and sold for cash, I dare say the rating of the crops would be still more markedly changed, with the result that the vegetable crop would stand much higher than at present.

As before stated, vegetable crops are staple crops; the products are perishable, but at the same time are necessities. It is therefore impossible for any one section to monopolize the production of all or, in fact, any one of these crops. The maps here presented not only indicate the wide distribution of these crops but emphasize the magnitude and importance of the local production of these crops about the great centers of consumption. This is again emphasized by the fact that the States with the largest consuming capacity are also the greatest producers. There were in 1899 twelve States each of which reported over 175,000 acres devoted to vegetable growing, New York State alone growing over 542,000 acres, while Minnesota, with many adverse conditions, devoted 177,138 acres to the industry. Eleven States derived over $7,500,000 each from the industry.

New York	$25,706,430
Pennsylvania	15,832,904
Ohio	12,354,407
Illinois	10,346,797
Michigan	11,098,136
Virginia	9,083,274
Mississippi	8,725,502
New Jersey	8,425,596
Wisconsin	8,048,511
Texas	7,677,242
Iowa	7,588,856

With this vast country interested in this wealth-producing crop, I believe it will strike every Member of this House as fitting that this industry should receive at the hands of the General Government the same aid that the production of cereals, cotton, and other crops receives at the hands of the Agricultural Department. For that reason I have offered these few statistics so that Members may be able to appreciate the necessity and claims that these industries, and the trucking industry especially, have for reports of the character now furnished with reference to the other crops of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] such time as he may desire to occupy.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this general debate upon the agricultural appropriation bill offers a convenient opportunity for remarks explanatory of the operation and effect of the oleomargarine law.

It is now over two years since the Committee on Agriculture reported the so-called "antioleo bill," which, after a long debate and most vigorous opposition in both branches of Congress, became a law May 9, 1902, becoming operative July 1, 1902. Obviously sufficient time has elapsed to fairly indicate the effect of legislation regarded by many as too drastic. The prophecies of failure and disaster uttered upon this floor during the week's discussion which preceded the passage of the bill will be long remembered.

It was alleged that a great industry would be ruined and the manufacture of oleomargarine made unprofitable; whereas results have proven that while the production of a fraudulent article, intended to be clandestinely sold as counterfeit dairy butter, has been curtailed, yet the manufacture of a more legitimate product, usually honestly sold without deception, is still continued.

It was claimed that oleomargarine colored in imitation of yellow butter, if taxed 10 cents per pound, could not be profitably manufactured; yet the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that over 5,000,000 pounds of colored oleomargarine, subject to this high tax, was manufactured and sold during the first fiscal year after the law became operative.

It was said that uncolored oleomargarine could not be sold except in very limited quantities, but the Bureau reports indicate that nearly 70,000,000 pounds were sold in American markets during the last fiscal year, paying a tax of only one-fourth cent per pound, in place of the 2-cent tax formerly levied, and inferentially benefiting consumers to the extent of at least the difference of 1¾ cents per pound.

Representatives of live-stock associations and of oleo manufacturers asserted that the price of oleo oil would be largely reduced, to the great and permanent injury of the stock-growing interests of the West; whereas the highest prices ever quoted for oleo oil have been obtained since the enactment of the oleomargarine law.

Gentlemen from the cotton-growing States were alarmed for the cotton-seed oil industry, believing that the consumption of that oil would be diminished, with a consequent reduction in price. But events have shown that cotton-seed oil is used in increasing quantities and at higher prices, its larger use as a slight coloring ingredient being deemed desirable by oleo manufacturers. In fact, almost every contention made by the manufacturers of oleomargarine has been demonstrated to be false or imaginary, while the expectations and claims of the advocates of this timely and wholesome legislation have been realized and justified by well-ascertained results. So that it can now be truthfully said that, after a trial of over a year and a half, despite the efforts of unscrupulous enemies, the anti-oleo law meets the hopes of its friends and merits the approval of all consumers of dairy products, as well as of the great dairy interests of the country.

Under the provisions of section 4 of this act the sale of adulterated butter is effectually prohibited. The manufacture of process or renovated butter is regulated, and the 54,696,651 pounds of this none too desirable article of food sold during the last fiscal year was branded and marketed under the supervision of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1902, the last year the old law was in force, shows that 126,316,427 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1902. This, together with 722,237 pounds on hand July 1, 1901, made a total production of 127,038,664 pounds. Of this quantity 3,469,199 pounds were exported, leaving 123,869,465 pounds for domestic consumption.

The Commissioner's report for 1903 shows that 5,710,407 pounds of colored oleomargarine, subject to a tax of 10 cents per pound, were manufactured during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1903, together with 67,573,689 pounds of uncolored, paying a tax of one-fourth cent per pound. Of this quantity 3,486,692 pounds were exported, leaving 69,797,404 pounds for domestic consumption, or 54,072,091 pounds less than in the preceding year.

That the production of oleomargarine is gradually decreasing is indicated by the further fact that during the months of July, August, September, October, and November of the present fiscal year there were manufactured 1,425,310 pounds of colored oleomargarine, together with 20,474,748 pounds of uncolored, making a total production for these five months of 21,900,058 pounds, while the quantity produced in the corresponding months of 1902, the first five months after the law became operative, was 1,374,930 pounds of colored and 25,537,207 pounds of uncolored, making a total production of 26,902,117 pounds, or 5,002,089 pounds more than during the first five months of the present fiscal year. The quantity manufactured during the corresponding months in 1901, under the old law and paying a tax of 2 cents per pound, was 43,529,364 pounds, or more than double the present current production.

The licenses issued under the old law in 1902 were: Manufacturers, 35; wholesale dealers, 192; retail dealers, 10,821. The licenses issued in 1903 under the new law were: Manufacturers, 31; wholesale dealers, 398; retail dealers, 26,157, indicating a wider distribution, if not more legitimate sales.

The revenue collected during the last year of the old law was $2,944,472.46; the amount collected during the first year of the new law, including the tax upon renovated butter, was $888,181.68, a sum sufficient to defray the cost of Government supervision—all that the friends and framers of the law anticipated or intended.

These statistics are most satisfactory from a dairyman's point of view, inasmuch as presumably this decrease of over 60,000,000 pounds in the production of oleomargarine since the law became operative, in July, 1902, gave place to and made possible the sale of an equal quantity of dairy or creamery butter.

With these facts before us, it may be fairly claimed that the farmers and dairymen of the country have not only been able to market an increased quantity of butter, but have also obtained slightly higher prices, and withal the consuming public have been protected from imposition and have received the article purchased.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] that there are no other gentlemen on his side who desire to address the committee; and as I have no further applications for time, I move that we now proceed to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act approved May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the act approved August 30, 1890, providing for an inspection of meats and animals, and the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, providing for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, and to prescribe rules and regulations for the safe transport and humane treatment of export cattle from the United States to foreign countries, and the amendatory act approved March 2, 1895, providing for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, and also the provisions of the act approved February 2, 1903, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of live stock, and for other purposes: Provided, That live horses be entitled to the same inspection as other animals herein named: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, waive the requirement of a certificate with beef and other products which are exported to countries that do not require such inspection, $1,200,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, in such manner as he may think best, in the collection of information concerning live stock, dairy, and other animal products, and to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, blackleg, tuberculosis, sheep scab, glanders or farcy, hog cholera, and other diseases of animals, and for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington or elsewhere as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, or other diseases of animals from one State to another; for improving and maintaining the Bureau Experiment Station at Bethesda, Md.; to establish, improve, and maintain quarantine stations, and to provide proper shelter and equipment for the care of neat cattle, domestic and other animals imported at such ports as may be deemed necessary; for printing and publishing such reports relating to animal industry as he may direct; and the Secretary of Agriculture may use so much of this sum as he deems necessary for promoting the extension and development of foreign markets for dairy and other farm products of the United States, and for suitable transportation of the same; and such products may be bought in open market and disposed of at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to apply the moneys received from the sales of such products toward the continuation and repetition of such experimental exports; and the Secretary is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building in the District of Columbia, at an annual rental of not exceeding $1,800, to be used as a laboratory for said Bureau of Animal Industry; and the employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry outside of the city of Washington may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may construe the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, as amended March 2, 1895, for the inspection of live cattle and products thereof, to include dairy products, intended for exportation to any foreign country, and may apply, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, the provisions of said act for inspection and certification appropriate for ascertaining the purity and quality of such products, and may cause the same to be so marked, stamped or labeled as to secure their identity and make known in the markets of foreign countries to which they may be sent from the United States their purity, quality, and grade; and all the provisions of said act relating to live cattle and products thereof for export shall apply to dairy products so inspected and certified.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "another" in line 7, page 12, insert the following words:
"Provided, That the Department or Bureau shall not give away to any one person, firm, or corporation more than 100 doses of blackleg vaccine in any one year."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to raise the point of order against that that it is entirely new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that there are many things in this whole paragraph that might be subject to a point of order, but where they are allowed to remain in the bill by unanimous consent, the Chair thinks an amendment like that offered by the gentleman, to perfect the legislation, is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I will listen to what the gentleman from Michigan has to say.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add but a very few words to what I said this morning relative to the matter of this amendment.

In the first place, I desire the members of the committee to note that it is not proposed to suppress or completely put an end to the manufacture and distribution of blackleg vaccine. The amendment is simply to correct what everybody to whom I have talked privately admits to be a gross abuse, namely, the giving away of this vaccine in unlimited quantities to people who can very well afford to buy it from private sources, and to limit and prevent the destruction of private enterprise, and to stop the Government in a paternal enterprise, which is certainly wrong in principle and without any real benefit.

The point made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] this morning was that this is being used experimentally with the idea of destroying blackleg entirely in this country. That argument has been used for upward of thirteen years, according to the authority that was read from the desk this morning. And a further abuse exists to this extent that it is given away so freely and with so little inquiry and with so little regard to justice that many individuals are engaged in getting it from the Bureau and reselling it to small farmers throughout certain of the States. This is stated upon what appears to be unquestionable authority, and it is not denied in the Bureau that it is given away in unlimited quantities to anybody who chooses to ask for it. Now, this amendment is simply for the purpose of limiting the number of doses to be given to any one person, firm, or corporation in one year to 100 doses, and it does seem to me that if any rancher or other farmer is so wealthy as to own so many animals that he requires more than that number in any one year he ought to be willing to pay something for it.

I submit further that this pretense of doing it in the hope of stamping out the disease is contradicted and overturned by the experience of the last fifteen years. It is wrong in principle for the Government to interfere with private enterprise, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, this matter was gone over carefully by the committee, as every other item in it was, and upon the very point that has been discussed here by our friend from Michigan [Mr. LUCKING] we interrogated the Secretary of Agriculture. I should like to have the Clerk read his answers to two questions, asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LAMB. That leads me to make a new inquiry of you, Mr. Secretary. I have received letters saying the Government is making serum to destroy blackleg, and trying to interfere with private enterprise. I would like to hear from you on that.

Secretary WILSON. Blackleg is a disease that affects young animals, mostly calves; sometimes yearlings, and, very rarely, 2-year-olds. The people had great difficulty in getting serum that was powerful enough to treat it. We make it here for probably a tenth of a cent a dose; and we send out, say a million and a half doses a year, free to the people, and the result is that wherever we send it blackleg is disappearing. We are pushing this work with the theory that if we can prevent blackleg it will die out.

It is the same with rabies. If you muzzle every dog in the District of Columbia, and allow no other dog to come in, rabies will not come in. You could not do that. The love for the pup is stronger than the love for man, woman, or child in the District of Columbia, and dogs can not be muzzled here. That is the theory on which we are trying to experiment with blackleg, and we are succeeding. The day should come when there will not be a particle of blackleg in the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, Mr. Secretary, these laboratories are maintained by the Bureau of Animal Industry and its manufacture costs a mere trifle.

Secretary WILSON. Yes. Of course we are interfering with the trade, and if we destroy blackleg in cattle, we will destroy their trade in blackleg serum altogether. The economic question is whether we should maintain blackleg for the benefit of these manufacturers.

Mr. LAMB. Now, Mr. Chairman, that goes to the root of this matter. The Government is stamping out blackleg just as it did the foot-and-mouth disease, and the committee will see at once that the private business of these gentlemen referred to by the gentleman from Michigan will not be necessary after the Government has succeeded in stamping out this disease.

Mr. LUCKING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. LUCKING. Was not the same argument made thirteen years ago in this House, that you were stamping it out?

Mr. LAMB. I think so. Experience since then has shown that we are stamping it out, and there is the evidence given by the Secretary of Agriculture himself.

Mr. LUCKING. They might say the same thing about smallpox or anything else that they chose to experiment with.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan will not prevail. I do not believe that the number of doses of vaccine given to any one individual should be limited, at least the limit should not be as low as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan. The Secretary of Agriculture very clearly pointed out that the object of the Department in the distribution of this vaccine is to stamp out blackleg; and during the time that this Government has been distributing this vaccine blackleg has very largely diminished and is being gradually stamped out. The stock raisers of my State that I come in contact with, and with whom I correspond in regard to this matter, tell me that the vaccine furnished by private firms can not be depended upon; that, as a matter of fact, the Government vaccine is a specific; that on the other hand the vaccine that they obtain from the local merchants, either by reason of fault in its manufacture or by reason of the fact that it has become stale in the hands of local merchants, very often is of no value whatever, whereas the blackleg vaccine furnished by the Government is always fresh and in every case efficacious. During the time that this vaccine has been furnished by the Government, at least so far as my region is concerned, blackleg has decreased by at least one-half, indicating that, as a matter of fact, the disease is being rapidly stamped out.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan suggests that by reason of this distribution stock raisers, or those pretending to be stock raisers, who apply for the vaccine are using it as an article of merchandise. I want to call the attention of the gentleman and the House to the fact that the vaccine is never furnished except on an application indorsed by a Member of Congress or a Senator, and if the Member indorsing that application will take the pains to satisfy himself, as he should, as to the character of the applicant, there can be no question but what the vaccine will be properly and legitimately used. It has been my practice whenever an application has reached me to assure myself beyond doubt or question as to the character of the applicant and as to the fact of his being the owner of a sufficient number of cattle to require the number of doses he asks for.

Mr. BOWIE. Is it not true that the cost of a dose of this vaccine to the Government is about one-tenth of 1 cent, and that these private manufacturers sell an inferior quality at 50 cents a dose? At any rate a very much larger amount?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that in our country it is sold for 15 cents a dose in small quantities, and 10 to 12 cents a dose in large quantities.

Mr. BOWIE. It is about a hundred times as much.

Mr. MONDELL. The objection is not so much to the price, objectionable as that is, as to the quality of the vaccine obtained from private manufacturers.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will permit me, is it not a fact that the drug stores and other places where the vaccine is kept for sale, if they fail to sell out the stock on hand in this year, carry the stock over to next year, and sell it to the stock raisers, and in consequence of that fact they do not get verile vaccine matter?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is unquestionably true, and probably that is the reason why the vaccine obtained in the localities or in the local stores is often absolutely worthless.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I very much hope that this amendment will not prevail. I speak for a large section, where the stock-growing interests are large and where the number of people having small stock interests is large. I want to say that in my experience I have had very many requests for the vaccine to which the gentleman from Michigan alludes, and it is true that an application to the Department for this vaccine must bear the indorsement of a Congressman, so that I think I am fairly well informed as to the sources from which the requests come in my section, and thus far the largest single requests I have had has been for fifty doses of blackleg vaccine. I know also that these requests have come in a large majority of instances from people I have personally known to be not the large stockmen or from men who were seeking to get any undue advantage, but from the smaller stock growers and smaller ranchmen. To them this favor from the Government's bounty, while insignificant in cost, is a very important thing. Many of them are somewhat remote from sources of supply, and that which they can obtain locally is often, from no fault of the original manufacturers, inert and valueless.

To obtain easily, quickly, and without expense a reliable supply has been of great assistance to the very ones who most need it. I know that it is very much desired and appreciated when received, and I feel that if the bill were to be amended it should be in the direction of making the distribution of vaccine more, rather than less, general.

I understand also that a further reason for which the Agricultural Department desires to continue this distribution as it has hitherto carried it on is that it is important on account of the protection thereby afforded to interstate commerce to eradicate the disease or to bring it where the Department can control it. The shipping of cattle from one section to another has made the existence of blackleg on the ranges a very serious menace to the stock growers of the whole country.

The interests which are protected from this danger by the distribution of vaccine certainly have a right to demand further consideration, and to check the work now, before its results have been fully accomplished, would be shortsighted in the extreme. As to the statement that vaccine obtained from the Government is sold for private gain, I can not think that this is the case to any considerable extent. Everything in my own experience is to the contrary, and it seems as though this must be a mistake. It seems to me that it is very important, therefore, for these and many other reasons, that this distribution should continue. I hope that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Chairman, if it is not out of order I would like a minute or so to make some comment. Now, the gentleman, I think from Wyoming, suggested that the limitation placed in the proposed amendment was too small, that 100 doses was below what it ought to be, and I would ask him, if he seriously entertains the proposition of the amendment at all, what he would consider a proper limitation?

Mr. MONDELL. Personally, I do not think there should be any limit.

Mr. LUCKING. Very well; then I will not ask anything further. Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the quality of the vaccine prepared and sold by private manufacturing institutions of the country, I desire to say that the one house which I mentioned this morning, Parke, Davis & Co., send their preparations all over the civilized world; that no house on this continent stands higher or is more careful in the preparation of its products.

Its products are used all through the Government institutions in very many of its departments, and I wish to protest vigorously against the proposition that the article which is manufactured by the Government is any better than that manufactured by Parke, Davis & Co., and I would like to ask if any gentleman connected with the Agricultural Department has ventured to say that anything of the kind was true or could be true. Furthermore, the departments now are under Government supervision which manufacture privately the blackleg vaccine.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I have no desire to criticise unjustly the product of any manufacturing company in the Union, and if the gentleman listened to what I have said, he will recollect that I have stated——

Mr. LUCKING. There were others who stated that, not yourself.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That either by reason of fault in manufacturing or by reason of deterioration of the quality of the goods by long storage they certainly did not produce as good results as the Government vaccine.

Mr. LUCKING. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, that suggests the further fact for the consideration of the members of this committee that the United States Government is actually engaged in manufacturing this stuff just as it is ordered from day to day and giving any amount of it to anybody who may choose to ask for it, and it has done that for many years. Now, thirteen years ago, according to the statistics furnished, they were putting forth nearly as much of this as now. It has increased, I think, about 250,000 doses in the last thirteen years, and I submit for the Government to engage in the business after so many years, when it started the business purely as an experiment, and we understood it was an experiment to see what could be done, that it is an enterprise which ought not any longer to continue in the way it is now being conducted. That is all I desire to say.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Botanical investigations and experiments: Investigations relating to medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other economic plants, seeds, and weeds; the collection of plants, traveling expenses, and express and freight charges: for all necessary office fixtures; the purchase of paper and all other necessary supplies, materials, and apparatus; for rent and ordinary repairs of a building for office and laboratory purposes, not to exceed $3,000; for gas and electric current; for telegraph and telephone service; for the employment of investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and student scientific aids at an annual salary of $480 each, and other labor in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the result of such experiments; subscriptions to and purchase of botanical publications for use in the division; and the preparation, illustration, and publication of reports; to investigate and publish reports upon the useful plants and plant cultures of the tropical territory of the United States, and to investigate, report upon, and introduce other plants promising to be valuable for the tropical territory of the United States, such plants and botanical and agricultural information when secured to be made available for the work of agricultural experiment stations and schools; to investigate the varieties of cereals grown in the United States or suitable for introduction, in order to standardize the naming of varieties as a basis for the experimental work of the State experiment stations, and as an assistance in commercial grading, and to investigate, in cooperation with the Bureau of Chemistry, the cause of deterioration of export grain, particularly in oceanic transit, and devise means of preventing losses from those causes, $65,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Insert on page 20, in line 4, after the word "dollars," the following:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment. It has the approval of the Agricultural Department. It is to protect the purchasers of seeds against the adulteration and misbranding of seeds and to give the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to purchase samples of seeds and test the same and, if found to be adulterated or misbranded, to publish the results of the tests together with the names of persons offering such seed for sale. I will state, also, that this amendment has been carefully considered by the Committee on Agriculture and is authorized by the committee.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I could not catch from the reading at the Clerk's desk exactly what the amendment was. I understand there is a provision which calls for the publication of the names of parties who sold the seed. What is the purpose?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is, after the seed has been found to be adulterated or misbranded.

Mr. COWHERD. Is it intended to get samples of all seeds from everybody engaged in the business in the United States?

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the Department thinks it is necessary.

Mr. HAUGEN. When it is deemed necessary by the Department.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that it is intended to put the public upon notice of who sells these adulterated seeds.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arlington experimental farm: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the necessary improvements to establish and maintain a general experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, including employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere, and for all necessary fixtures, supplies, material, apparatus, and other expenses, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900, entitled "An act to set apart a portion of the Arlington estate for experimental agricultural purposes, and to place said portion under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture and his successors in office," which act shall be construed to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture and his successors jurisdiction over so much of the Government land in Alexandria County, Va., known as the Arlington estate, as lies east of the public road leading from the Aqueduct Bridge to Alexandria, Va., otherwise called the Georgetown and Alexandria road, and between said road and the Potomac River, containing about 400 acres, with the exception, however, of a strip of land as follows: Commencing at the point where the Georgetown and Alexandria road enters the Arlington estate on the north side, thence along said road 625 yards, thence in a line perpendicular to said road to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, thence along said canal to the north line of the reservation, $15,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 23, line 8, strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "twenty-five" so that it will read "$25,000."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, this experimental farm at Arlington is the only experimental farm in the United States that belongs to the Government. It was taken from the War Department in 1900 and turned over to the Agricultural Department for the purpose of an experimental station. It contains from 300 to 400 acres, and the Agricultural Committee of this House is starving it to death. The act under which it was turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture provides:

That the declared purpose of this act is to set apart said tract of land as a general experimental farm in its broadest sense, where all that pertains to agriculture in its several and different branches, including animal industry and horticulture, may be fostered and encouraged, and the practice and science of farming in the United States advanced, promoted, and practically illustrated.

When this property was turned over to the Agricultural Department it presented the appearance which you can imagine it would after forty years of neglect. At one time the Arlington estate was among the most beautiful in Virginia, but it was confiscated in 1861–1865, and from the time it went into the hands of the Government this portion of it, the low ground of the Arlington estate, remained without any cultivation, tillage, or care for forty years. For that length of time it had been an eyesore to that portion of the State of Virginia and to this city. In 1900 it was turned over to the Agricultural Department and the Secretary was instructed to make it an experimental station, so as to be an example for agriculture in the several States of this Union. At that time the land was traversed by deep gullies, overgrown with underbrush and with not a building or a fence upon it. With the small appropriation of $15,000 the Secretary has gradually gotten the land into condition to proceed with experiments as contemplated by the law of April 18, 1900, but for two years he has appealed in vain to Congress to give him an additional appropriation.

In his last annual report he takes four or five pages of the report urging the importance of a liberal appropriation for this experimental station, and his concluding words are as follows:

The more specialized character of work which each year becomes necessary in the management of the Arlington farm demands a greater expenditure per acre under cultivation, as new and urgent problems are continually presented for solution; and in order that the work now in progress may be completed and that a few of the many new difficulties presented may each year be brought under consideration, it is respectfully recommended that at least $25,000 be set aside for use at the Arlington farm.

Mr. Chairman, there is now an appropriation by the General Government for aid to the experimental stations in the several States. This is known as the "Hatch fund," and provides for the appropriation of $15,000 to each of the several States for experimental stations. These stations are under the control of the States and not of the Federal Government. The State of New York supplements the $15,000 which this Government gives for experimental purposes with $100,000, and the State of Illinois supplements the $15,000 by an appropriation of $70,000, and yet this committee expects the Department of Agriculture to make the Arlington Experiment Station, which is larger than either and the only one owned by the Government, to be properly conducted and developed upon an expenditure of $15,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman state how much the State of Virginia supplements this appropriation?

Mr. RIXEY. Virginia is not expected to supplement it, but if you will turn it over to the State of Virginia we will duplicate the amount.

Mr. PAYNE. In other words, you will give $15,000?

Mr. RIXEY. This land is owned entirely by the United States Government and is controlled by the Government. It was bought by the Government, and the State of Virginia has no jurisdiction over it, because it has surrendered its jurisdiction. Why should you expect the State of Virginia to supplement the Government appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWIE. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that the gentleman from Virginia have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the whole five minutes. I only want a minute or two. Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself, I have been disappointed in the results at the Arlington farm. I had supposed that Congress would have been liberal in its appropriations and have enabled the Secretary to go on with the developments on the lines contemplated in the act of Congress giving him jurisdiction. He says he wants to conduct experiments in agriculture as they are conducted in the States. He wants to show to the States what can be accomplished in agriculture. He is well informed and equipped for the development of the national experimental farm, but he is unable to put up the buildings or to make the experiments unless this appropriation is increased.

I submit that what the Secretary asks for is less than he ought to have. Instead of $100,000 which New York gives to its experimental stations, this Government only gives fifteen thousand to the only experimental station that it owns. I submit that the amendment ought to be adopted, and that the committee should hereafter deal with this great experimental station in a spirit commensurate with the importance and dignity of the agricultural interests—the greatest industry of our country.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if in his judgment a mistake has not been made in attempting to establish this experimental farm on the Arlington estate. The Arlington estate was intended, I think, for two purposes originally, neither of them an agricultural purpose, and now, for the uses of the military, they are seeking to secure additional very high-priced land in order that there may be room for the military maneuvers that ought to occur at that place. Has there not been a mistake made in taking the three or four hundred acres that lie down in the flats, admirably adapted for military maneuvers, and attempting to establish this farm at that place? I think so; and I for one would be unwilling that there should be any permanent improvements that will be destroyed when the estate is returned to the real uses for which it was purchased and to which it ought to be dedicated.

Every foot of that land is needed now for the maneuvers of the troops that from time to time will be there and that perhaps ought to be there at all times, and we ought to use that which we have and not pay, as is contemplated by certain real estate firms in this city, five hundred, a thousand, or two thousand dollars an acre for additional land in order to make needed room for military maneuvers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture, I may state, has always been opposed to the establishment of a Government experimental farm. They take the ground that the experiment station in each State and Territory, to which the National Government contributes $15,000 annually, is sufficient.

In other words, that an experiment made here on the shores of the Potomac would be of no account in the State of Pennsylvania or the State of New York. Therefore, as an experimental farm it has never been popular, I may say, with the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to say, for fear of being misunderstood, that I do not want to make any criticism upon the policy of the establishment of this national experimental station. I believe in it; I think it ought to be done. I do not agree with the committee on that matter; but I do believe that we have made a mistake in locating it here upon the high-priced lands so near the capital.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In considering this question, Mr. Chairman, the committee simply decided to put this experimental station on all fours with all the other experimental stations of the country. The United States Government gives $15,000 a year to the experimental stations located in each State and Territory. We have simply treated this United States experimental station exactly as we have treated those in the several States. This station can not be built up, I admit, in one year with $15,000; but I disagree with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY]. I think great work has been done there already under previous appropriations and the work will continue, and in ten years, with $150,000 expended there, you will have a magnificent experimental station. And let me say further to the gentleman from Virginia that Virginia is very fortunate in having two stations that the Government gives $15,000 each to.

There is the State experimental station, and then there is this experimental station. Now, the mere matter of $10,000 does not amount to very much, but we simply put it on the same ground as we put all the other stations, and, as I say, in ten or fifteen years that station will be a magnificent station with an annual appropriation of $15,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Does not the State of New York supplement the $15,000 which the Government gives by an appropriation of over a hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very true. Why does not Virginia do the same?

Mr. RIXEY. Virginia has nothing to do with this station. The policy of establishing it was decided by Congress. Four years ago Congress decided to establish this station and turned it over to the Agricultural Department. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] I desire simply to state that the Secretary of War reported that he had no use for this portion of the Arlington estate—about 300 acres of land; that the tract contained altogether about twelve hundred, and that the remainder was all that was needed for the military reservation and the national cemetery, and he would be very glad to have the river low grounds transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Military Committee of the House unanimously reported the bill, and it became a law.

I know of no effort on the part of real estate men, as charged by the gentleman from Iowa, to foist upon the Government tracts of land adjacent to this capital for military purposes. So far as I know, this Government has now at the military reservation at Arlington more land than it has any use for. The 400 acres of river bottom land are admirably adapted to experimental purposes. It has been turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture for that purpose, and it seems to me to be the worst kind of economy to say that you will not increase the small appropriation which it now has. If it were put on the same footing as New York, you would give it over $100,000. The Secretary of Agriculture is, in my judgment, the most conservative member of the Government in submitting his estimates to Congress, and the Committee on Agriculture is the only committee that I know of that does in any way keep down the expenditures of its Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, the gentleman does not blame us for it, does he?

Mr. RIXEY. Oh, I do not blame the committee, but I think there is such a thing as false economy, and in this particular there is false economy, because you simply give the Secretary enough to keep the experimental farm open, without funds, however, for proper development. Why this economy in agriculture and wasteful extravagance in other Departments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I deny utterly that statement of the gentleman. A few days ago I passed a day with Professor Galloway, of the Department, in making an inspection of what has been done on this farm. Great improvements have been made there. Fifteen thousand dollars will make still greater improvements, and $15,000 appropriated next year will continue the work. Rome was not built in a day, and we can not make that experimental station in a day.

Mr. RIXEY. Rome was not built in a day, and if Romulus and Remus had been members of the Agricultural Committee, it never would have been begun. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter of ancient history that I will not discuss with the gentleman from Virginia.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. RIXEY, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for rent of building, not to exceed $3,000; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, gas, and electric current; traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $200,000, of which amount not more than $48,000 shall be expended for labor in the city of Washington, D. C., and not less than $102,000 shall be allotted for Congressional distribution.

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of two-thirds, and no more, of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the Department upon the receipt of their addressed franks; such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer as is now done for document slips with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional seed distribution," or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for on the 1st of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and who have not before, during the same season, been supplied by the Department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same.

And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided further, That $40,000 of the sum thus appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries for experiments with reference to their introduction into this country; and the seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants thus collected, purchased, tested, and propagated shall not be included in general distribution, but shall be used for experimental tests to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order upon that portion of the paragraph just read, beginning at line 10, page 24, and ending with line 24, page 26. I make this point of order on the ground that the provision embraced within the lines I have specified is a change of existing law and an absolute and mandatory limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture vested in him by the law. May I be heard for a few moments on this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; the Chair will gladly hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, the original law on this subject is found in the Revised Statutes of 1878, section 527, which reads as follows:

The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of the country to another.

Under that provision of law the distribution of seeds is placed within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I now desire to read from the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, page 347, the following annotation:

It has been generally held that provisions giving a new construction of law or limiting the discretion which has been exercised by officers charged with the duties of administration are changes of law within the meaning of the rule.

Now, as I understand the matter, certain limitations upon the discretion of an administrative officer are not subject to this point of order, but those limitations apply to the administrative functions of the officer, and they must not be so mandatory as to be equivalent to a direct and substantive enactment of law.

Now, under this paragraph, after the appropriation is provided for as required and authorized by law, the bill proceeds to direct the exact manner in which the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct the distribution of seeds. Nothing is left to that discretion which has been vested in him by the solemn terms of the law. The paragraph of the bill reads, in part, as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, etc.

It will be seen that the language is directly mandatory. The provision proceeds further to state that the distribution shall be made through Congressmen; that blanks shall be furnished by the Public Printer, such as are now furnished as document slips, with the names of Members, Senators, and Delegates printed thereon—a clause for which there is no possible authority in the statutory law, a clause for which there is no possible authorization. And the other clauses of the bill are subject to the same objection and the same criticism.

The bill, proceeding, provides a certain time of the year within which the seeds allotted to certain Senators and Representatives must be distributed. In other words, the bill proceeds, under the guise of an appropriation, to prescribe a new and substantive law—a method by which the Secretary of Agriculture is commanded to proceed with this distribution, allowing nothing to that discretion which is given him by the statute.

I ask for the ruling of the Chair upon this proposition, and afterwards I may desire to offer an amendment to the section.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not care to say anything upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] presents some difficulties. The Chair is inclined to construe the bill somewhat as if it read in a little different manner—as if it read thus:

"And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, only on the following conditions: For the purpose of testing and distribution," etc.

And while admitting that you can not place a limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary where the law gives him a right to exercise it, yet construing this paragraph not as a limitation upon his discretion, but rather an addition, and a limitation upon which the appropriation is granted, I shall not sustain the point of order to the whole section, yet there is one provision in the section that the Chair holds to be clearly subject to the point of order. That is that part of the section commencing with the word "such," in line 2, and ending with the word "direct," in line 7, page 25:

Such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer as is now done for document slips with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional seed distribution," or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct.

It seems to the Chair that this is new legislation, and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, directing what the printing department shall do, and as the Chair understands the rules of the House, that portion of the section being subject to the point of order, it vitiates the whole section. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose and was recognized, and yielded to Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand the point of order has been sustained.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire unanimous consent to say a few words. I should like to direct a suggestion to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] if he will listen to it. I understand, of course, that his object in raising this point of order is to strike out the whole section, and under the ruling of the Chair that will be done unless the lines which the Chair has just called attention to are stricken out. The gentleman from Texas will readily understand that it will be very easy to submit this paragraph again, eliminating the objectionable lines, so that the purpose of his objection will be defeated; and it will not only be defeated, but the Members of this House will be deprived of the very great benefit conferred upon them in the matter of convenience by the lines stricken out. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas, in view of this fact, if he would not be willing to withdraw his point of order, so that these words, by means of which a great convenience is afforded to Members of this House and of the Senate, may still remain in the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, proceeding by the same unanimous consent which has been given to the gentleman, I desire to say that the object of my entire contention has been to call attention to the irregular, impracticable, and useless manner in which the seed distribution is conducted at present. The object of my argument has never been to secure the entire abolition of the seed distribution which is provided in the law of 1862, establishing the Department of Agriculture; but my object has been simply to improve it and to place it in such a condition that it will be a true test, and will tend to the thorough development of the soil of the country, in accordance with the original intention. After withdrawing the point of order on the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] I shall offer an amendment embodying my ideas, and I trust that they will receive some consideration. My purpose was simply to fix the attention of the House upon the condition of affairs with reference to the seed distribution. Having attained that object, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. If the Chairman entertains the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas that he can withdraw the point of order after it has been discussed and ruled upon, I certainly——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not entertain the suggestion that the point of order can be withdrawn after it has been ruled upon.

Mr. LIND. That it can?

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be withdrawn after the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. Could it be withdrawn by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Kansas that he thinks the better way would be to ask unanimous consent to offer the whole section as an amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Then, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the whole section having gone out under the point of order, I have the right to offer a substitute, have I not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to offer a new section, and he has the right to offer the whole section by unanimous consent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The entire section?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent is the only way, the Chair thinks, in which the gentleman could offer the whole section again after it has been struck out.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for just one minute, so as to define my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Minnesota there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. LIND. I know there is not. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, for not to exceed two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to speak for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the benefit of the chairman of this committee that I shall feel it my duty to object to unanimous consent for any proposition that involves the continuance of the present miserable, demoralizing habit of sending out seed that has no special value. [Applause.] Now, in every legislative and administrative position that I have filled I have gone as far as any other man to vote and work for the furtherance of every legitimate interest of agriculture, and have been a consistent, active supporter of the agricultural college of our State; and I doubt whether there is a better one in the United States. There may be those as good, but none better. It is doing splendid work. If one-half of the money that is wasted by our delegation from Minnesota in this work of sending out oftentimes worthless seeds were turned into the treasury of our agricultural college, we would be doing twentyfold more good for agriculture than comes from this system.

I think it is time for the membership of this House to rise to the dignity of meeting this question, as well as all other questions, on its merits. Let us take the $290.000 that we fritter away in this manner and distribute it pro rata among the agricultural colleges of this land, and the benefits to agriculture would be tenfold—aye, a hundredfold—greater.

The original scheme of the law was for the Agricultural Department—at that time we did not have good stations in the several States—to secure and send out new, rare, and valuable foreign seed for experimental purposes. This was legitimate and proper; but now it would be infinitely better to supply such seed to the various agricultural colleges than to have them distributed by Members of Congress. This is not the kind of work that we were elected to do. I am willing to do anything for my constituents, but I do not want to waste their money. I am sending out my quota of seed faithfully. It does not affect seed distribution for this session, but I say we ought to do the right thing, and cut it off for the future. Let us have one year of respite and relief, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIND. I ask unanimous consent that I may have a minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may have one minute more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LIND. I say, Mr. Chairman, let the country have one year's respite, one session's respite from this work, and the membership of this House will enjoy it quite as much as our constituents. Then, if we want to go back to this miserable practice, let us reinstate it. Now we have the opportunity, without requiring individuals to go on record, to do the right thing. Let us embrace and improve this opportunity. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee. The gentleman from Minnesota was speaking by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I object. I want to get something before the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now offer a substitute for the paragraph stricken out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will save time by stating to the House that on page 24, after line 9, I have reinstated that paragraph in detail with the exception of the lines at the top of page 25 commencing with the words "such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer" and ending on line 7 with the word "direct," in conformity to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CANDLER. Why does not the gentleman from New York read those words?

Mr. LIND. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to offer the amendment.

Mr. LIND. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman read the words that are to be stricken out?

Mr. WADSWORTH. These are the words, commencing on line 2, page 25:

Such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer as is now done for document slips with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional seed distribution," or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I offer this as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. LIND. And on the amendment I make the point of order.

The Clerk proceeded to read the section.

Mr. BOWIE. I see no use in reading it. I ask unanimous consent that we dispense with the reading, it having been read once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the reading of the substitute or amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee is identical with the bill as reported.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is not.

Mr. BOWIE. It strikes out the part subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If identical, it would have required unanimous consent to offer it.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I still reserve the point of order against the amendment offered as being different from existing law on the subject, and on that point I wish to be heard very briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LIND. The existing law on this subject is found in section 527 of the Revised Statutes. Has the Chair the Revised Statutes, section 527?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has read it.

Mr. LIND. The Chair will observe that it reads this way:

The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country.

It shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country, and this committee has no power to make an appropriation for a wholesale purchase of any sort or kind of seeds. If the chairman of the committee will offer an amendment of a reasonable amount to be expended in conformity with the section of the statute just read, I shall not object.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, it doubtless would be in accord with the spirit of the old law and would be very much better for all concerned if the seeds, plants, bulbs, cuttings, vines, etc., to be distributed were essentially of rare and valuable qualities and largely for the purpose of experimentation and introduction. I take it that under the provision of this bill as it stood and under the law as the law is the Secretary of Agriculture could invest the sum appropriated in securing those rare, valuable, and new things for distribution as the law provides. I take it that this provision as it stood in the first place, or as offered now as an amendment by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, does not require that the Secretary buy ordinary, cheap, or worthless seeds.

Whatever may be said theoretically about these things, and whether or not abuses may have sprung up, it is also true that many people in the country like to get packages of these seeds and put a value upon them higher, perhaps, than we do here in the House; and when we are dealing with the matter theoretically they deal with it practically. A good many of these seeds they find to be valuable—at least, they conclude they are valuable, and in the use of them by these people they prove so. A great many good varieties of seeds are introduced into neighborhoods where they are well adapted to the needs of the county, and, where once introduced, the seeds remain and are used year after year and perhaps generation after generation.

I believe while there may have been abuses in this matter, better judgment and more care may be exercised in it, and that the reform which knocks out entirely the appropriation is a reform on paper and in theory rather than a real reform, and that it appeals more to our own aesthetic notions than to the views and experiences of our constituents. I believe that if this amendment is to be restored it ought to be restored with the part stricken out in it. I do not know what objection there can be, if the seeds are to be distributed at all, to authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture, at the instance of a Member, to have blank slips prepared, with the Member's frank printed upon them and the name also of his State, if he chooses.

It is a convenience in distribution, and the cost of it is very trivial, and the objection to it is one I can not see. So, if this amendment, as offered by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, is to be considered before the House with a view of restoring to the bill part of the matter ruled out, I shall offer an amendment to the amendment to restore to it the other part stricken out.

Mr. LIND. If you will let me make a statement I will withdraw the point of order on that if the Chair holds that.

Mr. BOWIE. We want to get——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Now, I desire, Mr. Chairman, if it be in order, to submit an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, to restore to the bill this provision which has just been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Missouri that there is a point of order raised against the amendment presented by the gentleman from New York and the Chair thinks another amendment will not be in order until that point of order is decided.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understood that point would be withdrawn, pending the offering of this amendment. I may be wrong about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule upon the point of order now, if nothing further——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest this as to the amendment against which the point of order is made, that, subject to the point of order, if the gentleman will reserve the point of order, I would like to offer an amendment to the amendment, and let the committee consider that if it will.

Mr. LIND. I will say to the Chair that if the Chair should hold that the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee is in order, then I shall withdraw the point of order as to the other portion. If we are to retain this, I want to retain the whole machinery of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That, Mr. Chairman, was my position exactly in withdrawing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair stated at first, this is a somewhat difficult question to decide, but in the opinion of the Chair the point of order raised by the gentleman from Minnesota against this amendment is not well taken, as a careful reading of the whole section of the statute will show. The Chair will read for the instruction of the House the whole of the section of the statute of which the gentleman from Minnesota read only a part. It is as follows:

SEC. 527. The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country, or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our own country to another; and the purchase or propagation and distribution of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, and cuttings shall be confined to such as are adapted to general cultivation and to promote the general interests of horticulture and agriculture throughout the United States.

So the committee will see that the statute is somewhat broader than that part of it which was read by the gentleman from Minnesota. Now, the provisions here in the proposed amendment, the Chair thinks, are not necessarily in conflict with the statute when all of it is considered and its scope and purpose considered. The amendment reads:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum as nearly as practicable in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seed, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned.

The Chair does not think there is anything in that portion of the amendment which I have read which necessarily changes the original statute, or is it a change of existing law; and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. LIND. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order as to the whole section. If necessary, I will ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the House will adopt my amendment, I will ask unanimous consent that the paragraph mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri be reinserted.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think the better way, Mr. Chairman, to get at that is to offer it as an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is immaterial.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If you attempt to do it by unanimous consent it can be defeated by one Member. I offer it as an amendment, to insert in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York that part of the original paragraph that was eliminated from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, line 2, insert "such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer as is now done for document slips, with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words, 'United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution,' or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I disagree very much with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] and also with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] relative to the benefit of Government seed distribution. These gentlemen have overlooked, it seems to me, the important element in the distribution of seeds, which is provided for in this section, and that is the transplanting of seeds from one portion of this great country to another. Any person who studies agriculture knows that the transplanting of ordinary seeds from one portion of the country to another, subjecting them to the various influences of climate and soil, is of great benefit and value to agriculture.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My amendment provides for that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but it seems to me that the distribution of seeds, as the Government has been doing it, is of great value and should be continued. I want to state an experience that we have had in Colorado in the transplantation of ordinary seed. We grow in Colorado a melon called the Rocky Ford cantaloupe. It was produced by planting the ordinary seed in a different soil and under different conditions and subject to the influence of irrigation. Those seeds produced the finest cantaloupes in the world. They are shipped to the New York market and even to the London market. That transplantation was not only of benefit to the people in Colorado, but also to every State that has grown melons, because these seeds go back to the original place and there a superior melon is produced therefrom to that which was originally grown and from which the seed came. Do gentlemen say that that is not in the interest of the development of agriculture?

There have been other developments along the same lines. When we recognize that the 500 varieties of apples all originally came from the common crab apple, we must acknowledge that the transplanting of common seeds from one part of the world to another is of great value. When we take into consideration that the many varieties of peaches all came from one plant, a bitter plant that was supposed to be poisonous, we find what development is possible from transplantation and cultivation.

Within the last ten or fifteen years we have found great results from the transplanting of seed from one portion of the country with reference to sugar beets.

The quantity of saccharine matter contained in sugar beets has been doubled in the last fifteen years, and why? Because this ordinary seed has been transplanted from one portion of the country to another, development has taken place through cultivation under different climates and soils, and that very seed transplanted back to the original place from which it came has produced much sweeter beets; so that now the quantity of saccharine matter contained in sugar beets is double that which it was fifteen years ago. Is not that of advantage to agriculture? Is not that of immense benefit to the people of this country?

It may be said that this did not occur through Government distribution, but some of it evidently did. The Secretary of Agriculture has been very active in encouraging the transplantation and cultivation in different soils and climates of sugar-beet seed. It has produced great results, and I have no doubt that a large portion of it is due to the fact that it came through Government distribution. But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that what these gentlemen are complaining of is not even well founded from their standpoint. The farmers are not ridiculing the distribution of Government seeds. Every Member of Congress receives requests for them. I have never yet received one that indicated ridicule, and I doubt very much whether any Member of Congress has.

The people appreciate the distribution of the seeds, and they are continually reciting in letters to me that they have gotten good results; often, even, that they have preserved the seed grown therefrom, and that they have distributed the same among their neighbors. Is it possible that there is no benefit to agriculture in this? Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that from any standpoint, from the standpoint that we are giving a benefit to the farmer even if it would not produce development in cultivation, is wise, as the farmer does not get a fair distribution of the taxes that he is compelled to pay; and when we take into consideration the other fact that the transplanting and cultivation of these common seeds in various portions of the country produces wonderful development and wonderful benefit to agriculture, it seems to me no one ought to oppose the amendment that is offered. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, yielding to every other Member of the House his views upon this subject of seed distribution, I commend the spirit that seeks to guard against fraud and peculation in this branch of the service. I am not unmindful that our good Secretary of Agriculture was imposed upon to the extent of many thousands of dollars by seed sharks and looters whose scales were found wanting and who foisted on us and on our constituents false weights and bad seeds. But he seeks to secure good and rare seeds for distribution, and he went after the malefactors in true typical American-farmer fashion and exposed the swindle and made them disgorge. I stand up for the American farmer and want to strengthen the arm of and bear witness to the integrity of our Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. James Wilson, who seeks to bring to its highest efficiency this system, which within moderate and reasonable bounds is to be commended. In this I think I only state the sentiment of our membership in the House.

This is not the first instance where there has been presented on this floor, nor throughout the country, an objection to the distribution of seeds. I remember a few years ago the metropolitan newspapers of the country took up the subject and by a system of promotion, encouraged and advanced by the seed houses and sellers, Congress was assailed by a flood of articles and by anonymous circulars and postal cards by professional promoters in large cities, who never went out in the country long enough to breathe its honest air, and we were asked in a form indicating that some good housewife had requested to send her a package of hairpins or a card of buttons under our system of paternalism. In the same form somebody else would ask for rakes and spades and shovels, all unsigned, and the fruit of these hypocritical sentiment promoters.

Others went so far as to ask us for scoop shovels and road scrapers and thrashing machines and traction engines and all manner of farm implements; but at that time they were not thinking of from two to four hundred million to be spent in the isthmian canal for the commerce and shipping interests, a hundred million annually for Army, and a like sum for Navy, and the innumerable millions in all manner of undertakings; they could only see the comparatively few thousands for the encouragement of agriculture. This was the range of their vision and the range of their patriotism; this was the policy of the seed houses of the country who desired to sell to our farmer constituents and did not want the Secretary of Agriculture to advance and promote the farm industry by sending rare seeds to the various sections of the country.

At that time we had a Member who industriously wrote letters to the newspapers, and, prompted somewhat by the fact that he had large seed-selling interests in his district, his letters were molded to invite opposition to seed distribution. He received answers, and studiously throwing out those which did not agree with his notions he saved those to the contrary, and when he made the motion to strike out the seed distribution and argued it elaborately he asked to insert the sea of newspaper statements in his remarks, which was granted; but the House stood for it then by an almost unanimous vote, and that speech and those newspaper articles died away in the echoes and have never appeared to plague him in the agricultural State he represented.

For years this appropriation remained in the agricultural appropriation bill without question. It is producing its benefits throughout the country; we will go far if we heed the advice or the promotion of the various seed-industry interests and deny to the farmer the advantage of securing about the only thing he ever gets.

It is true that the boll-weevil appropriation of some thousands of dollars was for the farmer, and the appropriation to eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease, nearly $300,000, was for the farmer, but at the same time it was for the consumers as well. Literature is in the same line, but outside of these appropriations, if you come to consider over it in your leisure, you will find that this is about all the American farmer gets out of the paternalism of the Government, while hundreds of millions go into other channels.

Under the rules I shall ask for a division when we come to a vote upon this proposition to see how Congress stands, and that we may then give notice to the country and to those masquerading under the hypocritical pretense of patriotism when they only selfishly look to sell more seed, and thus they may find out whether or not we are decisively in favor of it or against it. [Applause.]

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I shall not pursue this any further. I notice that my colleagues want the seeds, and it is well that they should have them; but I want to call attention to one thing that may set our farmer constituents to thinking.

Last year you appropriated $270,000 for seeds; and I read from the Secretary's report that out of that $270,000 $42,000 in round numbers went for expenses, $48,000 went to the Brown Bag Milling Company, $1,600 for the purchase of bags, $16,000 for miscellaneous expenses. Now, when you tell your farmer constituents that you are considering their welfare, and add by way of postscript that for every 5 cents' worth of seeds that you send home it costs the Government, including transportation, something like 20 cents, they may not think that the investment is so very patriotic.

I want to say to my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] that if this point of order had been sustained I should immediately, or whenever we reached the section, have offered an amendment providing that the $290,000 which it was the design of the committee to devote to this purpose should be added to the appropriation for the agricultural colleges throughout the land. I did not propose to take a cent from the farmer; but I wanted to place the money where it would do the country and the great agricultural interests the most good.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment in the shape of the paragraph as amended upon the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would not an amendment be now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair apprehends that the gentleman can offer an amendment after this vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to amend the pending paragraph, and I understand that after it has been perfected the amendment will not be in order. Consequently I presume this is the time to submit my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the pending amendment is in order.

Mr. BOWIE. I want to reserve all points of order on this amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My amendment—which I desire to read myself, because I think I can make it more intelligible—proposes to add, after the words "United States," in line 19, page 24, the following:

Provided, That the purchase and distribution of seeds and plants by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare, untried, and uncommon to the country, or such as can be or have been made more useful and more profitable by special breeding, or such seeds and plants as may be improved by transplantation from one part of the country to another.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on that amendment——

Mr. BOWIE. I wish to make a point of order on the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas please send his amendment to the desk, so it may be read for the information of the committee?

Mr. BOWIE. I have not the slightest objection to the gentleman discussing his amendment, provided the point of order is not waived. Mr. Chairman, I simply want the point of order reserved in such a way that it will not be lost. If the gentleman from Texas can proceed to discuss his proposition without the point of order being waived, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been reserved by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWIE], the gentleman from Texas is at liberty to proceed to discuss his amendment after it has been read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Am I in order now for a few words of explanation?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be read.

The amendment of Mr. SHEPPARD, as already read by him, was read by the Clerk.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not deny, nor have I ever denied——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWIE] against this amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I take it that I have the right to speak on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand that the gentleman from Alabama reserved the point of order; he did not actually make it.

Mr. BOWIE. I will give the gentleman unanimous consent, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I regret very much that I have encountered the objection of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. Am I in order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order to discuss the point of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not denied the advantage of the Government distribution of seeds. My entire object has been to restore the original purpose of the distribution, the purpose which inspired the lawmakers of the country in the institution of the custom. My amendment follows almost absolutely the language of the organic law which creates the Department of Agriculture.

The gentleman has spoken of the advantages of transplantation. I do not deny them, and in that sense the present system, perhaps, is advantageous; but the fundamental vice of the present system lies in the fact that the Government of the United States enters into the open markets of the country as an ordinary purchaser of standard seeds of common character, whose qualities are already known and thoroughly established throughout the country. Consequently they contribute nothing to the scientific knowledge of the country. There can be absolutely no useful purpose subserved beyond the mere temporary sensation of pleasure which some few men may feel on receiving a communication from the Government.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he is willing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I should like to know what seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, etc., that are now distributed would be excluded if the gentleman's amendment prevailed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Well, we will say navy beans, for example.

Mr. THAYER. If they are grown in Texas and are replanted in Massachusetts, would you not have a right to do that under the statute as it is now?

Mr. SHEPPARD. If they can be improved by the transplantation.

Mr. THAYER. Who is to be the judge before you transplant them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Secretary of Agriculture, as he is the judge now.

Mr. THAYER. Then would he exclude them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me read the original language of the law, in order to make my position plain. This is the creative law with reference to this seed distribution:

The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon in the country or such as can be made profitable by frequent changes from one part of our own country to another.

My amendment follows also the recommendations of the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture in his last report. Now, the Secretary of Agriculture himself states that the present seed distribution has departed absolutely from the original purpose; that it no longer subserves a scientific end. My object is simply to provide for the distribution of useful seeds, a distribution which will subserve a useful end.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Texas speaking to the point of order or to the merits of his proposition?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I understood that my amendment was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not yet been ruled upon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understood that the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] asked for the regular order, which is the discussion of the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOWIE].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will continue on the point of order and shall take up but very few minutes of the time of the House. I have not stood for the abolition of the distribution of seeds. It is provided for in the organic law, and if properly conducted it is of immense benefit to the agricultural masses of the country. But it is an insult to the agricultural masses to send to them at their expense seeds which play absolutely no part in determining the capabilities of the soil.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not discussing the point of order, and a demand has been made for the regular order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well, Mr. Chairman, my views are before the House; but as I wish my remarks to be symmetrical and connected, I should like by unanimous consent to be allowed to conclude now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest to the gentleman that he obtain unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I appreciate the implied compliment of the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed three minutes in which to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Chair is ready to rule upon this amendment. If the Chair has made no mistake, it is a verbatim copy of the law as it now exists. That being the case, it has been held that while it is unnecessary, and perhaps almost not good form, yet it is not strictly subject to a point of order. It is simply reenacting a portion of the United States Statutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I ask for a vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. One or two words in further explanation of my amendment, which is now in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Have I the permission of the gentleman to proceed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. How much time does the gentleman want? I move that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on the amendment and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 32.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House very much further. I think that my position has been made plain. My idea is to improve and not to destroy the seed distribution, to restore its original character, to give it a scientific direction; in other words, to be fair with the American people. I have heard the statement here that this is perhaps the only thing that the farmer receives from the Government. If it is, it is certainly a humiliating condition that the only thing which the farmer receives from the Government is of so little practical benefit. I am sure that this amendment of mine puts into effect no revolutionary change. It meets the desires of the gentleman from Colorado; it meets the argument of every gentleman who has risen upon this subject.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. BOWIE. I want to know how much benefit the gentleman's amendment will be to the law, if it is already the law, and the fact that it is the law is the reason why the amendment is ruled to be in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that the appropriation bill, being subject to the point of order, which I, in a spirit of fairness that has not been reciprocated on the other side, withdrew, is an absolute outrage upon the original purpose of the distribution. This amendment will enable the appropriation to be of greater use to our constituents, and will enable Members to send to them seeds and plants which will determine the possibilities of the soil.

This was the original purpose of the seed distribution, a purpose which, although it may not be adopted to-day, will in the tide of the years be finally restored by Congress. There were three votes in the Committee on Agriculture against the present system. I congratulate the committee upon that fact, and while this amendment may be defeated now, the fact that the Government is going into the open market and buying indiscriminate amounts of standard seeds may lead to scandal. Already an investigation has been placed on foot by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but in some way it has been smothered. The object of my amendment is that this distribution may be placed on a scientific basis, in the hope that it may be so arranged that it will result in real value to the people. In that spirit I have offered this amendment.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADSWORTH. What time is left?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has all expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. I was watching the clock, and I thought there were two minutes left.

Mr. GROSVENOR and others. Regular order!

Mr. CANDLER. We ought not to take two minutes away from the farmer. [Laughter and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry in reference to this motion or this amendment. I make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether the amendment is drawn in such a form that it is a substitute or whether it is simply an insertion in the substitute?

Mr. PAYNE. It is an insertion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the insertion, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, of a section of the Revised Statutes. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 3.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 10954. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3800. An act donating gun carriages to the Connecticut commissioners for the care and preservation of Fort Griswold.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Forestry: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, forest reserves, forest fires, and lumbering; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions, including the erection of the necessary buildings; to collect and distribute valuable economic forest-tree seeds and plants; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and for collating, digesting, reporting, illustrating, and printing the results of such experiments and investigations; for the purchase of all necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures; for freight and express charges, and traveling and other necessary expenses, $363,000, of which sum not to exceed $15,500 may be used for rent. And the employees of the Bureau of Forestry outside of the city of Washington may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 28, in line 14, after the word "buildings," I desire to offer the following amendment:

Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, in line 14, after the word "buildings," insert "Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses of entomological investigations: Promotion of economic entomology; investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture; ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious, including an investigation into the ravages of the codling moth and of the cotton-boll weevil and boll worm, with a view of ascertaining the best methods of their extermination; investigations in apiculture; investigations of the damage to forests and forest trees by insects; purchase of chemicals, insecticide apparatus, and other materials, supplies, and instruments required in conducting such experiments and investigations; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; freight and express charges, and necessary traveling expenses; rent of building; for office fixtures and supplies, telegraph and telephone services; gas and electric current; preparing, illustrating, and publishing the results of the work of the division, $12,000 of which shall be immediately available, $65,500, of which amount not to exceed $10,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be expended for silk investigations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer on that paragraph. In line 2, after the word "insects," I offer this amendment:

Investigation of the loco plant to find a means for its destruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, in line 2, after the word "insects," insert "investigation of the loco plant to find a means for its destruction."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, that would come under the Bureau of Plant Industry and not under the Bureau of Entomology.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I find just ahead of that, "Investigations of the damage to forests and forest trees by insects." But if you say it comes under that head, I will wait and offer the amendment then. The loco plant, I may state, is a poisonous plant which is very destructive to horses and cattle, and it is spreading very rapidly in the cattle-growing regions of the United States, and has caused the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the cattle raisers and also to the raisers of horses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would say to the gentleman from Texas that is already provided for on page 18, in line 23, under the head of "Botanical investigations and experiments: Investigations relating to medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other economic plants, seeds, and weeds." Loco is a poisonous plant and comes under that class, and the Department is probably making investigations along that line.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman thinks it is sufficient——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Statistics: Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics, compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports; special investigations and compilations; subscription to, and purchase of, statistical and newspaper publications containing data for permanent comparative records; maps and charts; stationery, office supplies, blanks, blank books, circulars, paper, envelopes, postal cards, postage stamps, office fixtures, telegraph and telephone services, freight and express charges, including employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and necessary traveling expenses: Provided, That the monthly crop reports issued on the 3d and 10th days of each month shall embrace statements of the conditions of the crops by States in the United States, with such explanations, comparisons, and information as may be useful for illustrating the above matter, and that it shall be submitted to and officially approved by the Secretary of Agriculture before being issued or published, $122,500, of which not more than $50,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, D. C.

Investigations concerning the feasibility of extending the demands of foreign markets for the agricultural products of the United States, and to secure as far as may be a change in the methods of supplying farm products to foreign countries; employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in making investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations; traveling expenses, and freight and express charges; telephone and telegraph services; and all necessary office fixtures and supplies, $7,500.

Total for Bureau of Statistics, $187,760.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding in line 11, page 43, at the end of said line, the following: "To pay observers who make statistical reports to the Bureau of Statistics of the condition of crops, and which are used in making up the monthly crop reports herein provided, $100,000, or so much thereof as is necessary."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will have to raise the point of order on that. It is new legislation and increases expenditures.

Mr. BARTLETT. Do I understand the gentleman from New York—I did not hear him—makes the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make the point of order that it is new legislation and increases expenditures.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to confess that the point of order occurs to me to be good, but I was in hopes that the gentleman would not make it, at least yet——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the gentlemen are sufficiently rewarded with the public documents they received. There has been no complaint from them or any call for money.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to violate any rule by speaking to the amendment while the point of order is up, but if the gentleman will permit me to say, while he reserves the point of order——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will do that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will not detain the House but a moment. This amendment, which I frankly confess is subject to the point of order, was made for the purpose of paying the gentlemen who are observers, who furnish the data for the Secretary of Agriculture upon which he bases his monthly report.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman know the Secretary of Agriculture prefers not to have these men paid; that he made a statement before the committee that he would rather not pay them even if the money was appropriated?

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not know that, nor does that alter my view about it, with all due regard to the Secretary of Agriculture, for whom I have a very great respect and personal regard. I know this, that I have letters from one of those very competent gentlemen in my district, in which he stated that the Secretary had written him that he thought they ought to be paid and that effort would be made on this bill to provide for such payment. That is all I know about that. Now, the gentleman is correct when he states that the Secretary of Agriculture made that statement before the committee, but I am also correct in making the statement I have referred to as to what one of these gentlemen engaged in this business told me. I have a letter from him.

Mr. SCOTT. I will simply say that the Secretary stated to the committee that he thought he got better service on account of the fact that the services rendered were wholly voluntary; that the men who rendered it had pride in it and gave it better attention than if they were paid for it, and it eliminated also the idea of political patronage, so that the observers who served the Department in this respect were men of better grade than were likely to be obtained if it was a matter of salary.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think so, Mr. Chairman. These reports made by the voluntary observers are the most important basis upon which the Secretary issues upon the 2d and 10th of each month the report of the condition of the crops. Now, every one knows that so far as certain staple crops are concerned the reports of the Secretary of Agriculture on the 2d and 10th of each month have a most important bearing on the prices that these products bring in the market, and these reports ought to be as good as can be obtained. I do not believe that the Secretary of Agriculture is correct in his statement that you can get better or more efficient services from anybody who does it free, without any compensation at all, than you can get by obtaining competent men who are paid something for the trouble they are put to in making these reports.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to say. I know it is subject to a point of order, but it seems to me that those who perform the services of such great benefit to the whole country ought to be compensated for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman himself admits that it is subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and to incur such other expenses for office fixtures and supplies, stationery, traveling, freight and express charges, illustration of the Experiment Station Record, bulletins, and reports, as he may find essential in carrying out the objects of the above acts, and the sums apportioned to the several States shall be paid quarterly in advance; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish to such institutions or individuals as may care to buy them copies of the card index of agricultural literature prepared by the Office of Experiment Stations, and charge for the same a price covering the additional expense involved in the preparation of these copies, and he is hereby authorized to apply the moneys received toward the expense of the preparation of the index; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend $45,000 of which sum to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, including the erection of buildings, the printing (in Hawaii and Porto Rico), illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins: Provided, That not more than $15,000 shall be expended for the maintenance of such stations in any one of said Territories; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and to apply the moneys received from the sale of such products to the maintenance of said stations; in all, $810,000: Provided, That $5,000 of this sum shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the organization and progress of farmer's institutes in the several States and Territories, and upon similar organizations in foreign countries, with special suggestions of plans and methods for making such organizations more effective for the dissemination of the results of the work of the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural experiment stations and of improved methods of agricultural practice.

Total for agricultural experiment stations, $810,000.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend agricultural experiment station paragraph by striking out the words "eight hundred and ten thousand," in line 16, page 46, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one million and fifty-five thousand," and by inserting after the word "dollars," in the sixteenth line of said paragraph, the words "and from the sum hereby appropriated for the maintenance of agricultural experiment stations in accordance with said acts $20,000 shall be paid to each State and Territory entitled to the benefits of said acts."

Also amend by striking out the words "eight hundred and ten thousand" in the thirteenth and fourteenth lines, page 48, of same paragraph, and inserting the words "one million and fifty-five thousand."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply adds $5,000 to the appropriation which each agricultural State experimental station now receives under the act of 1887. The act of 1887 was introduced by Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, for the purpose of establishing, through the aid of the Federal Government, agricultural experiment stations in the different States.

The total appropriation under that act by this amendment would only add $240,000 to the appropriation provided in this bill, and I have asked for the passage of this amendment because the stations need the money; and I ask for it because they have done a work in the development of agricultural knowledge in making that knowledge specific, in making it valuable, in spreading it among the farmers of this country, which warrants a generous consideration on the part of the Federal Government.

The agricultural experiment stations have done more than any other one influence in the United States to bring the business of farming out of mists and fog and superstition and to put it in the realm of absolute ascertained fact. Any number of instances can be given of the specific things which these experimental stations have done. They have made a record which has been rich in value to the agriculture of the United States.

Take the one experimental station in Wisconsin and one single instance of the work which Professor Babcock did when he devised and worked out the Babcock test. Up to that time there had been no measure of the commercial value of milk, no simple way in which you could tell what milk was worth. A farmer who carried to the factory 100 pounds of milk containing 3 pounds of butter fat got as much money as the farmer who carried 100 pounds of milk that contained 5 pounds of butter fat and which was worth nearly twice as much. Mr. Babcock devised a simple test which any farmer can use, which can be used in any creamery or factory, and that test has gone all over the civilized world. It is used in Finland; it is used in England; it is used in France; it is used in Madagascar; it is used in South Africa; it is used everywhere where cows are milked to determine the value of that milk product.

Now, I want to say to you that the dairy product of the United States amounts to $500,000,000 every year, and it has been materially benefited by the introduction of this simple process. Mr. Babcock was urged by his friends, when he made that discovery, to withdraw from the Wisconsin University, to put this into use for his own benefit, and patent the process. If he had done so, he would have become a millionaire beyond any question. But he said, "I was employed by the Federal Government to work for the farmers of this country, and they are entitled to the fruit of my labor unhampered by the cost of a patent." This one discovery has been worth more to the dairy interests of the United States than it costs to run the National Government for six months.

Not only that, but look at what we have done with cheese up there. The Wisconsin experimental station has been studying the question of curing cheese and has found out that you can send your cheese direct to the cold storage, without the intervention of any curing room, and cure it and make the finest cheese that can be produced. These are practical things. Not only that, but in every State in this Union is this same work being carried on. In Texas they are working on the development of beef breeds of cattle and in food. Up in Minnesota they are developing new varieties of wheat. In New York they are bringing out new ideas respecting the cultivation of orchards.

In Minnesota, again, they are studying the question as to the nutritive value of food, and in all the experimental stations of the United States they are studying those practical questions which lie right at the base of farm life. And I want to say to you, gentlemen, it seems to me that when we come in here and ask for a little addition of $240,000 to this appropriation for this work which is so definite and so specific and so productive of great practical results we can hardly afford to deny the request, because we have the money. We saved it for the people of this country when we turned back our mileage account. That alone is sufficient. [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may be permitted to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of gentlemen here who may think they are economical in opposing an appropriation like this to the fact that you appropriate millions of dollars to establish a Department of Commerce and Labor, without which this Government was run very well for a hundred years. I am glad you did it; I am for it. You passed an appropriation bill giving $136,000,000 to the pensioners of the wars of this country, and you did well. You go head over heels into the Panama Canal scheme, almost without a division, which means a certain expenditure of $200,000,000 and a probable expenditure of $500,000,000, and I am with you.

You do some other things. You provide for the building of a battle ship which costs $4,000,000, and which will rust upon the waters unless somebody gets foolish, and I think you do well. You give $5,000,000 to the St. Louis Exposition, where the industries and genius of America will be exhibited, and I think you do well; but when we come in here and ask for only $240,000 to add to the appropriation for these little experimental stations that are working out practical problems that lie around the lives of 9,000,000 men who toil on the farms of this country, it seems to me we are not asking too much.

I do not want to whoop it up for the farmer. I do not want to dazzle you with a lot of statistics, but this thing I do want to say about the farmers of this country: There are a lot of them, and you never hear of a lot of farmers engaged in rioting. They are the defenders of law. You never hear of a lot of farmers organizing a trust to harm anybody; and in the conflicts which are to come in this country and are certain to come between the power of capital and the power of labor the American farmer will be the man who is going to do the country the most good, because he represents not only the interests of labor but the interests of capital as well.

You are going to need him, and he will be there to stand for the dignity of American law, for the rights of property, and the rights of the men who toil; and so when in Congress you can do something like this which is definite, which does not take very much money, for Heaven's sake do it, because the American farmer and our agricultural interests deserve it. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much after hearing the gentleman's eloquent speech to still feel compelled to raise the point of order that the proposed amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the amendment it changes the law on the statute books to-day, which gives $30,000 each to agricultural colleges. That is clearly a change of existing law, and the point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public road inquiries: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the systems of road management throughout the United States; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road-making materials in the several States; to conduct experiments; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations and experiments; for preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins and reports; for necessary office fixtures and supplies, apparatus, and materials; telegraph and telephone service, traveling, and other necessary expenses, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $35,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. WADSWORTH] whether this sum of $35,000 is the amount asked for by the Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; the Secretary asked for $65,000, but we gave $10,000 to the Bureau of Chemistry. If the gentleman will turn back to that——

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, that is understood, then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The total appropriation here for good roads amounts to $45,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would you object to having this appropriation increased to $55,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would seriously, because I think good and efficient work is being done under the present appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out $35,000 and inserting $55,000. I make this motion because I know there is scarcely any subject that is receiving more attention throughout the country at large just now than this subject of good roads. I think there is less known perhaps about the making of good roads, in some parts of the country at least, than almost any other subject. The Department is doing good work, but would do very much better work if it had larger means at its disposal for this purpose.

Mr. BOWIE. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] understand that this is really an increase of $10,000 net for this service, because the $10,000 which has heretofore been used for chemical work has been transferred to another division, so that the appropriation here is net, making a real increase of $10,000?

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood that to be the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH], that this was practically an increase.

Mr. BOWIE. Yes; practically an increase of $10,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care to take up the time of the committee, but I do think this is a matter of importance, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will sustain my amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will only say to the gentleman that the Committee on Agriculture took this matter into very careful consideration, and the increase practically granted is $10,000. I take it that nobody on the floor of this House is ready yet to have the United States Government go into localities in the several States and build roads. All that the United States ought properly to do is to disseminate information in regard to the building of roads, and perhaps with the aid of the localities to furnish an object lesson in road making. That is as far as the United States Government ought to go. Thirty-five thousand dollars, which, as already stated, is practically an increase of $10,000, is, in the judgment of the committee, an ample appropriation for this work.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has stated what every Member of the House knows—that there is a very strong pressure for legislation upon the subject of good roads—and the gentleman from New York himself has expressed the fear that this pressure might become so strong as to increase very materially the appropriations along that line.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When did I express that fear?

Mr. TAWNEY. A moment ago. Do you not think it a fact that if we expend a little more money in the matter of investigation such as the Agricultural Department is now making, it will tend to satisfy the Department to a very great extent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think so.

Mr. TAWNEY. And do you not think that if in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture it is necessary that a certain amount should be appropriated, it ought to be done?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not necessarily, no. The committee and the Secretary of Agriculture have many honest differences of opinion as to the amount of money that can be judiciously expended within the fiscal year.

It must be remembered that this appropriation has been going on for a series of years, and will go on probably for a good many years after we are all dead. The question for this Committee of the Whole to meet here and now is how much money can be judiciously expended in the coming fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that information on this subject is being disseminated more largely than it was?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that a certain sentiment is being "worked up" on this subject. Many of the letters I get show evidence of being worked up by some influence here.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not understood that the additional appropriation asked for here is for the purpose of building these sample roads; and is not the appropriation we now make sufficient to carry on the work that is now being carried on by the Department?

Mr. HEPBURN. So far as I am concerned, I have no direct information as to how the Secretary would expend this money. But he has said that he could judiciously and properly spend $60,000 in making this inquiry with the machinery that he now has. I think, with due deference to the committee, that I would rather have his opinion as to what amount it is proper to expend in making the inquiry than the opinion of gentlemen who are not nearly so conversant with the possibilities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is true, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that there is no use in having any committees.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes, there is. This is no reflection upon the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the judgment of a Cabinet officer is better than that of any committee of this House, then there is no need of any committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman is supersensitive about it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman that since 1895-96 that investigation, which commenced with an appropriation of $10,000, has received increasing appropriations until it is now practically $45,000 in seven years. With the work they have done and are doing, and the work they will continue to do, I think every demand of the country will be met by this appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a very large addition. The Secretary has said that he can properly use it. I believe that the great majority of the gentlemen in this committee have confidence in what he says. We think, however, that this will be properly expended, and therefore it is that I insist upon my amendment. I also insist that there is no reflection upon the committee, and that to agree to this amendment would not be tantamount to declaring that the great Committee of Agriculture is not important, that it does not accomplish great good, and that the country would not seriously suffer if anything should happen to it or to its efficiency.

I am not attacking the committee; I am simply saying that there is another person in the country with larger information, with better opportunities to know what he can judiciously do, than any one of them or all of them, who has disagreed with them, and I for one coincide with his opinion rather perhaps than with that more learned and astute opinion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One moment. I wish to call attention to the note in the estimate on the paragraph for road experiments. One of the things sought by getting the larger appropriation is "object lessons in road building," "the purchase of machinery," and going absolutely into the road-building business. Now, the committee objected to that and struck out that language, and simply confined it to disseminating knowledge in regard to road building.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but you are unwilling that they should acquire this knowledge. This appropriation perhaps will enable them to secure that information that everybody wants.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that the Committee on Agriculture have the utmost confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture. This committee have labored for more than a month, in sessions from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the evening. We have given extensive hearings. Here is a volume of 451 pages.

All of these matters have been carefully considered, and after listening to the Secretary and the gentleman in charge of this division, Mr. Dodge, the committee concluded that the $35,000 was all that could be judiciously expended at this time. Now, if it is a proposition here to build these roads, as has been suggested, is the gentleman from Iowa now ready to build roads in Iowa at an expense of three hundred or four hundred million dollars? If that is the policy, then let us increase the appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, there is no similarity between the proposition that I have made and this inane proposition of expending three or four hundred million dollars in building roads. I do not want anything of that kind. I have not advocated it. What I want is the information, properly acquired, and then disseminated throughout the country that will enable localities to build their own roads. I have not been an advocate of road building by the Federal Government.

I have never said anything of that kind here or elsewhere, but I do think that there can be no wiser expenditure of money than the expenditure of this additional $20,000 in securing the information upon this subject that is wanted in all parts of the country.

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that if the total amount asked for is allowed a portion of that money will be used for the building of these expensive roads and the purchase of machinery. The committee did not deem it advisable to go into the building of these expensive roads at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say one word. In addition to that appropriation there are from $1,500 to $3,000 expended for printing the good-roads bulletins, so that you must add that to the cost of the good-roads bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 48.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to turn back to page 18, and in line 17 to insert the word "five" instead of the word "three;" so that it shall read:

Forty thousand dollars, $5,000 of which sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be expended in cooperation with the experiment station of the State of California for studying the nature of Anaheim and other diseases of vines, and for ascertaining the best means for protecting vineyards against their ravages.

I do this at the earnest request of the gentleman from California [Mr. BELL] and other gentlemen of that delegation, who claim that this disease, Anaheim, is a serious threat to their industry. It does not increase the total appropriation, but simply makes $5,000 available for this investigation instead of three thousand.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POWERS of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11825 and had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, they will be submitted in gross.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the Annual Report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, which includes a report on the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations in the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, in accordance with the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the said fiscal year.

The attention of the Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 5,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1904.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER also, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same.

H. R. 6331. An act granting an increase of pension to James N. Dickey.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 707. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the district of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1890.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3916. An act to amend section 2699 of the Revised Statutes, relating to compensation of collectors of customs—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 4122. An act to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Census.

S. 3800. An act donating gun carriages to the Connecticut commissioners for the care and preservation of Fort Griswold—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS FROM FILES.

Mr. KENNEDY obtained unanimous consent to withdraw from the files, without leaving copies thereof, the papers in the case of Henry Weimit, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James Keizer, administrator of estate of James Glover, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Variety, Micah Dyer, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Waccamaw River, North Carolina and South Carolina—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DE ARMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8681) to detach the county of Linn, in the State of Missouri, from the western and attach it to the eastern judicial district of said State, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 730); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11812) relating to applications, declaratory statements, entries, and final proofs under the homestead and other land laws, and to confirm the same in certain cases when made outside of the land district within which the land is situated, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 731); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8160) to declare a portion of the Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota, not navigable, and authorizing the construction of bridges thereon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 732); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CRUMPACKER, from the Committee on the Census, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11823) to authorize the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan and with officials of other States in taking the census of manufactures, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 733); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 462) to construct and place a light-ship off the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 734); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HERMANN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 735); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LORIMER (by request): A bill (H. R. 11878) in relation to national mortgage banks—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 11879) to provide for the consolidation and reorganization of customs collection districts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BARTLETT: A bill (H. R. 11880) to provide for the recutting of the great seal of the United States from the original model—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 11881) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion, and to the widows of such soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 11882) to provide public convenience stations in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RIDER: A bill (H. R. 11883) to provide for free lectures to the people in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: A bill (H. R. 11884) providing naval training station on Put in Bay Island, in Lake Erie—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11885) to amend section 914 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to practice in the circuit and district courts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 11886) for the erection of a public building at Faribault, Minn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11887) to provide for the investigation of infectious diseases of domestic animals prevalent in the State of Minnesota and adjoining States—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HEARST: A bill (H. R. 11888) to empower United States attorneys, without the direction of the Attorney-General, to enforce the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 11889) for the relief of the tobacco growers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WANGER: A bill (H. R. 11890) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion, and their widows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN (by request): A bill (H. R. 11953) to establish a public park on Columbia Heights and to make a new street on its western boundary—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 11954) to establish in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be known as the Bureau of Public Highways, and to provide for national aid in the improvement of the public roads—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 11955) for the erection of a public building at Harriman, Tenn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A resolution (H. Res. 204) asking the Secretary of the Interior to furnish certain information relating to Indian affairs in the Indian Territory to the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: A resolution (H. Res. 205) authorizing the purchase of 40 copies of the Compiled Statutes of the United States for 1901, with the Supplement for 1903—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 11891) granting an increase of pension to James L. Hart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11892) granting a pension to Clinton G. Ames—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNY: A bill (H. R. 11893) for the relief of George W. Spencer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADLEY: A bill (H. R. 11894) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Sheldon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREAZEALE: A bill (H. R. 11895) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Mansfield, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BUCKMAN: A bill (H. R. 11896) granting an increase of pension to Giles A. Woolsey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11897) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11898) granting a pension to Bailey D. Judkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11899) granting a pension to May L. Whitney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 11900) for the relief of Shadrack H. Wren, of Izard County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr DANIELS: A bill (H. R. 11901) for the appropriation of water from the Colorado River for irrigation purposes—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. GUDGER: A bill (H. R. 11902) for relief of Mrs. Mary Gaddy—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HEDGE: A bill (H. R. 11903) granting a pension to Bertha C. Hoffmeister—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 11904) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Hayden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11905) granting a pension to Rebecca Butler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Texas: A bill (H. R. 11906) granting a pension to Margaret Jones—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOGG: A bill (H. R. 11907) granting an honorable discharge to Thomas B. Hanoum—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11908) for the relief of the legal representatives of G. B. Stimpson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JACKSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11909) granting a pension to Charles H. McCleary—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11910) granting an increase of pension to Florian Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPORT OF ALASKAN BOUNDARY TRIBUNAL.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That the report and maps of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal, which were ordered printed by the Senate as a Senate document, be bound in cloth.

REPORT ON KANSAS CITY (MO.) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to send to the Senate a copy of the report of the Board for River Improvement and Harbor Limits at Kansas City, Mo.

RHODE ISLAND STATE BUILDING AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the order which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That an additional illustration—the State building of Rhode Island—be published in the extra edition of the report of the St. Louis Fair Commission, authorized by Senate concurrent resolution No. 20.

Mr. COCKRELL. The document referred to in the order has already been ordered printed. The illustration of the Rhode Island building was not ready when the document was authorized to be printed. Rhode Island is the only State that has been left out.

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXPOSITION AT PORTLAND, OREG.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on the day following the conclusion of the Panama treaty I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 276, in aid of the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Oreg., providing it does not at that time interfere with the appropriation bills, and at any other time when business does not seem to be particularly pressing, requiring the immediate consideration of the Senate.

HENRY CHRISTY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

ABRAM H. HUNT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 892) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

ALBERT H. ROGERS.

ISTHMIAN CANAL ROUTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] on Wednesday last asked for the printing of a certain isthmian canal document, and it was ordered. The document, on examination, I find contains maps and illustrations. The Government Printing Office will not print them unless the order includes the printing of maps and illustrations. The order also left off one small document of importance. The Chair asks leave to amend the order by adding "with the illustrations and maps, together with the message of the President of January 20, 1902." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is so amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 200) granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1760) granting a pension to Ann A. Devore, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6331) granting an increase of pension to James M. Dickey, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to satisfactorily adjust and determine all differences between the United States and Colombia growing out of the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, it was not my purpose originally to submit any remarks on the question of the ratification or the rejection of the treaty now pending in the Senate between the Republic of Panama and the United States. The speeches, however, of the Senators who propose to vote against the treaty and their criticism of the attitude of our Government toward Colombia have constrained me in justification of my vote to give some of the reasons which influence me to vote for the ratification of the treaty.

It is unnecessary at this stage of the discussion to speak of the importance to the great interests of the United States of a canal uniting the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific. This is conceded by everybody.

But while Senators profess to favor the construction of an isthmian canal, they vehemently oppose the treaty which grants the right to the United States to construct such a canal across the Isthmus of Panama, not upon the ground that the provisions of that treaty are not all that any patriotic American citizen could ask for, but that the manner of its procurement has been such that, as self-respecting Senators, they can not approve it. They have felt it incumbent upon them to denounce the President and Secretary Hay and to insist that the President has violated not only the Constitution of our country, but international law as well, in the recognition of the Republic of Panama and in the negotiation of the treaty which is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. President, I dissent in toto from the conclusions that have been reached on both of these propositions. I insist that our Government in all of its negotiations with the Republic of Colombia, and now with that of Panama, has not only followed the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, but kept well within the principles of international law. The executive branch of our Government is charged with our foreign relations, and to the President, under our Constitution, is the authority given to recognize the independence of Panama or to refuse such recognition as his judgment shall determine. In doing this he assumes the responsibility. That responsibility is not shared by members of this Senate. He is not beholden to the members of this Senate for his acts in thus recognizing the Republic of Panama. Fortunately, for the best interests of the Republic, his action does not depend upon the vote of Senators in either ratifying or rejecting this treaty. The people of the United States are the ones to whom he must go to account for his stewardship and the ones to whom he must appeal for a justification and approval of his acts.

That he, in recognizing the Republic of Panama, has only exercised the rights and privileges of his office is fully confirmed by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I call to the attention of Senators the following language of Mr. Justice McLean, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Williams v. The Suffolk Insurance Company, 3 Peters, page 420. In speaking of this identical points, the learned justice said:

> And can there be any doubt that when the executive branch of the Government, which is charged with our foreign relations, shall in its correspondence with a foreign nation assume a fact in regard to the sovereignty of any island or country, it is conclusive upon the judicial department? And in this view it is not material to inquire, nor is it the province of the court to determine, whether the Executive be right or wrong. It is enough to know that in the exercise of his constitutional functions he has decided the question. Having done this under the responsibilities which belong to him, it is obligatory on the people and Government of the Union.

And in the case now pending it is not material to inquire, so far as Senators are concerned, whether the President be right or wrong. If he be wrong, this Senate can not correct that wrong. The people of the United States, who are the source of all power, will correct that, if it be a wrong, in our national election next November. If he be right, as I firmly believe him to be, they will approve and applaud his action by reelecting him to the Presidency of the United States.

The responsibility for the recognition of the Republic of Panama is his, not the Senate's. That recognition is obligatory upon this Senate, as it is upon the Supreme Court and the people of this country. It is entirely separate and distinct from the treaty which is now pending in the Senate. That treaty may be ratified or it may be rejected by the Senate, but the fact will remain that the Republic of Panama is recognized by the Government of the United States as an existing republic, and that fact can not be disturbed by any action of this body.

The adoption of the treaty makes the construction of an isthmian canal an accomplished fact. How does the rejection of this treaty leave us? Panama is no longer a part of the Colombian Republic. It is an independent nation, so recognized by all of the great nations in both the Eastern and Western hemispheres. Whatever rights we had under the treaty that was negotiated with New Granada in 1846 now rest upon this new Republic. No law, national or international, would justify our Government in aiding Colombia to destroy this new Republic. Colombia, then, can give no aid to this or any other country in the construction of an isthmian canal. Whatever negotiations may be had on that subject in the future must be had with the Republic of Panama. The rejection of the treaty would be a notification to that country that we do not care to enter into such relations with her and that we have abandoned our rights and claims to a free transit across the Isthmus by way of a canal such as is proposed in the pending treaty. This, Senators, is the situation that we must face if this treaty be defeated, and it is a question that the Senators from the several States must meet and settle with their constituents in our national election next November.

Mr. President, some of the honorable Senators who oppose this treaty say the President was too precipitate in recognizing the Republic of Panama and have entered into an elaborate system of mathematical calculations to show how closely the action of our Government followed upon the heels of the uprising in Panama. If the recognition of the Republic of Panama were one of the questions that this body had to pass upon, these suggestions from the honorable Senators might have some weight; but from every standpoint that the consideration of the treaty can be viewed it is of no moment whether the Republic of Panama was recognized by the President as an independent sovereign power three days or three years after the declaration of independence had been made by the people of that long-oppressed province.

As I have already shown, the President, in recognizing the Republic of Panama, merely exercised the power that is lodged in him by the Constitution of the United States. He alone is the judge as to the proper time to make recognition. Senators proclaimed in stentorian tones in this Hall that international law has been violated by this recognition. What principle of international law has been violated by this recognition? What authors on the subject of international law define the exact time when one government must or must not recognize the existence of another state? What decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has clearly defined the exact moment at which it is proper for the President to act? I affirm, Mr. President, that international law does not prescribe the exact time when one government in the exercise of its sovereign rights may recognize the existence of a new power or an independent government. That question is always left to the discretion of the recognizing power. In some instances it may be months or years if you please, and in others it may be practically coexistent with the declaration of independence of the new power.

If the President had violated any principle of international law in recognizing the Republic of Panama, those who would have been first heard to complain would have been our commercial and industrial rivals, the nations who are competitors with us for trade in the Orient. Have any of the great commercial nations of the world filed any protest against the early action taken by the United States in the recognition of this new Republic? I affirm, Mr. President, not one. On the contrary, I hold in my hand, and will insert in my remarks, a list of the governments which have recognized the Republic of Panama, and the dates of such recognition.

List of governments which have recognized the independence of Panama—the dates of recognition.

United States	November 13, 1903.
France	November 16, 1903.
China	November 23, 1903.
Austria-Hungary	November 27, 1903.
Germany	November 30, 1903.
Denmark	December 3, 1903.
Russia	December 6, 1903.
Sweden and Norway	December 7, 1903.
Belgium	December 9, 1903.
Nicaragua	December 15, 1903.
Peru	December 19, 1903.
Cuba	December 23, 1903.
Great Britain	December 24, 1903.
Italy	December 24, 1903.
Japan	December 28, 1903.
Costa Rica	December 28, 1903.
Switzerland	December 28, 1903.
Guatemala	January 14, 1904.
Netherlands	January 19, 1904.

I find that within less than sixty-five days from the date of the declaration of independence on the part of the Republic of Panama twenty governments have recognized the independence of this little Republic. And in this list I find such countries as Great Britain, Germany, France, and Russia. France recognized the Republic within three days after the time that the United States did; Germany within seventeen days; Great Britain within forty-one days, and Italy within forty-one days. Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Peru, Guatemala, and the Republic of Cuba, in the Western Hemisphere, have recognized the Republic of Panama. This list of countries, Mr. President, which have followed so quickly the example of the United States is the best refutation which it is possible to make of those charges made on this floor by Senators who are opposed to the ratification of the treaty between the two Republics, the United States and Panama, that the President has violated international law by the alleged precipitate manner in which he has recognized the Republic of Panama. It is not only a complete and ample refutation to the claim made, that this Government should have waited until the test had been made as to whether the Republic of Panama could sustain herself against the mother country, but it shows that remarkable unanimity of feeling that exists among the nations of the earth as to the importance of the construction of the isthmian canal across the territory of Panama.

Mr. President, if the people and the governments of these various countries which I have here named approve the action of the United States in recognizing the Republic of Panama and negotiating this treaty for the construction of a canal, why should any American citizen object? Certainly there is nothing in the history of our relations with Colombia or the dealings of her people with the United States that entitles them to any greater consideration than has been shown by our Government during all the relations from the time of the negotiation of the Hay-Herran treaty to this present moment. This has already been shown by Senators who have addressed themselves to this subject, and I shall endeavor, Mr. President, before I close, to give some of the reasons why the people of the Province of Panama declared their independence of the Colombian Republic, and why early action was taken by the United States in recognizing the new Republic and negotiating the treaty for the construction of an isthmian canal, as provided for in the treaty now before us.

The revolution which resulted in the separation of the American colonies from the British Crown was precipitated by a minority of the colonists. During the whole period of the American Revolution there was a very substantial class of citizens in each colony that opposed the separation of the colonies from England and sympathized with the success of the British arms. If we can believe approved historians, the civil war was precipitated by a minority of the people in the several States that formed the Southern Confederacy. As the war progressed the feeling of State patriotism influenced the citizens, and they showed a unanimity of purpose and a patriotism and bravery from their standpoint that are the admiration of mankind.

The establishment of the Republic of Panama, however, Mr. President, is one that meets with the approval not only of the leaders of that young Republic, but of all classes of citizens throughout the Province. Never in the history of man has there been such universal rejoicing over the establishment of an independent government as prevails with all classes in Panama to-day. Their independence and the recognition of their Republic by all of the governments of the world are the culmination of more than forty years of agitation, of war, and of bloodshed. The arguments which have been advanced by Senators who are opposed to this treaty have ignored the rights of the people of Panama and have assumed that without just cause they have rebelled against the parent State.

These arguments of the honorable Senators who have been so insistent upon recognizing the claimed rights of the Government of Colombia have assumed that the Province of Panama is as closely associated geographically and every other way with Colombia as Virginia is with Maryland, or Massachusetts is with the other New England States. Mr. President, geographically there is no more connection between the Province of Panama and the Government at Bogota than there is between Panama or Venezuela and the new Republic of Cuba. There are hundreds of miles of dense forests, mountains, and morasses that separate the Province of Panama from the Government at Bogota, so dense and so impassable that no pathway by man has ever been made through this great strip of country that separates Panama from the Government at Bogota. Their connection is by water transportation.

The interests of the people of Panama are as separate and distinct from the Colombian Republic as are the interests of the Republic of Cuba from those of the German Empire. In the half century or more that the Province of Panama has been united with the fortunes of the various governments that now form the Republic of Colombia, the Government at Bogota has shown a disregard of the interests of the people of Panama and the development of that province that is unparalleled in the history of a civilized government. No eastern despot has ruled with more absolute power the people under his domain than has the Government at Bogota controlled the affairs of the people of Panama. The revenues that have been derived from Panama have been used by the little coterie that form the governing power at Bogota for the benefit of themselves and the states in which they were specially interested. No roads have been constructed; no schools have been established; no public improvements made that would advance the interests of the Province of Panama. The petitions of her people for greater recognition in the confederated Republic have been ignored and her rights trampled upon.

Had it not been for the intervening power of the United States Panama would long before this have gained her independence. It happened, however, Mr. President, that when the people of Panama declared their independence last November their interests in establishing an independent Republic coincided not only with the interests of our Government, but with the interests of all other civilized nations. And it is this fact and not the fact that the United States had recognized the Republic of Panama that has caused all the great commercial and industrial nations of the world to so promptly recognize the independence of the Republic of Panama.

While the United States will undoubtedly be more greatly benefited by the construction of this canal across the Isthmus of Panama than any other nation, it is true that all nations will be benefited, some in a greater degree than others; but the benefit of such a great waterway, uniting the waters of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific Ocean, is of paramount importance to all civilized governments. The attitude of Colombia since the negotiation of the Hay-Herran treaty has been such as to not only arouse the suspicions of the friends throughout the civilized world of this proposed canal, but to forfeit the good opinion of all fair-dealing nations.

During the progress of the debate on this question a number of Senators animadverted with a good deal of severity on the conduct of the President in having the Nashville at Colon and other war vessels and marines at Panama and Colon for the protection of American interests and to maintain a free route across the Isthmus. They have insinuated rather than made the direct charge that our Government, through the President and his Cabinet officers, connived at the uprising in Panama and are responsible for the breaking away of that Province from the Colombian Government. I have said, Mr. President, they have made no direct charge to this effect. No self-respecting Senator could well do that in view of the statement made by the President on that point, which I desire to again call to the attention of the Senate. In his message sent to the Senate January 4, in speaking upon this identical point, he said:

> I hesitate to refer to the injurious insinuations which have been made of complicity by this Government in the revolutionary movement in Panama. They are as destitute of foundation as they are of propriety. The only excuse for my mentioning them is the fear lest unthinking persons might mistake for acquiescence the silence of mere self-respect. I think proper to say, therefore, that no one connected with this Government had any part in preparing, inciting, or encouraging the late revolution on the Isthmus of Panama, and that save from the reports of our military and naval officers, given above, no one connected with this Government had any previous knowledge of the revolution except such as was accessible to any person of ordinary intelligence who read the newspapers and kept up a current acquaintance with public affairs.

Our honored Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, in his response to General Reyes on January 5 was equally as emphatic. He said:

> Equally so is the insinuation that any action of this Government prior to the revolution in Panama was the result of complicity with the plans of the revolutionists. The Government sees fit to make these denials, and makes them finally.

One would suppose, Mr. President, that after these declarations made by the President and the Secretary of State, that we should hear nothing more from those who are opposed to the ratification of the treaty on this point, and yet, as I have said, while the honorable Senators do not indulge in a direct charge, they group together all of the circumstances and facts connected with the whole history of the revolution in Colombia which in any manner—it makes no difference how remotely—connect our Government with the revolution, and present them in as forcible a manner as they can be expressed in the English language as an impeachment of the words of the President and our Secretary of State.

I, for one, Mr. President, am willing that that issue, if issue it has to be, be made here and before the people of this country. Whatever may be charged against our President, it never can be successfully intimated that he is not a thoroughly honest and truthful man. Nor can it be charged that he has not the courage of his convictions. Had our Government in any manner connived with the revolutionists to create a rebellion in Panama and cause the separation of that province from Colombia, President Roosevelt is the man who has the courage to state that and justify his acts before his countrymen.

Had the Colombian Government desired to have had the Hay-Herran treaty ratified by the Congress of that Republic, which assembled on the 20th of June last at Bogota, there is no question whatever but what the treaty would have been ratified by that Congress.

The truth is, however, Mr. President, that after the treaty was negotiated the President of that Republic and the coterie of men who are in control with him in Colombia believed that a better bargain could be made with the Government of the United States, and that an additional ten millions could be secured from the New Panama Canal Company. And instead of treating our Government in a fair and open-handed manner, they sought by dark and devious ways to defeat the treaty and to compel the United States to give them more money than was stipulated in the Hay-Herran treaty. As early as the 15th of April, 1903, our minister at Bogota, Mr. Beaupré, in a communication to our Government, said that while it was impossible to predict what the result would be as to the ratification or rejection of the treaty, yet he was certain of one thing, and that was that if the Government wished that the treaty be ratified it would be done.

And again, on the 4th of May, 1903, Mr. Beaupré, in a communication to our Secretary of State, said:

> Private discussion, which perhaps more clearly reflects the real situation, is to the effect that the price is inadequate; that a much greater sum of money can be obtained, and that the United States can be obligated to guarantee the sovereignty of the Colombian ports outside the Department of Panama against the invasion or seizure by foreign enemies. The one great determining point, however, is the belief that the price can be greatly augmented.

And again, on the 10th of June, 1903, Mr. Beaupré, in communication with Mr. Hay, said:

Mr. Marcini, local agent of the Panama Canal Company, has informed me that he has an official note from the Colombian Government stating that it did not think that the convention would be ratified, because of the opinion that the consideration was insufficient, but that if the canal company would pay to Colombia about $10,000,000 ratification could be secured.

And again, on the 20th of June, 1903, the day that the National Congress met in extra session, Mr. Beaupré, in a communication to Mr. Hay, said:

As I have heretofore predicted, there is a full and ample majority of the friends of the Government in both Houses of Congress, and such legislation as the Government may seriously desire will be enacted.

Seven days later Mr. Beaupré sent a telegram to Secretary Hay, in which he said:

Friends of the Government have control in Congress. I believe any legislation seriously desired by the Government will pass.

In a confidential telegram of July 12, 1903, from Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay, he uses this language:

—— has requested me to say to you that he does not think the treaty can be ratified without two amendments—to article 1, stipulating payment ten millions by the canal company for the right of transfer; to article 25, increasing payment to fifteen millions—and says that the treaty can be ratified at once with these amendments.

And again, on the 5th of September, 1903, Mr. Beaupré, in a communication to Secretary Hay, said:

The impressions which I set forth in my No. 6 of April 15, 1903, that there would be an attempt to secure greater concessions from the United States before a canal treaty would be ratified, are now confirmed. It is quite probable that the Government originally intended that a treaty of some sort should be passed, but apparently not the one under consideration in its entirety.

I have read enough here, Mr. President, to show that if the acting president, Mr. Marroquin, and his advisers had desired to have the Hay-Herran treaty ratified by the Congress that met in Bogota there would have been no trouble whatever in securing such ratification.

In the correspondence between our Secretary of State and General Reyes, relating to the recognition of the Republic of Panama, Secretary Hay points out clearly the fact that the Government, after negotiating this treaty with the United States, made no effort whatever to have the treaty ratified, but on the contrary connived with the enemies of the treaty for the purpose of rejecting it and securing concessions that would give to Colombia a larger sum of money than was specified in the treaty itself.

In other words, Mr. President, these communications from our minister at Bogota and statements of our Secretary of State show clearly that Colombia was not acting in good faith with the United States in the negotiation of this treaty, and did not act in good faith in presenting it to the Congress at Bogota.

But, Mr. President, what conclusively shows that President Marroquin and those with whom he was associated that formed the Government at Bogota could have as easily ratified the Hay-Herran treaty as to have rejected it is the fact that after the declaration of independence on the part of the people of Panama, and before the United States had recognized the independence of Panama, the direct offer was made to this Government that if the United States would land troops to preserve Colombian sovereignty the Colombian Government would declare martial law, and by virtue of vested constitutional authority, when public order is disturbed, would approve by decree the ratification of the canal treaty as signed, or, if the United States would prefer, would call an extra session of Congress, with new and friendly members, to meet next May and approve the treaty.

Think of it for a moment! Like a plotting criminal, trying by every device known to force the Government of the United States to pay a larger sum of money to the Colombian Government than is provided for in the Hay-Herran treaty, after it became apparent that a successful revolution had been organized in Panama, this Government has the effrontery to make the dastardly offer to the Government of the United States that if we would assist in stifling the aspirations of liberty of the people of Panama and assist the Government in reestablishing its authority over that country everything that is asked for in the Hay-Herran treaty should be granted us.

That offer of itself was enough to destroy any confidence that the people of the civilized world might have in the Government at Bogota as it was administered at the time this treaty was rejected, and to show, not only to the United States, but to the other countries which have recognized the independence of Panama, that those who are in control of the affairs there are a set of freebooters, who have endeavored to sandbag the United States out of a few million dollars of money. After having been thwarted in that, they deliberately made to this Government a proposition as cowardly and dishonorable as an apprehended thief ever made to his jailer to secure an escape. No language, Mr. President, is strong enough to condemn the attitude of the Government at Bogota in its relations with all of the interests connected with the construction of the isthmian canal. Their treatment of France and the Panama Canal Company has been in keeping with their conduct and negotiations with the United States. As I have said, they conducted their negotiations upon a plan which in private life is that of the blackleg and swindler.

The Hay-Herran treaty was exceedingly favorable to the Colombian Government. The United States went beyond what it ought to have gone in the payment of money and in guaranteeing rights and privileges to the Colombian Government; and, like a person without character, the moment it secured the concessions named in the Hay-Herran treaty undertook by every species of duplicity to put our Government in a position where it would be compelled to grant further concessions. It was while this treaty was pending before the Congress at Bogota that the first mutterings of a rebellion in Panama were heard. That rebellion, Mr. President, did not spring up in a night, as has been insinuated by some Senators who have addressed themselves to this subject. The feeling of discontent among the people of Panama was well known to the officials at Bogota, and during the progress of the debate on the Hay-Herran treaty in that Congress it was stated by representatives from Panama that if the treaty were rejected Panama would rebel and declare her independence.

It was pointed out clearly, not only to the governing forces of that Government, but to the voting members of that Congress, that the future of Panama depended upon the ratification of the treaty and the construction of an isthmian canal across her territory. And leading representatives stated in open Congress that if the treaty were rejected Panama would secede from the Colombian Republic. Colombia was warned as early as August and September last that any juggling with the rights of Panama, in refusing to approve and adopt the Hay-Herran treaty, would result in open rebellion in that territory. This information was received by our Government through our minister and through other sources, as is shown by the message of the President, and through the public press of the time. Every well-informed man, not only in the United States, but throughout the civilized world, who was at all interested in the construction of an isthmian canal, knew that Panama would secede from the Colombian Government and set up a republic of her own if there was a failure on the part of the Colombian Government to confirm and ratify the treaty for the construction of a canal as provided for in the Hay-Herran treaty.

The action of our Government was in keeping with that information. Under the treaty of 1846 we were guaranteed a free transit across the Isthmus. The President well knew that if the threats of the leaders of the province of Panama were carried into execution, and the people, as I have already shown, were ripe to support any declaration of independence upon the part of their leaders, that Colon and Panama and the line of the railroad would be the first points of collision between the Colombian Government and the people of Panama. It was his duty as the representative of our Government to take every precaution to protect our rights under the treaty of 1846 and to preserve the lives and property of our citizens in those cities and on the line of the railroad. Instead of being subjected to criticism for the promptitude with which he sent our cruisers to Colon and other points, he is entitled to the greatest praise. To my mind, Mr. President, nothing that has occurred in his entire Administration reflects greater credit than the foresight that was exercised and the promptness with which he took the necessary means to protect American interests when Panama had in fact declared her independence.

Mr. President, when we come to the last analysis on this whole subject, the President is condemned for carrying out the wishes of the great majority of the people of the United States. He is denounced for promptly responding to an overwhelming American sentiment in protecting American interests on the Isthmus, in recognizing the new Republic which was established in Panama, and in promptly negotiating a treaty which, if ratified, has secured to the United States the construction of this great canal, which has been the dream of navigators for four hundred years, an enterprise that will be the crowning glory of the twentieth century.

Mr. President, Theodore Roosevelt needs no defense at my hands. His administration of the affairs of our great Republic has been such as not only to endear him to the people of all sections of our common country, but to stamp him as one of the greatest men of this generation. He is a typical American. His every aspiration is for the greatness and the glory of his country and the well-being of the people. Carping critics may jeer at him; calumniators may revile him; but, Mr. President, they can not destroy him. It is the fate of greatness to be reviled and denounced. Our President will survive all this, as other great men of the past have survived the calumnies and slanders that have been hurled at them during their lives.

President Lincoln has been frequently referred to in this debate by Democratic Senators as a model President and an observer of the law, and one who strictly adhered to his constitutional authority. The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], in the very able speech that he made here a few days ago, in comparing Lincoln and Seward with President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay, said:

It seems to me that the President and his Secretary might well be disturbed by the shades of Lincoln and Seward. They have reversed the honest and statesmanlike dealings of Lincoln and Seward with Colombia and have flown in the face of the recognized international law of the world to accomplish their ambitious ends.

What ambitious ends have our President and Secretary of State other than the good of our common country? The recognition of the Republic of Panama and the negotiation of the treaty known as the Hay-Varilla treaty are for the interests of our common country, not to enhance the power or dignity of either of these great men. There was a time, Mr. President, when Mr. Lincoln was thought to be as bad a man as the junior Senator from Colorado now seems to think President Roosevelt. There was a time during his life when he occupied that great office of President when Democratic Senators and Representatives denounced him as a usurper and as a violator of the Constitution, and indulged in language that makes the criticism of President Roosevelt of to-day seem tame indeed.

I have had occasion, since I have discovered that the Democrats of to-day are very much in love with the Administration of President Lincoln, to examine and see how the Democrats of a little over a generation ago, who were dealing with him as the present Democratic Senators are dealing with President Roosevelt, felt and acted and spoke concerning him. I desire, Mr. President, to call to the attention of the Senate a few of the choice expressions that were indulged in from time to time by leaders of the Democratic party of a generation ago toward Mr. Lincoln.

Daniel Voorhees, of Indiana, in the Thirty-seventh Congress, third session, said on February 18, 1863:

It would be a natural supposition of every intelligent mind that an argument to prove that there is a warrant in the Constitution for this state of affairs would be an insult to the genius of the Revolution in which our liberties were won, an outrage on the great dead of that period, and a mockery to the common sense of the world. * * * At every new aggression, at every additional outrage, new advocates rise up to defend that source of patronage, wealth, and fame—the Department of the Executive.

Technical and obscure rules, cunningly devised special pleas, and skillful and deceptive sophistry, all combine in the hands of the supporters of this Administration to tear away from the people the protection of the laws of their own making. Such assistance has always waited on the most malignant efforts of tyranny. Nero had his poet laureate, and Seneca wrote his defense for the murder of his mother. The present dark hour affords ample evidence that human nature is the same that it was two thousand years ago.

Again he said, in the Thirty-seventh Congress, third session, as shown upon page 1062 of the Globe:

But whether guilty or innocent, not one single provision of the Constitution has at any time or place been complied with in the treatment of citizens arrested by Government officials.

In violation of the Constitution American citizens have been arrested for using the freedom of speech.

In violation of the Constitution their houses have been forcibly entered.

In violation of the Constitution their papers have been searched.

In violation of the Constitution their persons have been seized with armed violence.

In violation of the Constitution they have been deprived of liberty without due process of law.

In violation of the Constitution they have been held to answer infamous accusations without presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

In violation of the Constitution they have been denied the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury.

In violation of the Constitution they have been carried out of the State and district in which their offenses, if any, were committed.

In violation of the Constitution they have been kept in ignorance of the nature and cause of the accusations against them.

In violation of the Constitution they have not been confronted with the witnesses against them.

And in most supreme and wicked violation of the Constitution they have been denied counsel for their defense. * * *

Sir, I challenge the worst ages of the most profligate and corrupt despots for a more intolerable picture than is here presented. In prisons, in dungeons, in cells, in solitude and desolation of heart, citizens of this free country are threatened with increased punishment if they resort to the only possible mode of approaching those in power to obtain information or trial with a view to liberty.

Many new offenses unknown to the Constitution and the laws have been created by the proclamation of the Executive, and to these it must be added that it is a crime for an innocent man, overpowered by unlawful force and wearing away his life in prison, to employ counsel to secure for him the benefit of the laws of the land. Sir, posterity will hold in remembrance the authors of these outrages—the President and his Cabinet—in order to execrate the prostitution which they have made of their high offices to the overthrow of the Constitution.

This language is lurid enough, I feel sure, if it were hurled at President Roosevelt, to satisfy the most extreme Democrat who professes to believe that he is violating our Constitution and is trampling upon international law.

During the Thirty-eighth Congress, first session (pt. 4 of the Globe, p. 68 of Appendix), Senator Powell, of Kentucky, said of Mr. Lincoln:

Sir, I would that this vacillating, dissembling, weak, and I fear wicked and corrupt, man in the White House had been infused with the wisdom, virtue, and patriotism that animated the soul and prompted the actions of the great Washington in our revolutionary struggle.

Senator Davis, of Kentucky, on January 5, 1864, offered resolutions containing the following:

The people of the loyal States are resolved into two great parties, the destructives and the conservatives. The first consists of Abraham Lincoln, his officeholders, contractors, and other followers; the second, of all men who are for ejecting Lincoln and his party from office and power.

Senator Davis, of Kentucky, on January 13, 1864 (Globe, p. 179, 1st sess. 38th Cong.), referred to President Lincoln as a "sovereign at the other end of the Avenue."

Mr. Ancona, House of Representatives, February 28, 1863 (37th Cong., 3d sess., p. 162, appendix to Globe):

It is useless to dwell upon the past folly, blunders, corruptions, and maladministrations of the Government, with the war perverted now to an utterly impracticable and hopeless purpose—the emancipation of that inferior race, the negro, destined by nature and its irreversible laws to be subservient to its superior, the white.

And Senator Breckinridge, of Kentucky, in the Thirty-seventh Congress, first session, page 138 of the Globe, said of Mr. Lincoln:

But it may be well, Mr. President, to inquire has the President of the United States assumed powers not delegated by the Constitution or the laws? I speak not now, sir, of the many acts of the President not enumerated in this resolution. * * * I think the acts here enumerated were usurpations on the part of the Executive of the United States, and that, so far from a resolution being passed ratifying and approving them, I think the Chief Magistrate of the country should be rebuked by the vote of both Houses of Congress.

Of late years our Democratic friends refer to General Grant not only as one of the most distinguished military generals of this age, but speak of his Administration in eulogistic manner and bemoan the decadence which has come over the Republican party since the days when he was President and over the Republican leaders who control the affairs of our party. To show to you, Mr. President, that these statements differ from what the Democrats of a generation ago said of President Grant, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate what Representative Bowen, of Virginia, said in the Forty-third Congress, in the second session (p. 35, Appendix to RECORD):

False to his former action and unmindful of the fact that, by the connivance of Federal power, the existing government in the State of Arkansas was called into being, the President of the United States, assuming the power of an autocrat and confessing that he winked at fraud in recognizing the Baxter government, turns now upon his offspring, like Saturn upon his children, to destroy it.

Also, to what Representative Leach, of North Carolina, said, as shown on page 192, Appendix to RECORD, Forty-third Congress, second session:

This warning is not prematurely given nor the alarm too soon sounded, because civil liberty and the sacred right of self-government have been destroyed in Louisiana by the nation's Executive through his military satraps; aye, twice has the civil government of that grievously oppressed State been stricken down by the despotic will of one man.

Also, to the speech of Senator Stevenson, of Kentucky, in the Forty-third Congress, second session, as shown on page 134, Appendix to RECORD:

Thus usurpation triumphs. What a lesson! What a result! What a sad page in the history of a free Republic! When before did an American President use the Army of the United States to uphold the subversion of a State government?

It must be apparent, Mr. President, I think to all of us, that with our Democratic brothers only dead Republicans are good Republicans. During the life of Mr. Lincoln no man was more reviled by Democratic members, both North and South, than he. In comparison with the language used during the Presidency of Mr. Lincoln and General Grant the criticisms that have thus far been indulged in against President Roosevelt seem like a gentle zephyr compared with a Kansas cyclone.

But for the purpose of placing the Republican party in a false light, and for the purpose of dwarfing the influence of President Roosevelt before the American people, these Republicans, who were traduced by the Democrats of a generation ago, are taken up as models, their virtues exploited, their great acts referred to in complimentary language, and their names placed high on the list of the honored statesmen of this country.

A generation from now, Mr. President, will find President Roosevelt placed in this great galaxy of Republican Presidents and statesmen, and the Democratic statesmen of the days in the future will refer to him in the same complimentary terms that are now used when any of our good friends on the opposite side of the Chamber refer to the "Great Emancipator" or the "Silent Soldier."

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to prolong the discussion by reference to the many collateral questions that could be urged in defense of the attitude of our Government both toward Colombia and the new Republic of Panama.

I am for this treaty because I believe that it is in the interest of civilization that in negotiating it no part of international law has been violated and none of our constitutional rights ignored. And I believe still further, Mr. President, that when the candid historian comes to write of this period he will place this act of President Roosevelt as one of the crowning glories of his Administration.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I shall not contend that, under the general rules of international law regulating the conduct of nations in dealing with each other, we can justify our treatment of Colombia. Applying the general rules of international law to our conduct in recognizing the independence of Panama, we acted with undue haste, and, evidently, with a view of taking advantage of the revolution of Panama against Colombia to advance our commercial interests. If we had not desired the land on which we wished to construct an isthmian canal, we would not have recognized the independence of Panama. Under the general rules of international law, regulating the conduct of nations, so long as a sovereign has a reasonable hope of maintaining his authority over his insurgents, the acknowledgment of the independence of such insurgents would clearly be an international wrong.

It can not be denied—it can not be successfully disputed—that the acknowledgment of the independence of a new nation, when such a nation has forcibly separated itself from another of which it had formed an integral part, is an act of great delicacy and responsibility. It has been the policy of our fathers to avoid all interference in disputes which relate to the internal government of other nations. The general rule of international law would require that we should wait until the new nation had achieved its independence and is fully capable of maintaining that independence. Clearly, no government asserting independence and sovereignty ought to be recognized by the United States until independence has actually been accomplished.

The new nation must have in operation a civil government capable of performing the duties and fulfilling the obligations of an independent power, and that government must have the approval of a majority of the people subject to its regulations. The nation so recognized should not only have accomplished its independence, but the new nation must have the power in itself to maintain its independence before the world, and against all opposition, and discharge the duties of nationality. Applying these rules, I admit, I freely confess, that we can not justify our conduct in recognizing the independence of Panama on the third day after the revolution began.

The revolution began on the 3d of November, and we recognized the independence of Panama on the 6th of November, before independence had been accomplished, before any government had been organized, and in all probability before the Colombian Government knew the revolution had taken place. Stopping here, I would feel it my duty to vote against the ratification of a treaty with Panama. There are, however, special facts and circumstances connected with this transaction that will take it out of the general rules of international law, and to some extent justify our conduct in dealing with both Colombia and Panama. This case must be tried by every fact and circumstance connected with it; and the history of our relations heretofore with Colombia, together with her conduct and treatment of our Government, must be thoroughly understood in order to reach a just and righteous conclusion as to the merits of the controversy between Colombia and our Government. I propose to consider this controversy from three different standpoints.

First, our treaty rights with Colombia; second, Colombia's conduct in rejecting the Hay-Herran treaty; third, the importance, not only to our commerce, but to the commerce of the world, necessarily involved in the construction of an isthmian canal. These propositions I will consider in their order, and each proposition will demonstrate to thoughtful men that our Government was not bound by the general rules of international law in recognizing the independence of Panama. In 1846 our Government entered into a solemn treaty with New Granada; Colombia succeeded to the New Granadian Government, and that treaty sets forth fully the duties and obligations we owed to Colombia, as well as the duties and obligations Colombia undertook to discharge to us.

The treaty is lengthy, but only the thirty-fifth article of that treaty deals with the issue now before the Senate. It is necessary to understand that feature of the treaty in order to present the rights and privileges due to our Government from Colombia. That article provides that the citizens, vessels, and merchandise of the United States shall enjoy in the ports of Colombia all the exemptions, privileges, and immunities concerning commerce and navigation which are now, or may hereafter be, enjoyed by Colombian citizens, their vessels, and merchandise; and that this equality of favor shall be made to extend to the passengers, correspondents, and merchandise of the United States in their transit across the said territory, from one sea to the other. This feature of the treaty was intended to place our citizens on an equal footing with the citizens of Colombia in transporting passengers and merchandise across the Isthmus.

This treaty went still further, and Colombia guaranteed to the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama, upon any modes of communication that may now exist or that may be hereafter constructed, shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States, and for the transportation of any article of produce, manufactures, or merchandise of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States. This feature of the treaty went still further and provided that the citizens of the United States shall not be liable to any import duties whatever in transporting their merchandise from sea to sea.

Colombia also guaranteed in this treaty that the transit across the Isthmus leading from Panama to Colon should always be kept open; that at no time should the passage leading from one ocean to the other be stopped by war or any other means. Colombia clearly guaranteed to us that for all the world the route leading across the Isthmus from ocean to ocean should never be obstructed in any way whatever. She recognized, and so did we, that the civilized world was deeply and vitally interested in keeping this passage open for travel, and the treaty clearly contemplated that, so long as it lasted, Colombia should neither obstruct this passage by insurrection, revolution, civil or foreign wars.

In return for the benefits which we were to receive by virtue of this treaty, our Government guaranteed positively and efficaciously to Colombia the perfect neutrality of the entire Isthmus, and the neutrality was guaranteed on our part with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while this treaty exists; and in consequence, the United States guaranteed the rights of sovereignty and property which Colombia has and possesses over said territory. This treaty clearly contemplated that some time in the future a canal would be built across the Isthmus, connecting the two oceans, and, in the event such a canal was constructed, it was to be kept open and not in any way to be obstructed.

What does the treaty mean? How is it to be construed? What is a reasonable construction? Colombia entered into a solemn obligation to keep the transit free and unobstructed. Nothing would excuse Colombia from violating this feature of the treaty. If she failed to do so, clearly we would have the right to go there and force Colombia to perform her part of this contract.

Now, inasmuch as Colombia obligated herself by a solemn treaty, can she in any way obstruct, hinder, embarrass, or delay the passage across the Isthmus? To state the case more plainly: If Panama seceded and resolved to separate from the mother country, and organized an independent government, and Colombia resolved at the same time to subdue the revolution and to force Panama to return to the Colombian Government and submit to its sovereignty, what would this mean? Colombia would at once enter into war with Panama, Panama would resist, and then the Isthmus would become the theater of war.

If such civil war interfered with travel and commerce across the Isthmus, under our treaty, in my judgment, we would have the undoubted right to say to Colombia: You dedicated this Isthmus to peace, you are under a solemn promise to keep open and free to transit the route across the Isthmus leading from ocean to ocean, and you shall not violate that solemn treaty. It was clearly contemplated by the terms of the treaty that passage across the Isthmus should not be obstructed by any means whatever.

It was intended, so long as this treaty lasted, that this transit should always be free and open, and that no war, either foreign or domestic, should ever at any time interfere with such transit. We would have no right, however, to interfere with the internal quarrels existing between Colombia and Panama, unless such quarrels were likely to interfere with travel and commerce from ocean to ocean across the Isthmus.

If we sent our war ships there simply to keep the transit open and protect the lives and property of American citizens in the event of a revolution, then we did not violate the treaty of 1846. If we sent our warships there to encourage a revolution, to aid in bringing about a revolution, with the hope of establishing an independent government for Panama, to give to us a commercial advantage, then our conduct is inexcusable and indefensible. In this treaty we guaranteed the neutrality of the Isthmus, as well as the rights of sovereignty and property which Colombia has and possesses over said territory.

This feature of the treaty has been construed by able lawyers to mean that by guaranteeing the sovereignty of Colombia we undertook to defend her territory against civil war, and that when Panama seceded it was our duty to help Colombia put down the revolution. I do not believe that this is the proper construction to be placed on the treaty. When we guaranteed the sovereignty of Colombia over her territory, we undertook to prevent any foreign power from in any way interfering with her sovereignty or depriving her of any portion of her territory.

If Germany, France, England, or any other foreign power had made war on Colombia so as to interfere with her territory or sovereignty, then it would become our duty to defend the sovereignty of Colombia against foreign aggression. I do not believe this treaty obligated us to defend Colombia against internal quarrels or civil war among her own people. Under the treaty we would have no right to interfere in any way with civil war carried on in Colombia, except such civil war interfered with transit across the Isthmus of Darien. When Panama and Colombia engaged in war it was our duty to keep hands off, unless such civil war was likely in some way to interfere with travel and commerce going from one ocean to the other.

I repeat, if the President sent our warships to Colon and Panama for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American citizens and keeping open the transit across the Isthmus, and for no other purpose, then our Government was justifiable in what we did. If, on the contrary, we sent them there to encourage a revolution, which had in fact never begun, with the hope that our presence would bring about a revolution resulting in the independence of Panama, then our conduct is most reprehensible and without excuse. We would not be justified in preventing Colombia from making war on Panama unless such war would likely interfere with travel along the line of the railroad leading from Colon to Panama. We guaranteed the neutrality of the entire Isthmus. It has been contended by some that the Isthmus was never to become the theater of war, either foreign or civil. I fear this is a strained construction.

If this be the proper construction, then we guaranteed the neutrality of the entire Isthmus, and it would be our duty to prevent either civil or foreign wars from taking place on any part of the Isthmus. Under such constructions, Colombia surrendered the right to defend her own sovereignty and territory so far as the Isthmus of Panama is concerned. Such construction would dedicate the entire Isthmus to peace, absolutely depriving Colombia of the right to suppress insurrection in Panama. I can hardly think that any such purpose was intended when the treaty was made. I do not believe Colombia surrendered the right to defend her own sovereignty. I do believe when Colombia obligated herself to us to keep this transit open, so that all the world might cross the Isthmus, then she undertook to conduct her affairs in such a way as not to at any time in the future obstruct this passage, leading from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Now, Colombia was to keep this transit free, open, and unobstructed.

We would have no right to use our Army and Navy to keep it open, unless Colombia failed to do so. When she failed to carry out this obligation, then having broken her treaty obligations, we could resort to war if necessary to enforce our treaty rights. I believe this to be a correct construction on the treaty of 1846. I have announced before that if the evidence was conclusive that our Government was in complicity with the revolutionary movement in Panama, then I could not vote for the ratification of this treaty. This would be such a wrong as we could not condone—it would not be an error of judgment, but an unconscionable act.

If anyone connected with this Government had any part in originating, inciting, or encouraging the revolution in Panama, then such action on our part would be dishonorable and should be repudiated by Congress. We would be guilty of a moral wrong. We should reap no benefits from such a disreputable transaction. The presumption is in favor of the integrity of our Government, and every doubt should be resolved in favor of our honesty. In the absence of positive and indisputable proof to the contrary, we must accept as true the statement from the executive branch of the Government.

The President in his second message tells us that no one connected with this Government had any previous knowledge of the revolution except such as was accessible to any person of ordinary intelligence who read the newspapers and kept up a current acquaintance with public affairs. He says that by unanimous action of its people, without the firing of a shot, the people of Panama declared themselves an independent republic. When I read the correspondence between the Department of State, the Department of the Navy, and the United States consul-general at Panama, and the cablegrams sent to those in charge of our warships, I was dissatisfied with the action of our Government, and this correspondence unexplained left the action of our Government in an unfavorable light, clearly indicating that we had anticipated, aided, and encouraged the revolution in Panama. Why do I say so?

This revolution never occurred until the night of November 3, 1903, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon before it occurred the State Department wired to Colon: "Uprising on Isthmus reported. Keep Department promptly and fully informed." Signed, "Loomis, acting." Our consul promptly cabled back that no uprising had then occurred. Reported will be in the night. He afterwards cabled that the uprising occurred at 6 o'clock that night.

On the same day the State Department cabled to our war ship Nashville, "In the interest of peace, make every effort to prevent government troops from proceeding to Panama. The transit on the Isthmus must be kept open and order maintained." Signed "Loomis, Acting." I am sure that we had no right to prevent the government troops of Colombia from passing from Colon to Panama unless such troops were about to engage in a war that would endanger the lives and property of American citizens or in some way obstruct transit across the Isthmus.

If the Colombian troops went to Panama on a peaceful mission, or to keep open the passage across the Isthmus, or even to suppress a rebellion there, provided such troops did not interfere with the passage across the Isthmus, then we had no right to interfere with them. On November 2, 1903, the Navy Department cabled the Nashville, "Maintain free and uninterrupted transit. If interruption threatened by armed force, occupy the line of railroad. Prevent landing of any armed force with hostile intent, either government or insurgent, either at Colon, Porto Bello, or other points. Government force reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels. Prevent their landing, if this in your judgment would precipitate a conflict."

About the same time, we notified those in charge of our war ships to make every effort to keep the Colombian troops from proceeding from Colon to Panama. The Navy Department sent numerous cablegrams before the revolution occurred to those in charge of our war ships to proceed to Panama and Colon for the purpose of preventing Colombian troops from proceeding from Colon to Panama, instructing those in charge of our war ships to keep the transit of the Isthmus open. These cablegrams were sent on November 2, before the revolution occurred, and before it had been heard of in Panama and Colombia.

This correspondence naturally leads me to the conclusion that my own country had sought to bring about the revolution, and had sent one of our war ships there to encourage it and aid it in every possible way. Since I have entered public life I have been a most earnest and consistent advocate of an isthmian canal. But I have always desired that this great waterway should be built with clean hands and without offending any of the South or Central American republics. History teaches us that friendly international relations are a valuable asset for any country. We certainly ought to have the friendship of the countries where this canal is to be located.

I have not been willing to countenance any mode of dishonesty that might have been practiced to secure the construction of this great waterway. Stopping with this correspondence furnished by the State Department unexplained, I should have voted against the treaty. The President in his second message tells us that our Government had been informed that this revolution would take place in the event that Colombia rejected the Hay-Herran treaty.

Panama had given out that she would secede in the event that the treaty was rejected. He further tells us that Panama had formerly been an independent State and that he had every assurance that a revolution would occur; that every one knew that it was a possibility, but that it was not until toward the end of October, 1903, that it appeared to be a probability. He explains why our war ships were sent to Panama before the revolution occurred. It was to protect American citizens and to keep open the transit in the event of a revolution. He explained that he apprehended a revolution would occur, and that out of an abundance of caution he sent the war ships to keep open the transit.

I repeat, if the President had reason to fear that a revolution would follow the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty, that Panama would secede, and that Colombia would send troops to put down the revolution, and that this war between Panama and Colombia would endanger the property and lives of American citizens, and embarrass or block the transit from sea to sea, then he would be justified in sending our war ships, both to protect the lives and property of American citizens and to keep open the transit across the Isthmus.

When our war ships arrived at Panama and Colon we had no right to interfere with a quarrel between Panama and Colombia, unless it was apparent that such interference was necessary to protect the lives and property of American citizens, or to keep open the transit across the Isthmus, in accordance with the terms of the treaty of 1846. I recognize that the situation in Panama, by virtue of the treaty of 1846, was different from any other place on the earth. We had a solemn and binding contract with Colombia to keep the transit open across the Isthmus; we know that Colombia had often called upon our Government to aid her in keeping this path open from sea to sea.

When our war ships landed troops at Colon they had a right to prevent the armed forces of Colombia from obstructing the open free course of commerce in the pathway across the Isthmus. We could only do so when Colombia failed to keep it open or was proceeding to block it by civil war. Our right to interfere in the domestic quarrels of Colombia was limited to protecting the lives and property of American citizens and to keeping open the transit across the Isthmus.

The treaty would not give us the right to interfere with Colombian troops landed on the Isthmus unless these troops threatened the lives and property of American citizens or in some way attempted to interfere with transit across the Isthmus.

I refer to these facts to give my view of the treaty of 1846. It is not necessary for me to express myself as to whether or not we went beyond the power granted to us by the treaty of 1846, as I shall cast my vote in favor of the ratification of the treaty upon other grounds much more satisfactory to me than I could possibly reach on this theory of the issue. On this theory of the case, separated from other points in the controversy, I hardly think I could vote for the treaty.

It is essential that we understand, not only the treaty of 1846, but also the status of the Colombian Government for the last half dozen years and even longer, and the motives that prompted Colombia in rejecting the Hay-Herran treaty, which was intended to give us the right of way for the construction of the Panama Canal, in order to understand why our Government recognized the independence of Panama in violation of the general rules of international law.

I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the speech of the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama delivered during the last session of Congress against the ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty, contending that Colombia was in a state of civil war, and that she had no responsible constitutional government capable of discharging the functions of government, and that she was without legal and constitutional authority to negotiate a valid treaty with us for the right of way on which to construct this canal. He contended that revolution was the normal condition of Colombia, and history teaches us that his statements were absolutely correct.

In order to secure the right of way by way of the Panama route, on which to construct this canal, we have been forced to deal with such governments as we found in possession of the country where the canal was to be located. We know that internecine strife has been raging in the Republic of Colombia for a number of years. The study of Colombia shows the existence of two distinct and hostile tendencies at war since the early days of national independence. These two parties have been styled the Liberal and Conservative parties. The difference separating these two parties are so great that the transition of power from one to the other necessitates resort to violence.

The constitution of 1886 abolishes the federal form of government and centralizes all power in the President; he can suspend the constitution, and the property and the liberty of the citizens are at his mercy; he has absolute, unlimited power. The Liberals have contended most zealously against these wrongs, and, being unable to redress them, took up arms as the only means of redress. It was a struggle of life and death, as has well been said, between reaction and modern progress. Well did the senior Senator from Alabama say that revolution was the normal condition in Colombia. Well did he say that we would have to treat with an irresponsible government to procure the necessary territory on which to construct this great waterway.

So far as regularity and constitutionality is concerned, the new government in Panama will compare favorably with the existing government in Colombia. Then, again, when the Hay-Herran treaty was submitted to Colombia for ratification it was understood that the terms of the treaty were satisfactory to Colombia. It was proclaimed on the floor of the Senate and through the public press that Colombia secured every consideration she wanted in this treaty. We gave her the enormous sum of $10,000,000, when we could have secured the right of way from Costa Rica and Nicaragua for a much less sum. We had responded most liberally to the pecuniary demands of Colombia. It was certainly greatly to the commercial and financial interest of her people to put in operation this waterway.

We know that the canal was demanded by the unanimous voice of the people of Panama, where it was to be located. Undoubtedly Colombia rejected this treaty because she thought she saw a chance to force us to pay to her an exorbitant and unreasonable sum of money for the right of way through her territory on which to locate the canal. She reached the conclusion that we were forced to have this right of way, and that she would extort from us wrongfully ten more millions to fill her coffers. I do not contend that this would authorize us to take by force any part of her territory on which to build a canal, but it might be a reason why we should take advantage of a situation arising unexpectedly and acknowledge the independence of a people who would own the territory we so much desired and necessary to be used for the commerce of the world.

I have always contended that there was nothing of greater importance than the construction of an interoceanic canal. Such a canal is not only essential to our commercial development, but of great importance to our national defense. The establishment of speedy communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans should be delayed no longer. The party in power could have provided for the construction of such a waterway long ago. The failure to do so can in no wise be charged to our side of the chamber. We have always contended that the United States should construct this waterway at the earliest possible day. The civilized world is deeply and vitally interested in the success of this enterprise.

During the session of the Fifty-sixth Congress I set forth with particularity the benefits that would accrue by reason of the construction of the canal. I repeat them as applicable to this occasion. I said:

We know that London at the present time is the commercial center of the world. Later on I propose to take the figures and facts given us by the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama and demonstrate why this is true. I shall show that by the construction of this canal the advantages which London now enjoys in the distances from that great metropolis to the leading commercial ports of the world will be transferred to the United States. Before, however, I attempt to do so I desire to present to the Senate the advantages which we will enjoy at home in trading with our own people by the construction of this great waterway.

We know now that in order to reach New York from San Francisco by water we must travel 14,840 miles, and that so soon as this canal is constructed and put in operation the distance will be reduced to 4,907 miles, a clear saving of 9,933 miles. The distance from New York to Hongkong, by Cape Horn, is 18,180 miles; cut the canal and the distance is reduced to 10,983 miles, a clear saving each trip of 7,197 miles. We have acquired and now own the Hawaiian Islands, out in the middle of the ocean. The distance from New York to these islands by the present water route is 14,230 miles; cut the canal and the distance is reduced to 6,417 miles, a saving of 7,813 miles.

The distance from New Orleans by water to San Francisco, by way of Cape Horn, is 13,776 miles; when this waterway is constructed, connecting the two oceans, the distance is reduced to 4,107 miles, a saving of 9,669 miles. The distance from Mobile, Ala., to San Francisco is 13,763 miles; cut this canal and the distance is reduced to 4,120 miles, a saving of 9,643 miles. The distance from Savannah, in my own State, to San Francisco, is 13,289 miles; dig this canal and the distance is reduced to 4,366 miles, a saving of 8,923 miles. The distance from Galveston, Tex., to San Francisco is 13,892 miles; cut the canal and this distance is reduced to 4,230 miles, a clear saving of 9,662 miles.

The distance from Charleston to San Francisco is 13,269 miles; cut the canal and the distance is only 4,389 miles, a clear saving of 8,871 miles. Trace if you will the route which a ship must follow to pass from our Atlantic and Gulf seaports to any one of the harbors on the Pacific within the boundary of the United States. We can scarcely realize the enormous distance which a ship must travel to make a journey, leaving San Francisco, on the Pacific, to reach Boston or New York, on the Atlantic. We must travel along the coast of Central and South America, around Cape Horn, then sail back by the coast of Central America. Before we will have reached New York we will have traveled a distance of nearly 15,000 miles; when, as I have said before, if this waterway had been made, connecting the two oceans in Central America, the same trip could have been made by traveling less than 5,000 miles. It is only necessary to observe this new route between our Atlantic and Gulf ports and those upon our western shores, the route by Central America, to fully realize the advantages to accrue to our country by the construction of this waterway joining the two oceans in Central America.

How we can any longer afford to permit a gap to exist between our eastern and western coasts that is 13,000 miles in length I can not understand, and how our Republican friends on the other side of the Chamber can any longer postpone action on this important legislation, so necessary to the building up of the commerce of our country, I do not believe they can explain or justify. How they can any longer permit our Pacific States to pay one-half of the value of their wheat and lumber exported to Europe in cost of transportation I do not understand.

Who will justify the Republican party in longer postponing this great enterprise, which, as has often been said, will bring into the utmost possible near communication the eastern and western shores of North America, and in like manner into the utmost possible short communication the eastern and western shores of South America, and which will bring the western shores of South America into direct communication with the eastern shore of North America, and the eastern shores of South America into direct communication with the western shores of North America, thus making that passage of the Isthmus the key and common gateway of communication between the republics that now substantially occupy the whole habitable parts of North and South America?

A canal which, when built and completed, will furnish for ages ample waterway convenience and security for the fleets of all nations that may pass through it from ocean to ocean.

First, let us consider the benefit to accrue to the American people by putting our eastern and western coasts in direct communication with each other by the shortest practical route. Let us endeavor to give to our merchants and our farmers cheap transportation by water; then an immediate benefit will accrue to them in finding a market for our goods and wares. Let us put our Pacific coast in touch with European markets by the shortest and most practicable routes. Let us use every reasonable and just means to cheapen the cost of transportation of farm products and manufactured goods to the markets of the world. Let us give to the continental lines of railroads competition in carrying freights; then you reach the farmer, merchant, and manufacturer and benefit the American people.

It is an undisputed fact that so soon as this waterway is completed the entire Pacific coast trade will be put in direct connection with European markets by the cheapest possible transportation. Later on in my argument I will present to the Senate the benefits which will accrue to the Southern States by reason of the construction of this canal. The South is rapidly developing and will become at no distant day a great manufacturing section. The South, instead of manufacturing 20 per cent of the cotton crop, I predict will in the near future manufacture 75 per cent of the crop, and we expect to ship these goods to the markets of the world. We want cheap transportation by the most direct and shortest route to enable us to meet competition. The people of the South do not want the Government to give them anything. All we want is to be able to compete with other sections, and then we will work out our industrial problems.

A distinguished Senator said to me a few days ago that it had always been a mystery to him why Great Britain, a little island containing less than 90,000 square miles of territory, should control the markets of the world; that it was a mystery to him why Liverpool was the commercial center of the world, controlling and manipulating the sale and manufacture of cotton. But the distinguished Senator said that he had at last been able to solve the problem, and he has solved it well. In a report which Senator MORGAN, as chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, presented to the Senate on January 3, 1901, report No. 1357, part No. 6, he presents facts which are startling to me and which deserve consideration at the hands of the statesmen of the country endeavoring to shape and mold the policy of the nation.

It is a fact which can not be disputed, and which any intelligent man knows to be true, that in developing commerce the cost of transportation is a very important element. If one city or nation has a shorter route and consequently a cheaper one to convey freight than another, the city or nation at a disadvantage can never compete with their rivals enjoying a superior advantage. This fact solves the problem why England to-day enjoys commercial supremacy over any nation in the world—a supremacy which some day will be transferred to the United States. If wise and thoughtful statesmanship shall direct the policy of this nation, that supremacy, at no distant day in the future, will be ours. The distinguished Senator and the committee of which he is chairman tell us that all the seacoasts of the world, except about one-tenth part of their length, are nearer to Liverpool than they are to New York by the usual route of sea travel.

This committee tells us the length of sea voyages from New York and from Liverpool to all the points of importance, based on the charts of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department. In making these calculations, they take 18 of the leading seaports of the world. They then give the distance from Liverpool to these different seaports; also the distances from New York to these important points, showing a great advantage in favor of Liverpool. I do not know when I have found a subject of more importance and discussed in a more intelligent way than is presented by this committee. The 18 ports of the world which they have selected are as follows:

Yokohama, Tientsin, Kinchoo, Shanghai, Hongkong, Bombay, Calcutta, Singapore, Colombo, Manila, Melbourne, Auckland, San Francisco, Panama, Honolulu, Valparaiso, and Cape Town. We all know that these eighteen important ports had an enormous business and trade with Liverpool and New York, and that commercial points situated between them furnish a very important commerce to both places. The common mind will readily grasp the proposition that if vessels, in passing from Liverpool to each of these ports through the Suez Canal, travel a shorter distance than vessels sailing from New York to the same points, then freight can be conveyed cheaper to these points from Great Britain than from the United States.

Say, for instance, that eighteen vessels were to leave Liverpool on to-morrow morning, loaded with the products of Great Britain, one vessel going to each of these ports; and, at the same time, eighteen vessels were to leave New York, with American products, going to the same ports. Now, if the route from Liverpool was shorter and cheaper than the route from New York to the same places, evidently the United States could not compete with Great Britain in conveying goods to foreign markets. The distinguished Senator from Alabama tells us that eighteen vessels passing from Liverpool to each of these ports above named, through the Suez Canal, would sail 110,329 miles; that these same vessels, sailing from New York to the same ports, would cover a distance of 130,168 miles. This would be a difference in favor of Liverpool of 19,839 miles. The distinguished Senator also tells us that if the same ships made the voyage to the same ports by the way of the Cape of Good Hope the distance from Liverpool would be 135,000 miles, and the distance from New York would be 136,647 miles.

On page 7 of this report I find a most interesting and instructive table, which, to my mind, solves the reason why Great Britain has made such wonderful strides in controlling and directing the commerce of the world. I have just pointed out the fact that the distance from Liverpool to these eighteen ports of the world, by existing routes, is shorter by nearly 20,000 miles than from New York to the same ports. Now, what will be the result in the event of the construction of the Nicaraguan Canal? Take the facts and figures of the distinguished Senator from Alabama. This new route will reverse the entire situation in favor of the United States by 32,051 miles. The Senator from Alabama tells us that when this canal is constructed the distance from Liverpool to Honolulu will be by the Nicaraguan route 9,165 miles, and that the distance from New York to the same point, by the same route, will be 11,507 miles.

The distinguished Senator tells us that the distance from Liverpool to Manila by the Nicaraguan route will be 14,008 miles, and from New York to the same point will be 11,260 miles. The Senator tells us that the cutting of the canal will throw the advantage of shorter lines of travel in favor of New York, that now exists in favor of Liverpool, by at least 21 per cent. I desire to insert, as a part of my remarks, the table prepared by the distinguished Senator, which I regard of supreme importance, which table is as follows:

Distance from Liverpool via Nicaraguan Canal to—

	Miles.
Honolulu	9,165
Manila	14,008
San Francisco	13,685
Shanghai	13,685
Calcutta	17,197
Melbourne	12,753
Auckland	11,423
Hongkong	13,731
Yokohama	12,611
Kinchoo	14,255
Valparaiso	7,995
Tientsin	14,349
Singapore	15,171
Total distance	163,948

Now, to show the comparison, we will take the same table furnished by the same Senator, giving the distances from New York via the Nicaraguan Canal route to—

	Miles.
Manila	11,260
San Francisco	4,907
Shanghai	10,937
Calcutta	14,449
Melbourne	10,005
Auckland	8,695
Hongkong	10,983
Yokohama	9,863
Valparaiso	5,187
Honolulu	6,417
Kinchoo	11,507
Singapore	12,423
Tientsin	11,601
Total distance	128,224

These figures show a difference of 21 per cent in favor of New York by the Nicaraguan Canal route, while the difference against New York in favor of Liverpool, by the present route, to the several ports mentioned was largely in favor of Liverpool.

These distances, by the Suez Canal, in favor of Liverpool, have undoubtedly operated seriously to the disadvantage of American commerce; and so long as these distances continue to favor the commerce of Great Britain we can not expect American commerce to receive its share of the world's trade, and there can be no justification for failure or delay on the part of the Republican party in removing the barrier which inflicts these burdens and disadvantages on our commerce. The distinguished Senator from Alabama, in the very able report prepared by him and now printed as a Senate document, tells us with great force that if that isthmian barrier is to remain we can never have ships of sufficient number or speed to overcome the average length of more than 4,000 miles in favor of Liverpool on each voyage to and from our Atlantic and Pacific ports.

He truthfully tells us that no legislative expedient can save New York from the competition of Liverpool with a shorter line of navigation to the same ports to which New York must trade. His logic is sound and his argument, I trust, may have sufficient force to arouse the conscience of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, and to lead them to see the interests of the American people, and to advance and protect American interests. Is it possible that our friends will longer neglect this important work and suffer this little strip of land to separate the two great oceans and continue to inflict irreparable loss on American trade?

New York is a great distributing point, where American products, both of the farm and factory, are shipped to all parts of the world. They go from the south, east, north, and west to all ports of the world, and when these ports can be reached from New York by the shortest practicable routes cheap transportation will follow, resulting in greatly benefiting the American people. It is astonishing to me how any political party conversant with the situation can longer wait for the construction and completion of this great waterway.

Well did the Committee on Interoceanic Canals tell us that the Nicaraguan Canal is an indispensable factor in American commerce, because it will shorten the route of our travel, and is the only possible way to meet the advantages that have fallen to Liverpool by her geographical situation. When I study the geography of the world, and remember that at the point where this canal is to be constructed for the passage of ships between the two oceans the strip of land that separates the two oceans is so small, and the canal can be cut through it with so little expense to the Government, taking into consideration its importance to commerce, I am astonished that the American people have submitted to delay so long in demanding legislative action providing for its construction.

These arguments would not justify our Government in taking by force, or wrongfully, the territory of Colombia for canal purposes; but they are powerful reasons why our Government should have acted promptly in recognizing the independence of Panama, in order to secure from her the necessary territory for canal purposes. The President says in his second message: "In view of the manifold considerations of treaty rights and obligations, of national interests and safety, and of collective civilization by which our Government was constrained to act, the recognition of the Republic of Panama is not based upon any general principle of international law regulating the principle of revolution by which a given government is overturned, or one portion of a country separated from another."

I think it is true that there is no fixed rule which can be applied, but that each case must be judged on its own merits. It is not our mission to inquire as to whether or not Panama was justified in separating from Colombia under existing conditions. We only had to inquire had such steps taken place, and was she capable of sustaining a government of her own? If I remember correctly, France acknowledged our independence before we had any government; she not only acknowledged our independence, but sent her soldiers to fight our battles, and to assist us in establishing that independence. I do not complain that, under the circumstanecs, we acknowledged the independence hastily. My opposition heretofore had been based upon the fact that the circumstances associated my own country with the revolution, aiding, encouraging, and sustaining it; going further to sustain it than the terms of our treaty would authorize. Such conduct would be dishonorable and morally wrong. That branch of the argument, however, I have dismissed.

I come now to the reasons that have led me, after much thought, to vote in favor of the ratification of the treaty. We all agree that the terms of the treaty for the construction of the canal are more satisfactory to us than any treaty negotiated heretofore. My objection has always been to our actions previous to the negotiation of the treaty. When Colombia rejected the Hay-Herran treaty I have always believed it was the duty of the President to proceed at once and negotiate with Costa Rica and Nicaragua for the necessary land for the construction of a canal.

I have maintained that, so far as Colombia was concerned, when she rejected our treaty we should cease to treat with her for the construction of this waterway, but, under the provisions of the Spooner act, we should proceed at once to secure the necessary territory and construct the canal by the Nicaragua route. The President has not adopted this theory—the party in power agrees with him—and I am determined, so far as I am concerned, that the Republican party shall have no excuse for the failure of this great enterprise. If I can not have it located at one place, I'll have it at another, provided we do not get it by dishonest methods.

Regardless of how the independence of Panama was accomplished, beyond dispute Panama is lost to Colombia—the Rubicon has been crossed, and no one expects Panama to be restored to Colombia—the ratification or rejection of this treaty can in no way change the status of Panama in relation to Colombia; whether rightfully or wrongfully, Panama is forever lost to Colombia. Should we reject this treaty, the Republic of Panama will still exist, and, in all probability, we will be called upon to negotiate a treaty with her in the future for the right to construct this canal. Suppose Panama should continue as a republic for a quarter of a century, or even for a less time, will any one contend that we should not carry on business and governmental relations with her in the future, simply because we questioned the methods whereby she achieved and maintains her independence.

If we refuse to treat with her now, because of the doubtful propriety of our conduct in maintaining her independence, will it not be true that for all time to come we will be estopped from having any dealings with Panama because of the previous history of her rebellion and independence? Who will dare say that, if this treaty is rejected, and Panama should live as a republic for as much as three years, and another treaty should be submitted for the construction of this canal, we would be estopped from ratifying it because of our previous conduct? We would answer the objection promptly, and say that the revolution is over, that Panama was lost to Colombia, that she was a well-established republic with an organized government in full possession and control of the Isthmus where the canal is to be located, and our Government could not possibly treat with any other nation for the right to construct this canal except the Republic of Panama.

Our Government, I know, will not go backward; we will not restore Panama to Colombia regardless of this treaty. If we did, in all probability many of the leading citizens of the new Republic would be hanged for treason, and, doubtless, their property would be confiscated by the Colombian Government. What do I find? The new republic of Panama is a republic in fact, whether rightfully or wrongfully. She is now proceeding to adopt a constitution, select a judiciary, and organize a constitutional government. This has been accomplished without my assistance, and, as a practical man, I am to deal with the situation as I find it. If this treaty is rejected I fear the construction of the canal will be delayed for an indefinite period.

If the treaty is ratified there can be no excuse for further delay in the construction of a waterway of vital importance to my own section, for we know the benefit to accrue to the South from a commercial standpoint, resulting from the construction of the canal, is incalculable. There is but one sentiment among the people of the South in regard to the construction of the canal. Many good men regret that it should come through questionable methods, but we must deal with the situation as we find it. Already the new Republic has been recognized, not only by the United States, but also by France, China, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Denmark, Russia, Sweden and Norway, Belgium, Nicaragua, Peru, Cuba, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Costa Rica, Switzerland, and The Netherlands.

These nations are ready to treat with Panama as an independent republic—they are ready to negotiate treaties with her, and to carry on governmental relations with her in the future as an independent republic. Suppose Colombia should say that she owned the Isthmus, and that no canal should ever be constructed connecting the oceans, this would be a most serious blow to the commerce of the world. Such conditions would most assuredly be sufficient grounds to authorize our Government to act quickly in recognizing the independence of the people who were in actual possession of the Isthmus, in order that we might negotiate with the new nation for the construction of the canal.

Suppose there was no other route by which the canal could possibly be constructed except the route now involved; suppose Colombia owned Panama, and had it in her power to demand an unreasonable, exorbitant sum for the land on which we desired to construct the canal; or suppose Colombia should refuse to treat with us for the necessary lands for canal purposes; under such circumstances the building of the waterway would be blocked to the great injury of the commerce of the world.

Under the general rules of international law we would have no legal right to take by force any part of her territory; but this condition of affairs, I am sure, would justify prompt action on the part of our Government in recognizing the independence of Panama, originally a part of Colombia, and in possession of the territory where the canal is to be located. The act might appear to be rash, but the civilized world would justify and applaud it because of the conduct of Colombia. I do not contend that this is exactly the case we have under consideration, but it illustrates the position for which I am contending—that in recognizing the independence of a new nation struggling for independence we are not bound in every instance by the general rules of international law, but by the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

If it were not for our treaty rights, arising by virtue of the treaty of 1846, in conjunction with the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty, the civil war that has been going on for years in Colombia, and the deep and vital interest all civilized nations feel in the construction of this waterway, uniting the two great oceans, we could not justify our conduct in recognizing the independence of Panama before independence had been accomplished.

I repeat, Mr. President, the fact that we recognized the independence of Panama, seemingly with undue haste, has not been the feature of this transaction that caused me at first to doubt the honesty and good faith of my own Government. This action on the part of our Government would not prevent me from voting for this treaty, taken in connection with all the facts and circumstances relating to and bearing upon the question at issue. The feature of this transaction most serious in its nature that has weighed upon my mind, and which at various times has almost led me to vote against the ratification of this treaty, begins before the revolution began. I have asked myself, who brought about the revolution? Would the revolution ever have taken place had not assistance been assured by our Government? I then asked myself, what right had we to say to Colombia: You shall not use your army and navy to put down a rebellion in part of your territory.

I know there can be but one answer. We had the right to prevent Colombia from carrying on war in Panama, provided such war interfered with transit across the Isthmus. This right was given to us by the treaty of 1846, but by no chain of reasoning can I reach the conclusion that we had the right to interfere with the internal quarrels of Colombia and Panama except such internal quarrels in some way embarrassed or interfered with transit across the Isthmus. I can not vote to convict my own Government of an act of dishonesty without positive and unimpeachable testimony. Such a charge against the integrity of our Government must be condemned in the absence of unquestionable proof. I deplore the fact that the circumstances surrounding this transaction are of such a nature as even to cast suspicion upon our conduct.

I am unwilling to say that the President in his message has not told us the truth so far as the Executive branch of the Government is concerned. He may be impulsive, but I do not believe that he is dishonest. I do not believe the American people have ever elevated a dishonest man to the high office he now occupies. To make such a charge would reflect on the intelligence, the wisdom, and honesty of the American people. I vote for the treaty because on this issue I find in favor of the integrity of my own country and in favor of the honesty of an American President. It will be a sad day for this Republic if any man is ever elevated to the high office of President who is dishonest.

Candor compels me to say that I have been actuated to some extent in reaching the conclusion to vote in favor of this treaty by reason of public sentiment in my own State, and by the further reason of the great commercial benefits that will certainly follow to the South by reason of the construction of the canal. It is proper that these considerations should have weight with a Senator. I could not vote to approve an act of dishonesty if the sentiment in my State approved it. The good people of my State would never approve an act of dishonesty. Good men often reach conclusions which are erroneous, because they are not conversant with all the facts and circumstances connected with the transaction. They often reverse their opinions when the whole situation is explained to them.

This is the highest evidence of their honesty and their desire to find the truth. During the pending of this treaty many Senators have been criticised because they failed to speak out in favor of its ratification. Opposition to the treaty has been construed to mean opposition to an Isthmian Canal. I have no patience with such criticism. Truth compels me to say that the Senators who have denounced our connection with the revolution and questioned our conduct in dealing with Colombia, with one or two exceptions, are now, and have ever been, the earnest and steadfast friends of an Isthmian canal.

The junior Senator from Maryland, always the loyal, devoted and consistent friend of the South, is a strong advocate of a canal. The senior Senator from Alabama has devoted his entire public life to accomplish this great work. The two Senators from Texas have labored most earnestly for the construction of this waterway, since I have been associated with them in public life. The same can be said of each Senator who has spoken against the treaty on this side of the chamber, with one exception. The charge that these Senators are opposed to a canal because of their opposition to this treaty is a malicious slander, and I have no patience with such a charge.

While I shall vote for the treaty I recognize the fact that those Senators who vote against it, on this side of the Chamber, are just as anxious to see the canal completed as I am. They have been the constant friends of a canal, and their opposition to this treaty should not be construed to mean opposition to a canal. Such a construction would be manifestly unjust. It has been difficult for the public to dissociate opposition to the treaty with opposition to the canal. I can fully appreciate the grounds on which such opposition is based. It is of vast importance that we shall have the friendship of both Colombia and Panama, the countries to be so closely connected with the operation of the canal.

It would be extremely unfortunate for any unfriendly feeling to exist between Colombia and the United States, or between Colombia and Panama. We will probably spend four or five hundred millions of dollars before this great waterway is completed. We desire above all things the friendly cooperation of the governments in close proximity to the canal where this money is to be expended. We should not hesitate to use the good offices and influences of our Government to adjust in a friendly way the difference between Panama and Colombia, and to bring about cordial and friendly relations between Colombia and our Government. If Colombia has been wronged, let reparation be promptly made. Let every doubt be given in favor of just and fair treatment of Colombia, so far as it lies within our power.

I know that it is impossible to restore Panama to Colombia. This I do not expect. We ought to be indulgent in dealing with a sister republic inferior to us in wealth, population, and military strength. What a blessing it will be to the commerce of the world if this canal can be built at an early day. I had hoped to see this canal constructed without offending any foreign Government, and especially without offending any sister republic. Let us yet hope that this great work may be carried to completion through the efforts of our country, and that through our generosity and liberality Colombia and Panama may amicably and satisfactorily adjust all of their differences.

This side of the Chamber has sought diligently to ascertain the relations our Government has sustained to the revolution in Colombia. We have been exceedingly anxious to scrutinize every act of our Government to relieve our own country, if possible, from the charge of complicity in the Panama revolution. We have thought that this course was demanded by the facts and circumstances connected with the transaction.

This duty has been discharged faithfully and fearlessly in the interests of honest government. To do less was to shirk a serious and grave responsibility. We have contended with unanimity that most diligent effort should be made to adjust amicably all differences existing between Panama and Colombia, and that if any injustice had been done Colombia on our part every reparation within our power should promptly be made.

The resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. BACON] now before the Senate seeks to accomplish this end. The movement originated on this side of the Chamber. Let us hope that this movement may be brought to a successful termination. Such a purpose is a most laudable one, and, when accomplished, will have the approval of all conservative, patriotic, intelligent, and right-thinking people. Those who love justice, righteousness, and peace better than they love trade and commercial gain will hail with joy and delight such a solution of this important controversy.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11825) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT LIGHT-HOUSE AND BUOY TENDER.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3530) to provide for the construction of a light-house and buoy tender for the inspector of the eleventh light-house district.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the bill is?

Mr. NELSON. It is for the construction of a light-house and buoy tender on Lake Superior, which is recommended by the Department and unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "district," to insert "at a cost not to exceed $130,000;" in line 9, before the word "light-house," to insert "said;" in the same line, after the word "tender," to strike out the words "for which appropriation may be made;" and on page 2, line 3, after the word "advertisement," to strike out "$130,000" and to insert "and for this purpose the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be constructed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor a light-house and buoy tender for use in the eleventh light-house district at a cost not to exceed $130,000; and the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare the plans for the said light-house and buoy tender, such draftsmen to be paid from the appropriation for building said vessel; such employment to cease and determine on or before the date when the plans for such light-house and buoy tender shall be finished and proposals for building said vessel are invited by advertisement; and for this purpose the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1419) to fix the salary of the collector of customs at Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill, but when it is disposed of I think I shall insist on the Calendar being taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 3, before the words "of customs," to strike out "collector" and insert "surveyor;" and in line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert "in addition to fees;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the surveyor of customs at Omaha, Nebr., shall be paid, from and after the passage of this act, an annual salary of $1,000 in addition to fees in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to fix the salary of the surveyor of customs at Omaha, Nebr."

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2424) to recognize and promote the efficiency of army chaplains, if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will not object.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have not any control over the business of the Senate, but I think the best thing for us to do is to go to the Calendar regularly. I am not, however, going to assume any control of this matter, and so I shall not object to the bill referred to by the Senator from West Virginia, though I hope we shall go to the Calendar in regular order and consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia for the present consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. GALLINGER. When the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] made the suggestion a moment ago to proceed with the Calendar in order, I was about to make the same suggestion. I now say that I shall not object to the consideration of the bill which the Senator from West Virginia desires to have considered, but after that has been disposed of I shall ask for the regular order, which is the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator from West Virginia explain why the latter sections of the bill have been inserted. Do they change the existing law respecting chaplains, except as to those who are to be promoted?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, we all know that chaplains in the service have to be mounted. Though their pay has never been the same as that of mounted officers, yet they are regarded as mounted officers. That is the only change the bill makes, with the exception that the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is given authority, for extraordinary services rendered and for efficiency, to give the old chaplains the grade of major, though not the rank. It simply gives them the pay and allowances of a major, but they are not to exceed fifteen in number at any one time.

This bill has been urged upon the Military Committee, by whom it was very thoroughly considered, and was unanimously reported favorably.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from West Virginia how many chaplains we have in the Army?

Mr. SCOTT. Indeed, I can not answer that question. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] may be able to answer it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is one to each regiment.

Mr. TELLER. How many does that make?

Mr. COCKRELL. There are about forty-five, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Forty-four or forty-five.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "regimental," to strike out "(or post);" in line 12, before the word "number," to insert

"total;" and after the word "number" to insert "in the service so;" so as to make the section read:

That hereafter the President may, from time to time, select from among the chaplains of the Army any chaplains having not less than ten years' service, who shall have been commended as worthy of special distinction for exceptional efficiency by the regimental and department commanders with whose commands they have served as chaplains, and may, with the advice and consent of the Senate, promote such regimental or artillery chaplains to be chaplains with the grade, pay, and allowances of major: Provided, That the total number in the service so promoted shall not at any time exceed fifteen, and that the remaining chaplains shall have the grade, pay, and allowances of captain, mounted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANNER OF IMPORTATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order having been demanded, the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2816) to amend section 3095 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as first in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 3095 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

SEC. 3095. Except in the districts on the northern, northwestern, and western boundaries of the United States, adjoining to the Dominion of Canada or into the districts adjacent to Mexico, no merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture subject to the payment of duties shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port in any other manner than by sea, nor in any vessel of less than 30 net register tons, or landed or unladen at any other port than is directed by law, under the penalty of seizure and forfeiture of all such vessels and of the merchandise imported therein, laden or unladen in any other manner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 3095 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to manner of importation."

EMPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES VESSELS.

The bill (S. 2263) to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill may be passed over, if the Senate please, without objection.

SECESSION OF PANAMA.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN December 18, 1903, declaring the proposition that neither the President nor the President and the Senate, as the treaty-making power of the United States, has the lawful power to wage or declare war against any foreign power without the consent of Congress, when such country is at peace with the United States, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 7023) to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia," approved March 1, 1899, by inserting after the word "hotel," in the fourth line thereof, the words "or as a hospital or dormitory;" so that said section will read as follows:

That from and after the date of the approval of this act no combustible or nonfireproof building intended to be used or occupied as a residence, or as an appartment house or hotel, or as a hospital or dormitory in the District of Columbia shall be erected to a height of more than five stories or raised to a height exceeding 60 feet above the sidewalk, the measurement to be made as hereinafter prescribed.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has the bill in charge, in case persons should desire to erect a hotel here on one of the corners where there is a large open space, whether they would be limited as to the height of the building they would be permitted to construct, or whether there is some way by which they might secure permission to erect a fireproof building higher than the prescribed limit?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the law does limit them as to the height, but it varies, of course, because of the different widths of the streets. Buildings are permitted to be erected higher on the wide streets than on the narrow streets. The only change this bill makes in the existing law is to require hospitals and dormitories to be made fireproof. The bill has no reference whatever to the height of buildings.

Mr. TELLER. The bill does not propose to make any change in that regard?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not change the law on that subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the bill we have just passed relates to fire escapes in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not. I will say to the Senator it simply provides that dormitories and hospitals shall be constructed of fireproof material, as is required under existing law for certain other structures. It is a question, of course, whether there is any such thing as a fireproof building; but the intention of the Commissioners and of the Committee on the District of Columbia is to make hospitals and dormitories as safe in that regard as any other kind of building possibly can be in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose there is a law in force in the District of Columbia in regard to fireproof buildings?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is such a law. I will say to the Senator that during the past few weeks the entire city has practically been covered by the fire officials in making examinations of buildings, including the churches of the city and the schoolhouses. The intention is to provide the most adequate facilities for escape from buildings in the District of Columbia in the event of fire.

This is not a new thing, I will say, Mr. President. During the time that my lamented predecessor, the late Senator McMillan, was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in conjunction with him we took up that question, and we made the theaters of the District of Columbia so safe that the recent inspection has failed to discover any lack in that regard. That inspection is now being extended to the schoolhouses, the churches, and other places where people congregate. I think there is probably no city so well provided for a panic or a fire as is the city of Washington at the present time.

Mr. SPOONER. Whilst I am not an expert in the fire-escape business, I have observed that in many of the fire escapes the ladders come down from story to story in front of the windows instead of coming down the blank spaces between the windows. That looks to me like a very poor fire escape, because, if a fire breaks out, it will break out through the windows and render the fire escape absolutely of no avail whatever.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course the escape has to be through the window.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the starting point; but the fire escapes might be diverted from that particular point.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to me that the fire escapes might be so constructed as to go down the blank space on the wall instead of having to go down from story to story in front of the windows.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a very valuable suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. I commend it to my friend.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I will commend it to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: It will be remembered, Mr. President, that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] some time ago offered a resolution directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make an investigation of the theaters and other places of entertainment in reference to their safety. The Commissioners, under date of January 23, have made report on that resolution, and I should like to insert it in the RECORD in connection with my remarks on House bill 7023, which passed a little while ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

The report referred to is as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 23, 1904.

SENATOR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to make the following report on Senate resolution passed January 5, 1904, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are directed to make, as soon as practicable, a full examination into the condition of all theaters and places of public entertainment in the District of Columbia, in order to see if such theaters and public places are maintained and conducted in accordance with the statutes and regulations of the District of Columbia, and whether or not any such theaters or places of entertainment are going on without proper license. The District Commissioners will make report upon said investigation to the Senate."

A preliminary report is submitted in reference to theaters, and examination is now being made of the public halls used for entertainments from time to time, but not regularly. A further report on these halls will be submitted as soon as is practicable.

There are seven theaters in the city—the Lafayette, the National, Chase's, the Columbia, the Academy of Music, Kernan's Lyceum, and the Empire.

The authority of the Commissioners to control the issuance of licenses and to prescribe regulations for the construction and alteration of the theaters was given by act of Congress approved February 26, 1892. An amendatory act, approved March 2, 1895, required the certificate of the inspector of buildings that the theater complied with law and regulations before license could be issued. In the act approved July 1, 1902, providing for licenses to theaters, Congress directed that the certificate of the chief officer of the fire department should be obtained in addition to that of the inspector of buildings.

In accordance with the first-named act the Commissioners adopted a set of rules and regulations. These were intended to apply absolutely to all new or reconstructed theaters, and as far as possible, without causing entire reconstruction, to existing theaters. The records of the office show that the certificate required has been given each year before the licenses have been issued.

In November, 1903, at the time of the issuing of licenses, they were refused to three of the theaters—namely, Chase's, the Empire, and the Academy of Music—because the inspector of buildings and the chief of the fire department declined to certify that those theaters were in accordance with the regulations until certain changes should be made. The managers of these theaters were taken into court and they agreed to make the change within a definite limited time. After a personal inspection the Commissioners decided that these requirements, while very desirable for the protection of the public, were not of such a nature as to cause by their absence a serious and imminent source of danger, and therefore it was not considered necessary to close these theaters while the work was being done. The four other theaters received their licenses in the due course of law.

More than two years ago the chief engineer of the fire department and the fire marshal were directed to make special examination of all theaters, hotels, apartment houses, and public halls, with a view of ascertaining what was needed for protection of the public against fire. The preliminary reports indicated a dangerous condition of affairs, especially in the electrical wiring and apparatus. The electrical engineer was directed to make a special examination, which revealed very serious conditions.

The inspector of buildings, the chief engineer of the fire department, and the electrical engineer were directed to cooperate in ascertaining and removing dangerous conditions, whether such conditions were forbidden by the strict construction of the law or not. This investigation revealed many defects in the theaters. The electric wiring and apparatus were generally in an unsafe condition; in many cases worn-out insulation or improper connections brought live wires against inflammable material; exit doors were found bolted and locked; fire-fighting appliances were absent; combustibles were accumulated in dangerous places; the ventilators in the roof did not work well, and unused flues, liable to carry fire all over the theater, were open. One theater had a proscenium arch of nonfire-resisting material, and its fire escapes were insufficient.

By direction of the Commissioners, and in most cases with the cooperation of the theater managers, the reformation of this state of things began at once. The dangerous conditions were immediately remedied, all improvements required were immediately begun, and there remains now to be done only a portion of what was required in the case of the three theaters whose licenses have been withheld.

Constant and rigid inspection has been maintained through the building department, the fire department, and the electrical department. The building department sees that the regulations as to construction are carried out with respect to exit doors, escapes, aisles, stairways, walls, and lobbies; that old constructions are made as safe as possible, and that the new buildings are of fire-resisting material throughout. The electrical engineer and his assistants have brought the electric wiring and permanent apparatus of the theaters to an excellent condition and they inspect them regularly, while every Monday they inspect the electric apparatus brought by the company that is to play in the theater during the week and confiscate such apparatus as is dangerous. The chief engineer of the fire department and the fire marshal inspect every theater frequently, and a member of the fire department is on the stage during every performance to see that the regulations are complied with and to do fireman's duty in case of fire.

While many of these improvements were made before the act of 1902, that act, which requires the chief officer of the fire department as well as the inspector of buildings to certify as to the compliance of theaters with the requirements of law and regulations, has been very helpful.

These inspections have been carried on at a considerable disadvantage, because the different departments responsible for them have not had an increase in their force for the purpose. An increase of the inspecting force for the purpose of maintaining and extending this work is desirable and also additional legislation that will extend the authority of the Commissioners in this matter. The bill (S. 3) giving the Commissioners a larger power to regulate electric wiring in the District of Columbia, and providing additional inspectors for such work, would be, if enacted, of value in this relation. A similar bill has been recommended by the Commissioners for several years.

In obedience to the resolution of the Senate the Commissioners made a personal inspection of all the theaters in the city. Certain minor changes were recommended by them which the managers agreed to make, but it was found that the theaters were carrying out the regulations with the exceptions above mentioned, which, however, are being remedied.

The examination showed that the exits are all lighted with red lights on a circuit independent of the stage and plainly marked with the word "Exit;" all exits open outward and are easily opened; that all the theaters have either a proscenium arch of solid brick or other fire-resisting material between the stage and the auditorium, excepting one of those whose license has been withheld, which is under contract to put in such fire-resisting material immediately. All the theaters have genuine asbestos curtains. They have been all tested by subjecting them to a hot fire and found absolutely fireproof. All the theaters have skylights of the prescribed dimensions, self-opening, and held by a rope to be loosened by a designated employee, or by the burning of the rope. All lighting in the theaters is electrical. The switchboards and the wiring are in proper condition. The aisles of the theaters are in accordance with the regulations. The perforated pipes or automatic sprinklers above the stage, and the fire hose, extinguishers, and other appliances for fighting fire, are in apparent good order.

The managers of the theaters, in accordance with the police regulations, detail a man for fire-protection service under orders of the fire department and who is required to have no other duties during performances.

The police department sees that all doors are unlocked, exit lights lit, and the rules observed.

There are several points to which attention is invited. There are only two theaters in the city—namely, the Lafayette and the Columbia—which have been built or altered since the adoption of the regulations of 1892, and which are thoroughly fireproof. The other theaters are not fireproof, but have an arch of brick or other fire-resisting material between the stage and the auditorium, with one exception noted above, which will have this fire-resisting material within a short time. As a result, the Commissioners feel assured that should a fire take place on the stage, with this fire-resisting arch, the asbestos curtain, and the automatically opening skylights it will be confined to that part of the theater sufficiently long to enable the audience to leave the theater in a quiet and orderly manner. This, with the enforcement of the regulations about aisles, fire escapes, stairways, lighted exits, and fire appliances, is considered a reasonably safe condition in the theaters.

The perforated pipes or automatic sprinklers will be of greater value when there is greater water pressure, as there will be within the near future, as new mains are being laid and the improvements in water distribution are being completed. There is now a flow of water on the stages at the height of the apparatus, but it is doubtful whether it would prove entirely adequate. One of the theaters has a pumping arrangement to increase the pressure, and such an arrangement may be required in all the other theaters in order to increase the pressure. If Congress had granted the request of the Commissioners for a special high-pressure fire-protection water service by separate mains in the heart of the city of Washington, all the theaters would have had the benefit of it.

The provision in the regulations that all scenery, curtains, etc., shall be covered or saturated, "if practicable, with fire-resisting materials approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia" has not been enforced because no certain and practicable method of treatment has been known. The scenery in the Washington theaters is painted with water color and not oil, making it less inflammable. As soon as any method of treatment which is practicable and dependable is established, its application to the Washington theaters will be required.

The protections relied on principally, however, are on the ability to keep any fire originating on the stage within the limits of the stage itself for a sufficient time; on the skylights above the stage, which will allow flames and smoke to escape, and, further, on sufficient exits, provided an audience does not leave the building in uncontrollable haste.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
HENRY L. WEST,
JOHN BIDDLE,
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT TAX SALES.

The bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to tax sales and taxes in the District of Columbia,'" approved May 13, 1892, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to tax sales and taxes in the District of Columbia,'" approved May 13, 1892, so as to read as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the assessor for the District of Columbia to prepare and keep in his office for public inspection a list of all real estate in the District of Columbia heretofore sold, or which may hereafter be sold, for the nonpayment of any general or special tax or assessment levied or assessed upon the same, said list to show the date of sale and for what taxes sold; in whose name assessed at the time of sale; the amount for which the same was sold; when and to whom conveyed, if deeded, or, if redeemed from sale, the date of redemption.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said assessor, whenever called upon, to furnish, in addition to the regular tax bills, a certified statement, over his hand and official seal, of all taxes and assessments, general and special, that may be due and unpaid at the time of making said certificate, and for each and every certificate so furnished by said assessor the party requesting the same shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a fee of 50 cents; and said certificate when furnished shall be a bar to the collection and recovery of any tax or assessment omitted from and which may be a lien upon the real estate mentioned in said certificate; and the assessor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel upon the records of his office any such tax or assessment so omitted from said certificate.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPYRIGHTS OF BOOKS, MAPS, CHARTS, ETC.

The bill (S. 2229) to amend chapter 4952 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not see any member of the Committee on Patents in the Chamber, and as it seems to me that that bill proposes an important amendment to the copyright law, I think it had better go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

WIDENING V STREET NW.

The bill (S. 2621) for the widening of V street NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 11, before the word "square," to insert "south of;" so as to make the section read:

That within twenty days after the deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia, by parties interested, of the sum of $1,250 the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition, particularly describing the lands to be taken, a proceeding in rem to condemn the land necessary for the widening of V street through square south of south of square 1296 from the west line of Thirty-fifth street west 120 feet to the line of Washington County, to the full width of 60 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 4, line 8, after the word "assessed," to strike out "for" and insert "as;" and in the same line, after the word "damages," to insert "as follows, namely, one-fourth out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-fourth;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That when the verdict of said jury shall have been finally ratified and confirmed by the court, as herein provided, the amounts of money awarded and adjudged to be payable for lands taken under the provisions hereof shall be paid to the owners of said land by the Treasurer of the United States, ex officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, upon warrant of the Commissioners of said District, one-half the amount assessed as damages as follows, namely, one-fourth out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-fourth out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the remainder out of the sum hereinbefore required to be deposited with the collector of taxes; etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAMING OF STREETS, AVENUES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 7024) to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to name or rename streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of the city of Washington, under such system of naming as they shall see fit to adopt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OPENING OF R STREET NE.

The bill (S. 1636) for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street and of Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $21,200 for the purpose of grading and macadamizing R street NE. from its intersection with Bladensburg road eastwardly to Twenty-eighth street, and Twenty-eighth street southwardly to M street, according to section 3 of the street-extension plan; but there shall be delivered to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia an unconditional dedication of the streets named and between the limits named without cost to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MALLORY. Is there a report on that bill, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a report made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GORMAN on the 11th ultimo, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1636) for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street, and of Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-seventh Congress, favorably reported, and passed by the Senate.

The report was as follows:

"The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4725) for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street, and of Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

"The bill has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter:

"'OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
"'Washington, April 10, 1902.

"'SENATOR: The Commissioners have the honor to submit the following upon Senate bill 4725, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street, and of Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street, which you referred to them for report:

"'A map is inclosed herewith showing, in red, the streets proposed to be opened and improved. The cost of grading the streets is estimated at $5,000. For macadamizing the entire length it is estimated that $16,200 will be required. The bill provides that the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be appropriated for the purpose of grading and regulating. It will be seen that the amount named is, therefore, barely sufficient to grade the streets under the most favorable conditions.

"'In regard to the necessity of opening these streets it may be stated that there is at present no public highway through the properties lying between the Reform School, Bennings road, the Anacostia River, and the Bladensburg road, all of the outlets being private roads which are in poor condition, and which the District will not accept or improve because they do not conform to the street-extension plan. The streets proposed to be opened in this bill are according to the approved plan of street extensions, and their opening and improvement would afford a much-needed outlet to the property in this section.

"'Maps of dedication of the streets named have been prepared in this office and have been signed by the proper parties without any conditions as to their improvement. These maps are now believed to be in the hands of parties interested.

"'For the reasons stated the Commissioners would recommend favorable action on the bill.

"'Very respectfully,

"'HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
"'President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

"'Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
"'Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, Senate.'"

The amount indicated in the bill which passed the Senate during the Fifty-seventh Congress was not sufficient for the purpose, but the appropriation provided by this bill is deemed to be sufficient by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as will appear by the following letter:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 15, 1903.

SENATOR: The Commissioners have the honor to submit the following upon Senate bill 1636, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, for the opening of R street NE. to Twenty-eighth street, and Twenty-eighth street NE. from R street to M street, which your committee referred to them for suggestions as to the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage:

The bill provides for the improvement of streets which are in accordance with the highway-extension plans and which the parties owning the land are ready to dedicate. These proposed streets are in a part of the District which has few highways. A bill similar to this one was introduced at the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress and favorably reported upon by the Commissioners. The amount named in that bill was not sufficient for the purpose, but the appropriation carried by the present bill ($21,200) is sufficient.

While the Commissioners are in favor of the development of some streets in this vicinity, they do not prefer the streets mentioned in the bill to those which they have already recommended in their estimates for improvement.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Let us proceed a little further with the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there any bill on the Calendar which it is important should be disposed of this afternoon?

Mr. TELLER. Do you want to have an executive session?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; but I am willing to run along for a little while, if there is anything which it is important should be passed this afternoon.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would wait a little while. We have not been upon the Calendar very long, and there are a good many cases which should be disposed of. We might run along for a little while.

Mr. CULLOM. I am willing to do that.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The joint resolution (S. R. 6) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the Minnesota Historical Society the steering wheel of the former ship Minnesota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF NAVAL AND OTHER STORES.

The bill (S. 2437) to provide for the transportation of naval and other stores and supplies in American-built ships was announced as the next bill in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of my colleague, I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice.

DEPOSITIONS BEFORE NAVAL COURTS.

The bill (S. 3114) to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like very much to hear the reasons for the passage of this bill. I understand it authorizes depositions to be used against a man charged with an offense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HALE January 12, 1904, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3114) to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following extract from Secretary Moody's letter of July 9, 1903, sent to the chairman of the Naval Committee of both Senate and House, recommending certain legislation:

"I have the honor to invite your attention to the following matters which have been presented to the Department by the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy:

"1. A MEASURE PROVIDING FOR THE USE OF DEPOSITIONS BEFORE NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL AND COURTS OF INQUIRY.

"By reference to S. 1103, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, it will be seen that a bill granting such authority passed the Senate March 3, 1902. Article 91 of the Articles of War (Rev. Stat., 1878, p. 239) authorizes the use of depositions before military courts, but like authority has never been granted in the case of naval courts.

"THE USE OF DEPOSITIONS BEFORE NAVAL COURTS.

"From report for the year 1893:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'Article 91 of the Articles of War provides that—

"'"The depositions of witnesses residing beyond the limits of the State, Territory, or district in which any military court may be ordered to sit, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be read in evidence before such court in cases not capital."

"'The effect of this statute is stated in Winthrop's Military Law to be not merely to indicate when depositions shall be admissible, but to entitle parties to the depositions of witnesses when their personal testimony can not, without too great a delay or expense or other prejudice to the service, be obtained. The articles for the government of the Navy contain no similar provisions. It frequently happens in the naval service that a considerable time must elapse between the date on which an offense is committed and the convening of a naval court for the trial of the accused. In that interval witnesses may have been ordered to other duty on foreign stations at a great distance from the place where the court is being held. It is often a grave question whether the interests of the public service require that such witnesses be subpœnaed and recalled from the regular duty to which they may have been assigned, involving loss of time and expense of travel, in order that they may give testimony at the trial.

"'While it is undoubtedly desirable that the testimony of witnesses be taken in open court and in the presence of the accused in all cases where it is practicable to do so, it would seem that a provision similar to that above quoted, authorizing the introduction in evidence before naval courts of depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place where such courts are held that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance, would materially promote the administration of justice in the Navy.'

"From report for 1894:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'In addition to the proposed legislation heretofore mentioned, a bill was introduced in both Houses during the second session of the present Congress providing as follows:

"'"The depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place where a naval court is held, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not, in the judgment of the court, practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring unreasonable expense and loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court."

"'No action was taken on this bill by the committees to which it was referred. For the reasons fully set forth in my last report it is believed that such legislation would be of material value in administering justice in the naval service.'

"DEPOSITIONS.

"From the report for 1895:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'As a rule, the witnesses whose evidence is required before naval courts-martial are persons in the naval service. Such witnesses are subject to orders at all times, and have, as a general thing, no permanent place of duty, but are transferred from one station or vessel to another whenever occasion requires. The vessels composing one squadron may be together or widely separated, as the exigencies of the service demand. In consequence of these conditions it not infrequently happens that during the interval which must elapse between the commission of an offense and the trial of the person accused, witnesses important to the prosecution or defense are ordered to distant stations. This peculiarity of the naval service renders the use of depositions, under proper restrictions, far more important than in the case of criminal prosecutions before the civil courts, where the majority of the witnesses are generally taken from the permanent population of the community in which the offense is committed.

"'The evils consequent upon these peculiar conditions are several. The Department hesitates to order the trial of an offender in cases where the accused is at some navy-yard or station in the United States while witnesses whose testimony should be had at the trial are found to be on their way to Alaska, China, or the South Atlantic station. If convened, the court might, under such circumstances, be unable justly to determine the case brought before it. On the other hand, if the trial be delayed until the witnesses return, unnecessary hardship is imposed upon the person accused, whether guilty or innocent; and if witnesses widely separated are brought together especially for the purposes of the trial serious inconvenience to the service, loss of time, and expense is entailed. It is true that by the exercise of promptness and judgment in ordering courts and by keeping important witnesses within reach these evils can be in some measure avoided; but cases arise in which this can not be done; and experience has, in my opinion, demonstrated that legislation on this subject is desirable. I am confirmed in this view by the fact that to correct similar evils arising from the same conditions (though doubtless to a less degree) in the Army, Congress has authorized the use of depositions in that branch of the service. Article 91 of the Articles of War provides that—

"'"The depositions of witnesses residing beyond the limits of the State, Territory, or district in which any military court may be ordered to sit, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be read in evidence before such court in cases not capital."

"'While carefully weighing and recognizing the objections to the use of the depositions in criminal cases under ordinary circumstances, I am nevertheless satisfied that the enactment, with reference to the Navy, of a clause similar to that above quoted, and which is in force with regard to the Army, would promote the administration of justice and tend to correct serious evils now existing, it being premised, of course, that it is by no means proposed or suggested that the examination of witnesses in open court be done away with, but that the admission of depositions be authorized only in cases where personal attendance is not practicable.'

"From the report for 1896:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'The power to convene naval general courts-martial is by law vested in the President, the Secretary of the Navy, or the commander in chief of a fleet or squadron, and it is, in addition, explicitly provided that "no commander of a fleet or squadron in the waters of the United States shall convene such court without express permission from the President." Upon the commission by any person in the naval service of an offense grave enough to warrant trial by general court-martial, the matter is at first made the subject of official report to the commander in chief of the squadron or to the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be; the circumstances under which the offense was committed are then carefully considered and such investigation entered upon as may be necessary; and, finally, if the case is deemed sufficiently serious, charges and specifications are formulated and a court convened. In practice a considerable time elapses, as a rule, between the commission of an offense and the conviction or acquittal of the person accused, inasmuch as protracted correspondence is often necessary in order to satisfy the convening authority as to whether or not a court should be ordered. In the meantime witnesses having knowledge of facts important to the prosecution or defense may, through exigencies of the service, be widely scattered, and in such cases it is frequently very difficult and occasions great inconvenience and expense to obtain the attendance of witnesses without whose presence in court the interests of the accused or those of the service will materially suffer.

"'The facts necessary to establish before a naval court-martial the guilt or innocence of the accused usually rest within the knowledge of officers and men in the Navy, a peculiar class of witnesses, having as a rule no fixed or permanent station and liable to be ordered to remote duty at any moment; and it is to be observed that the evidence of this class of witnesses, in consequence of the responsibility growing out of their continued connection with the naval service, would when given by deposition undoubtedly be more than ordinarily credible.

"'The considerations above indicated, together with others discussed in a former report, lead me to believe that the enactment, with reference to the Navy, of a clause similar to that which is now in force with respect to the Army would promote the efficient administration of justice by naval courts.

"'The existing provision of law referred to is embodied in article 91 of the Articles of War, and provides that—

"'"The depositions of witnesses residing beyond the limits of the State, Territory, or district in which any military court may be ordered to sit, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be read in evidence before such court in cases not capital."

"'The draft of a provision of law on this subject, which received the Department's approval, and was embodied in a bill (H. R. 4319) introduced in the House of Representatives January 17, 1896, by Mr. Hilborn, and still pending, is as follows:

"'"The depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place where a naval court is held, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not, in the judgment of such court, practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring unreasonable expense and loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.'"

"From the report for 1897:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'Article 91 of the Articles of War reads as follows:

"'"The depositions of witnesses residing beyond the limits of the State, Territory, or district in which any military court may be ordered to sit, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be read in evidence before such courts in cases not capital."

"'While the provision of law above quoted is applicable to the Army only, the reasons which prompted its enactment apply with equal if not greater force to the Navy. The operations of the latter branch of the service extend over a much wider field. In the case of the Army it may be assumed that under ordinary circumstances witnesses can be found within the limits of the United States, inasmuch as, in time of peace at least, the Army does not go beyond our national borders. Witnesses serving on board naval vessels, however, are subject at any moment to be ordered to distant stations in foreign waters rendering their recall for the purpose of giving testimony a matter of expense and inconvenience. In such cases it becomes difficult to determine whether the interests of the service will be best promoted by dispensing with the testimony of witnesses serving on remote stations, and thus, perhaps, causing a failure of justice, or by ordering them to attend and testify, necessarily incurring heavy expense, loss of time, and inconvenience. The obvious remedy is the enactment with respect to the Navy of some such provision as that above quoted, which has for many years past authorized the use of depositions by military courts.

"'The draft of a provision of law designed to meet the requirements of the case was embodied in a bill introduced in the last Congress by Mr. Hilborn, of California. This proposed measure was approved by the Department in the form in which it was introduced, but it failed to become a law. It provided that—

"'"The depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place where a naval court is held, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not, in the judgment of such court, practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring unreasonable expense and loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.'"

"From the report for 1898:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'A further matter with respect to which legislation is necessary in order to empower naval courts to administer the duties with which they are charged by law is that of depositions. Under the law as it stands, depositions are not admissible before naval courts; and on account of the peculiar organization and duties of the Navy it frequently happens that witnesses can not be brought before courts-martial requiring their testimony. Naval vessels rarely remain long at any one point, and the personnel of the vessels themselves, as well as that of navy-yards and stations, is subject to frequent change. Salutary provisions of the regulations require that preliminary investigation and report be made in all cases where a doubt exists respecting the necessity of convening a general court-martial for the trial of an offense, and in the ordinary course such preliminary steps, the purpose of which is to avoid unnecessary resort to this extreme measure, occupy some time, and during the period intervening between the commission of an offense and the convening of a court for the trial of the offender, witnesses, if in the naval service, are frequently detached and ordered to distant duty; and civilian witnesses may, by the movements of vessels, be left in distant ports. When this state of affairs is found to exist, the Department must determine whether the interests of the service will be least prejudiced by dispensing with the testimony of witnesses serving on remote stations or residing at a great distance from the place at which the court is convened, or by bringing them before the court at large expense, and, in the case of witnesses connected with the Navy, at loss of time and inconvenience to the service.

"'Obviously these difficulties could be remedied by the enactment of a properly guarded provision authorizing the use of depositions before naval courts-martial. The Department has heretofore favored a bill, introduced in the last Congress by a member of the Naval Committee of the House, which provided that—

"'the depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital."

"'While the enactment of this provision would be in the nature of new legislation so far as the Navy is concerned, the principle is not new in its application to courts-martial, since article 91 of the Articles of War authorizes the use of depositions before military courts, and it is understood that this provision has proven valuable in connection with the administration of military justice. Instances have occurred during the past year which strongly emphasize the necessity of empowering naval courts to use, under proper restrictions, depositions of important witnesses whose testimony may be essential to the ascertainment of facts respecting cases which they are called upon to adjudicate. It is therefore recommended that Congress be urged to give favorable consideration to the above-quoted or to some other suitable measure authorizing naval courts to use depositions in cases similar to those in which they would be admissible before military courts.'

"From the report for 1899:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'In consequence of the peculiar duty on which the officers and men of the Navy are engaged, necessitating their frequent transfer from one station to another and their assignment to duty in different parts of the world from time to time, as the needs of the service require, it very frequently happens that they can not be present before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry to give testimony with respect to matters lying within their knowledge.

"'It is provided by the Navy Regulations that certain preliminary investigations and reports be made in all cases where doubt exists as to whether or not a general court-martial should be convened for the trial of an accused person, and pending these proceedings officers whose testimony is desirable, either on behalf of the prosecution or the defense, may be sent to distant stations. If the testimony of such officers is essential, they must be ordered to appear before the court at whatever expense and loss of time the necessary travel may occasion, or the trial must be abandoned. Such embarrassments, which frequently arise, could of course be prevented by the enactment of a properly guarded provision authorizing the use of depositions before naval courts-martial. Congress has heretofore had before it a draft of a measure introduced by a member of the Naval Committee of the House, which provided that:

"'"The depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital."

"'It is believed that the use of depositions in proper cases would tend to reduce the expenses attending courts-martial on the one hand, and on the other would prove of material value in promoting the ends of justice by placing at the disposal of the prosecution or the defense, as the case may be, evidence which must, in the absence of authority for their use, be dispensed with whenever it happens that witnesses are so far away or are engaged upon such duty that it is not deemed proper to order them to appear before the court.

"'It is proper to add that under the provisions of article 91 of the Articles of War depositions have long been in use before courts-martial in the Army.'

"From the report for 1900:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'The matter of the use of depositions before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry, upon which comment and recommendation have been made frequently heretofore, is still of pressing importance, and owing to the considerations mentioned in the reports of this office for previous years the interests of the service in this respect are disadvantaged by the lack of a law permitting the practice referred to, which commends itself from every point of view, and is similar to that in vogue in the Army. Congress has heretofore had before it, in the Senate and in the House, drafts of a measure containing guarded and efficient provisions covering this matter. Attention is invited to the bill, No. 1358, introduced in the Senate during the last session and reported favorably, with recommendation for passage, by the Committee on Naval Affairs, Report No. 527.'

"From the report for 1901:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'The events of the past few years and the experience had since the last annual report of this office have emphasized the importance and the growing need of a law permitting the use of depositions before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry, concerning which urgent and frequent recommendations have been made previously. As stated heretofore, the practice commends itself from every point of view and is now in vogue in the Army. The recommendation is earnestly renewed that this matter receive the favorable attention of the Congress.'

"From the report for 1902:

"'DEPOSITIONS.

"'A measure providing for the use of depositions before naval courts-martial and courts of inquiry, authority for which has frequently been requested heretofore, was introduced in the Senate (S. 1103), passed by that body on the 3d of March last, and by the House referred to its Committee on Naval Affairs, but it was not reported, nor was the bill H. R. 8117, of similar purport, introduced in the House and referred to the same committee, reported by it.'"

A bill to authorize the use of depositions before naval courts in certain cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the depositions of witnesses stationed or residing at such a distance from the place at which a naval court is ordered to sit, or who are under orders and about to go to such a distance that it is not practicable to secure their personal attendance without incurring great expense or serious loss of time, if taken on reasonable notice to the opposite party and duly authenticated, may be put in evidence before such court in cases not capital.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the bill may be passed over for the present without prejudice. I desire to examine the question whether you can use depositions in a criminal case like this.

Mr. HALE entered the Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is now present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is now present.

Mr. HALE. Is there any objection to the bill, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has been read. The Senator from Alabama says he wishes to look into the propriety or legality of using depositions in criminal cases.

Mr. HALE. These are quasi criminal cases; that is, they are examinations ordered by the Navy Department. Almost in all cases they are for trivial offenses, and it is sometimes almost impossible to get the testimony of parties who are five hundred or a thousand miles away.

I should agree with the Senator that there ought to be no encroachment on the general principle of criminal law that the accused should be confronted with the witnesses. But the Senator sees as well as I do what the situation here is. It is not like a criminal court.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill go over anyway.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Alabama wants the bill to go over, in order that he may examine it further, I have no objection.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go over.

Mr. PETTUS. I merely desire to examine the question. My inclination is to believe that you can not use a deposition in a criminal case without the consent of the accused.

Mr. HALE. You can not, undoubtedly. The bill may go over, and then the Senator and I will confer about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. Without prejudice.

REMOVAL OF DERELICTS.

The bill (S. 2641) to provide for the removal of floating dangers to navigation in certain steamship lanes off the Atlantic coast of the United States, and for the construction of a suitable vessel, to be used for such purpose by the Navy Department, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to have constructed, at a cost of not exceeding $300,000, one twin-screw vessel, of about 1,000 tons displacement, to be especially fitted for and adapted to service at sea in bad weather, for the purpose of blowing up, or otherwise destroying or of towing into port, wrecks and derelicts or other floating dangers to ocean navigation in the steamship lanes from the North Atlantic coast of the United States to or beyond the eastern limit of the Georges Bank.

Mr. HALE. I will take the suggestion of the Chair. Has a similar bill to this, reported by the Committee on Commerce, already been passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill similar to this, not, however, leaving the vessel within the jurisdiction of the Navy, but putting it under the Department of Commerce and Labor, and providing for a smaller vessel, to cost $200,000, I believe, was passed.

Mr. HALE. Let this bill be passed, and then we can see which bill is the proper one.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does it not amount practically to a duplication?

Mr. HALE. No; this bill provides that the vessel shall be under the Navy, while the other bill provided for another Department furnishing a ship or building it purposely for this service.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But they are to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. HALE. They are to accomplish the same purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Well, hardly. Will the junior Senator from Maine be allowed to say just a word?

Mr. HALE. I hope so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vessel provided for in the bill passed the other day was for the southern coast from Hatteras down, where there is greater necessity for it than anywhere else. The one provided for here is for use off the coast east.

Mr. HALE. It is general. I think the bill certainly ought to be passed.

Mr. LODGE. It is for use on the ocean lanes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any limit in this bill?

Mr. HALE. It is general in its terms.

Mr. MITCHELL. The reason I make the inquiry is this: A bill was here last session of Congress having for its purpose the prevention of floating logs by rafts on the Pacific Ocean along the Oregon and Washington coasts. I want to know if this bill would affect that matter.

Mr. HALE. No; it does not affect that at all. It is made applicable to the waters of the United States, wherever these derelicts are, which are very dangerous.

Mr. MITCHELL. A raft might be called, in a sense, a derelict.

Mr. HALE. It would not, technically.

Mr. MITCHELL. Technically it would not mean that.

Mr. HALE. No; a derelict is a half-sunken ship.

Mr. MITCHELL. The reason I interfere is, as I have just stated, I am opposed to legislation that will prevent the transfer of timber or logs by rafts on the waters of the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. HALE. I am inclined to think, although I did not listen to the reading of the bill, that it applies to the lanes off the Atlantic and is not confined to the Southern Atlantic. I think the language of the bill is that way. Will the Secretary read the provision which designates the waters upon which the vessel shall operate?

The Secretary read as follows:

Said vessel to be attached to the Navy Department and to be operated for the above-named purpose in the steamship lanes from the North Atlantic coast of the United States to or beyond the eastern limit of the Georges Bank.

Mr. HALE. It would not apply to the Pacific at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. It would not apply to the Pacific at all.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not exactly catch what the Senator from Maine said in reference to the bill which passed the Senate some time ago, having been reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce, but I understood the junior Senator from Maine to say that that bill applied to derelicts in southern waters—on the South Atlantic. While that may be so, my recollection of the bill is that it made no provision for any particular location in which the vessel should act.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator that if this bill passes, then a little conference, in order that all waters of the Atlantic may be covered, can decide which bill shall be pressed in the other House.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not wish the Senator from Maine to understand me as opposing this measure.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. MALLORY. In fact, I am in favor of two vessels, and I said so in committee. But the other bill provides that the vessel shall be under the control and supervision and management of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and this bill provides for a vessel to be under the control and management of the Navy Department. The purpose and object of these vessels are the same in each case; that is, to destroy derelicts. Only this one confines it to the lanes of the trans-Atlantic ships, whereas the other does not confine it to any particular portion of the ocean. It was understood, at least that is my recollection, that she would be used particularly to destroy derelicts found along the Gulf stream.

The point to which I wish to call attention is that I should like to see two vessels. I think two vessels are necessary for this purpose; but if we are going to have two vessels, it strikes me it would be well to put them under the same management and control, rather than to have one under the Navy Department and one under the Department of Labor and Commerce. That point, if I may be permitted to say so, was considered in the Committee on Commerce, and after considerable discussion we thought it better to put the vessel under the Department of Labor and Commerce.

Mr. HALE. Let this bill pass, and then it can be decided under which Department the vessel shall be placed. It is not important which.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS-MARTIAL AT REMOTE NAVAL STATIONS.

The bill (S. 3110) to provide for the convening of general courts-martial at remote naval stations was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the commandant of any naval station beyond the continental limits of the United States may, by express authority of the President, be empowered to convene general courts-martial for the trial of persons under his command.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEOPOLD HERBERT SCHWERIN.

Mr. DRYDEN. I should like to call up the bill (S. 2605) to authorize the appointment of Acting Asst. Surg. Leopold Herbert Schwerin, United States Navy, as an assistant surgeon in the United States Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Let us continue with the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I shall have to object to the request of the Senator from New Jersey. I think we ought to go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Secretary will state the next case on the Calendar.

KALORAMA AVENUE.

The bill (S. 127) authorizing the joining of Kalorama avenue was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, section 1, line 3, to strike out all of the bill after the word "ground" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the extension of Kalorama avenue, as herein provided, such amount thereof shall be assessed, by the jury hereinafter provided for, as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits, against those pieces or parcels of land on each side of said avenue as extended, and also on any or all pieces or parcels of land which will be benefited by the extension of said avenue as said jury may find said pieces or parcels of land will be benefited, and in determining the amounts to be assessed against said pieces or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations of such pieces or parcels of land and the benefits they may severally receive from the extension of said avenue as aforesaid: Provided, That if the aggregate amount of the benefits to be assessed, as determined by said jury pursuant to the provisions hereof, is less than one-half of the amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land condemned, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, in their discretion, reject the award and assessment of said jury and all proceedings hereunder shall be null and void.

SEC. 3. That proceedings to condemn land and assess benefits, as provided for herein, shall be under the provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 11 of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act for the extension of Columbia road east of Thirteenth street, and for other purposes," except that the amounts of money awarded and adjudged to be payable for lands taken under the provisions hereof shall be payable one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That when confirmed by the court the several assessments herein provided to be made shall severally be a lien upon the land assessed, and shall be collected as special improvement taxes in the District of Columbia, and shall be payable as provided in section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902. That said court may allow amendments in form or substance in any petition, process, record, or proceeding, or in the description of the property proposed to be taken, or of property assessed for the benefits whenever such amendments will not interfere with the substantial rights of the parties interested, and any such amendment may be made after as well as before the order or judgment confirming the verdict or award aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $300 is hereby appropriated to provide the necessary funds for the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, one half payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEN V. REED.

The bill (S. 2540) authorizing the appointment of Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill——

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Inasmuch as the appointment is to date from 1898.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that when it comes up again I will be glad to make a full explanation of the reasons why the Naval Committee have reported the bill. A similar bill has twice before been reported, and it passed the Senate at the last session of Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want information as to why the commission is to date back.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would rather not undertake the explanation to-day, not being in good health.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

JOSEPH B. SARGENT.

The bill (S. 351) for the relief of Joseph B. Sargent was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Joseph B. Sargent $583.67, the same being the value of property belonging to him and illegally seized, and for money improperly and unlawfully collected from him as alleged duties and penalties by United States officials at the port of El Paso, Tex.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICARDO IGLESIAS.

The bill (S. 2845) to authorize the appointment of Ricardo Iglesias as a midshipman in the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint Ricardo Iglesias, a graduate of the Naval Academy in the class of 1903, a midshipman in the Navy of the United States, in the line of promotion, to rank at the foot of that class, provided he becomes a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is intended by the bill that this midshipman shall take precedence in rank of all classes subsequent to 1903?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not. I will say that Ricardo Iglesias was appointed by joint resolution of Congress in 1899 as a cadet at the Naval Academy. He comes from one of the first families and one of the leading families of Costa Rica. He is indorsed personally to me by the American minister. He was graduated with honors at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. He is recommended by the Superintendent of the Academy, by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Department for this appointment, upon the condition that he become—of course he is not eligible otherwise—an American citizen. If this bill shall become a law, he will then take his place at the foot of the list, the same as other cadets graduated at the same time.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. PERKINS. He is a bright young man.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I inquired because I did not know whether there had been any midshipmen appointed subsequent to the graduation of that class. If there has been none, then of course he will not take precedence of any one previously appointed.

Mr. PERKINS. None has been appointed since.

Mr. BACON. That is the only purpose of my inquiry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CEMETERY LAND AT CENTRAL CITY, COLO.

The bill (S. 703) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Central City, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out the first paragraph and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to set apart from and out of the mineral lands in Eureka mining district, Gilpin County, State of Colorado (such lands having been heretofore returned to the land office at Central City as mineral lands), a tract of land not exceeding seven acres in extent, to be used by the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Central City, Colo., as a cemetery, and being all that portion of the following-described tract not included in any prior valid claim, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESURVEY OF LANDS IN COLORADO.

The bill (S. 2382) providing for the resurvey of certain townships in Routt and Rio Blanco counties, in the State of Colorado, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF M STREET.

The bill (S. 1635) for the extension of M street east of Bladensburg road, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 3, on page 3, line 5, after the word "act," to insert:

And are hereby reenacted for said purpose: Provided, however, That notwithstanding anything contained in the aforesaid section 8 of said act, the assessments by the jury for benefits for said opening or extension shall be payable in five equal installments, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from and after sixty days after the confirmation of the verdict and award, and in all cases of payments the accounting officers shall take into account the assessment for benefits and the award for damages, and shall pay only such part of said award in respect of any lot as may be in excess of the assessment for benefits against the part of such lot not taken, and there shall be credited on said assessment the amount of said award not in excess of said assessment.

So as to read:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 11 of public act No. 181, approved June 6, 1900, be, and the same are hereby, made applicable to this act, and are hereby reenacted for said purpose: Provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPOSITION AT PORTLAND, OREG.

The bill (S. 276) to provide for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the exploration of the Oregon country by Capts. Meriwether Lewis and William Clark during their expedition from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean in the years 1804, 1805, and 1806; and to authorize a commission representing the United States to hold at the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, a national, international, and oriental exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the rivers, soil, mine, forest, and sea in said State; and to provide and assist in the erection of a memorial building in said city of Portland, to be known as the Lewis and Clark Memorial Building; and to authorize an appropriation for all said purposes, was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the next bill go over.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to move——

Mr. MITCHELL. What suggestion was made about the next bill on the Calendar?

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggested that it might go over for the day.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to taking it up, but I do not think the Senate will be likely to pass it to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is going to be discussed——

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. MITCHELL). Let it go over.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let it go over. I shall insist, however, when we take up the Calendar again that we shall proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Oregon gave notice this morning that he would call it up on the conclusion of the Panama treaty.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall have to object, unless we are to go on and consider down the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] has been trying for a good while to have a bill considered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am in charge of a bill which is in front of us, and if we are to go on any further with bills upon the Calendar, I think it would be better to pursue the regular order.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator state what his bill is?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is Order of Business 293, Senate bill 1553, the second bill ahead.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as the bill in behalf of Liliuokalani is concerned——

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I am sure there will be discussion about that measure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If so, let us have it.

Mr. CULLOM. We do not want to have it to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to withdraw my request that Senate bill 276 shall go over. I did not suppose that the Senator from Oregon wished to press that bill to-day, but as I certainly shall not oppose the bill I do not wish to interpose any objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not wish to proceed with it if there is any disposition to have any extended debate, of course, but I do not think there will be much debate. The bill may be read, and then we can ascertain the sense of the Senate. I ask that the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, line 13, before the word "appointed," to strike out the words "a like number" and insert "one."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the nature of that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment will be again read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But we do not get any right idea of the amendment the way it is stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That said commission, when fully organized under the provisions of this act, shall appoint two of their number to act in conjunction with one appointed by the Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. There are two or three other amendments to be acted on.

Mr. BAILEY. It makes little difference at what point in the course of this proceeding I interpose my objection. I have never seen one of these propositions that a majority of the House, when I was there, or a majority of the Senate, now that I am here, have really believed ought to pass, and yet I have never seen one of them defeated in either House. It is practically certain that this measure is going to pass. Our successors, perhaps, will be celebrating the acquisition of the Philippines, and their successors will probably be celebrating the acquisition of Panama, and they will find other lesser historical events to celebrate.

When they have celebrated everything they can find in the histories written for school children they will probably begin over to celebrate each one of them for a second and a third time, until I venture to say that in less than twenty years there will be serious propositions presented to Congress for the Federal Government to hold annual expositions in certain great cities of this country; and although nobody will believe that it ought to be done a majority will vote to do it.

This, Mr. President, may seem rather an ungracious criticism, but it implies that while we do not always vote for what we consider right in the abstract we are persuaded by peculiar and exceptional circumstances to vote for what, though wrong as a general proposition, is right in the particular case.

I know how difficult it is to resist the persuasion of my friend from Oregon. I am as amenable to those influences as anybody else, and have no pride in thinking myself exempt from the appeals that control other men in matters of this kind. But I am so certain that this is wrong that I must oppose it. I am so certain, however, that my opposition is fruitless that I shall simply content myself with voting against it without further consuming the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment proposed by the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, section 4, line 18, after the word "State," it is proposed to strike out "said two" and insert "one;" in line 19 after the word "and," to strike out "a like number" and insert "one to be appointed; on page 5, line 2, after the word "shall," to strike out "appoint" and insert "select;" in the same line, before the word "member," to strike out "seventh" and insert "fifth;" in line 3, before the word "member," to strike out "seventh" and insert "fifth;" and in line 5, after the words "Secretary of the Treasury," to insert "and in case of failure to agree on such fifth member, then such member shall be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That said commission, when fully organized under the provisions of this act, shall appoint two of their number to act in conjunction with one appointed by the Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair, a corporation organized and existing under the general laws of the State of Oregon, and having its office and principal place of business at Portland, in said State, one to be chosen from the executive committee of said corporation and one to be appointed from the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition Commission of the State of Oregon, to constitute a board of arbitration, to whom all matters of difference arising between said national commission and said company concerning the administration, management, or general supervision of said exposition shall be referred for determination; and in case of the failure of said board of arbitration to agree upon such matters as may be so referred, said board of arbitration shall select a fifth member thereof, such fifth member so agreed upon to be then appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in case of failure to agree on such fifth member, then such member shall be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the decision of said board shall be final in all matters presented to it for consideration and determination.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, section 13, line 22, after the words "Executive Departments," to insert "the Library of Congress;" on page 9, line 16, after the words "Executive Departments," to insert "the Librarian of Congress;" in line 22, after the word "named," to insert "and detailed;" and in line 23, after the words "Executive Departments," to insert "one by the Librarian of Congress;" so as to read:

SEC. 13. That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States, from its Executive Departments, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, such articles and material as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people; and the Bureau of the American Republics is hereby invited to make an exhibit illustrating the resources and international relations of the American Republics, and space in the United States Government building shall be provided for the purpose of said exhibit; and to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit, a board, to be known as the United States Government Board, shall be created, independent of the Commission hereinbefore provided, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the heads of the several Executive Departments, the Librarian of Congress, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics may, respectively, decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit. The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Such board shall be composed of one person to be named and detailed by the head of each Executive Department, one by the Librarian of Congress, one by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, one by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, section 19, line 18, before the word "States," to strike out "the" and insert "several;" in the same line, after the word "States," to strike out "and Territories;" in line 20, before the word "signified," to strike out "officially;" in line 21, before the word "said," to insert "promoting;" on page 17, line 1, after the word "exposition," to strike out "to pay" and insert "including payment of;" in line 8, after the word "buildings," to strike out "and the making and care of its own exhibits at said exposition;" and in line 13, after the word "said," to strike out "Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair" and insert "National Commission;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 19. That whereas the State of Oregon has appropriated $500,000 to assist in holding said exposition and the Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair has created a fund of $400,000, with an additional fund to be raised of $100,000, to assist in holding said exposition, aggregating $1,000,000 raised by the people of the State of Oregon toward the celebration of this epoch in American history; and whereas several States of the United States and several foreign countries have already signified their intention to participate in promoting said exposition, and have appropriated large sums of money to assist in holding same, therefore there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500,000, in addition to the sums hereinbefore appropriated by this act, to aid in carrying forward said exposition, including payment of the salaries of the members and secretary of the Commission herein authorized, and such other necessary expenses as may be incurred by said Commission in the discharge of its duties in connection with said exposition, and to discharge all such other obligations incurred by the Government on account of said exposition, except for the erection of its own buildings, and except the sum appropriated for the erection of the Lewis and Clark Memorial Building, and to provide the contents thereof as hereinbefore authorized. That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said National Commission, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon vouchers to be approved by such National Commission, acting by and through its president and secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, section 20, line 5, after the word "exhibits," to insert "the expense thereof to be paid out of the money hereinbefore appropriated;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. That it is hereby made the especial duty of said national commission to provide a full and complete exhibition at said exposition of the arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil, mine, forest, and other resources of the Territory of Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, and the oriental countries, and to illustrate the commerce of the Pacific Ocean; and to that end the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate any consul, vice-consul, or officer of the military or naval service of the United States to assist said commission in the collection of said exhibits, the expense thereof to be paid out of the money hereinbefore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 17, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 27. That no machinery shall be operated on said exposition grounds on a Sunday for the purpose of display, and all places of amusement within the inclosure of the exposition grounds shall be closed on every Sunday during the period that such exposition shall be held. Provision shall be made by those in charge of the exposition grounds for the holding of devotional exercises and sacred concerts on the grounds on Sundays.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in lieu of it what I send to the desk; and on that amendment I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee as section 27 it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 25. That as a condition precedent to the payment of any and all appropriations made in this act, the corporation in charge of the exposition shall contract with the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the gates closed on Sundays during the entire period of the exposition.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee will not be adopted. I call the attention of the Senate to the amendment reported by the committee, which reads as follows:

SEC. 27. That no machinery shall be operated on said exposition grounds on a Sunday for the purpose of display, and all places of amusement within the inclosure of the exposition grounds shall be closed on every Sunday during the period that such exposition shall be held. Provision shall be made by those in charge of the exposition grounds for the holding of devotional exercises and sacred concerts on the grounds on Sundays.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut reads:

That as a condition precedent to the payment of any and all appropriations made in this act, the corporation in charge of the exposition shall contract with the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the gates closed on Sundays during the entire period of the exposition.

Let me explain our position, Mr. President. You will observe that the committee amendment requires all the machinery to be closed down and all places of amusement to be closed. It provides for religious exercises and sacred concerts being held within the inclosure on Sundays.

This question has been discussed very widely in the city of Portland and throughout the State of Oregon. I was about to say that almost unanimously the people favor the amendment reported by the committee. There are some who are opposed to it, and favor the proposition suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]—a few of the churches; but the churches and religious organizations are divided on the proposition. Quite a number of the leading church societies are strongly in favor of the proposition reported by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I can not quite understand why this Congress shall prescribe that anybody anywhere shall conduct religious exercises. I presume that there are a number of churches in Portland, although I am not justified in presuming that from anything I have ever seen in that country [laughter], but I presume there are, and I presume that both the inhabitants of that city and the visitors there can easily attend their churches, and no doubt they will do so.

I not only am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which proposes to close the gates of this exposition against people who must work six days in the week and would like to take their wives and children and go into that exposition on the seventh day, but I am opposed to inserting into a law of Congress any requirement that anybody shall be compelled to hold religious exercises of any kind.

Mr. LODGE. Is that in the original bill?

Mr. BAILEY. No; but it is in the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the provision the Senator refers to should be stricken out.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope it will be.

Mr. FULTON. We have no objection to that, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe as devoutly as anybody in churches;

I believe in the propriety of religious exercises; but I do not believe they ought to be held under the requirements of Congress.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, we have no objection to that portion of the bill being eliminated if, in the judgment of the Senate, it is deemed wise that that should be done. But I do not think it is required that any particular denomination shall hold devotional exercises at the exposition. It is simply required that the management shall provide that sacred concerts and devotional exercises shall be held; that is, that the opportunity to do so shall be extended to persons who desire to hold them.

I, however, agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that there is no particular reason why this should be required at all. Neither is there any particular reason, in my judgment, why the gates of the exposition should be closed on Sundays or why any portion of the exposition should be closed down, for there are many people who could not attend on any other day. The great body of the laboring people can not attend such places on any other day of the week than Sunday.

There are various good reasons, I think, why certain places of amusement should be closed on that day, because to keep them open would be very objectionable to the great body of the people. I think the places of amusement should be closed; but beyond that I do not think any requirement should be inserted in the bill. I agree with the Senator from Texas as to that.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that places of amusement and the places where people exhibit their wares as a matter of business ought to be closed.

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will move, on line 24, page 21, section 27, in the new section reported by the committee, to strike out the words "devotional exercises and."

Mr. LODGE. Let it all be stricken out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; let it all go out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, if I can get the floor on my amendment, I should like to make some remarks.

Mr. MITCHELL. I propose to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out in line 24, on page 21, the words I have stated, "devotional exercises and;" so as to read:

Provision shall be made by those in charge of the exposition grounds for the holding of sacred concerts on the grounds on Sundays.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, this matter has come up unexpectedly, and so I have not had time to examine the law which provided for the Chicago Exposition and the law which provided for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition; but I desire to say—and I wish that I may have the attention of the Senate—that in the law which provided for the Chicago Exposition a clause similar to that which has been proposed by the committee for the partial closing of this exposition on Sundays was enacted. It was provided that the machinery should not be in operation—I think, perhaps, almost word for word the provision which has been recommended by the committee—but when it came to the St. Louis Exposition, substantially the amendment which I have proposed was offered and was enacted and made a part of that bill. It reads as follows:

That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair.

As to the Chicago Exposition it was provided:

That the Government exhibits at the World's Columbian Exposition shall not be open to the public on Sundays.

This matter was thoroughly and fully discussed in the Senate, Mr. President, at the time we passed the bill for the St. Louis Exposition; and, if I am not mistaken, an amendment similar to that which I have now offered was passed upon a yea-and-nay vote by a very large majority.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I do not venture to challenge the Senator's memory, but I have an idea that that provision was forced in the bill in the House of Representatives and that it was in the bill when it came to the Senate. I am not, however, entirely sure of that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think, Mr. President, that the amendment was offered by my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY]. It was supported by him in a speech, and also by Senator Colquitt, of Georgia. That is my recollection about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the Chicago Exposition. Senator Colquitt was not here when the St. Louis proposition came up.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps I am mistaken about that; but, however that may be, Congress provided in the St. Louis Exposition bill that the gates should not be opened on Sundays; and I think Congress ought not to recede from that proposition.

I do not propose to discuss this matter at length. There is something to be said on both sides of the question; but I think that Congress, once having taken that stand, ought not to recede from it, and I desire to have the yeas and nays upon my amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I am disposed to sermonize on this question, using the particular phase of it which now presents itself as a text. One Senator wants Congress to enact a Sunday-closing law in a State of the Union, and another Senator proposes that we shall have a sacred concert under the auspices and command of the Federal Congress.

Independently of an exposition, no Senator would suggest for a moment that a request or resolution of the Federal Congress proposing either would receive the slightest consideration. But our jurisdiction once attaching by this, as I believe, wrongful application, or, I will say, this unwise application of the public money, then we proceed to provide for religious ceremonies, the observance of the Sabbath, and a number of other things wholly foreign to the province of the Federal Government.

I myself believe that we could safely leave it to the State of Oregon to say whether the exposition shall be opened or closed on Sundays. If they are entitled to this help from the Federal Congress, then it comes with bad grace that the General Government shall take them by the throat and compel them to comply with our requirements, rather than leave them to comply with the requirements of the State that created the corporation which is to hold this exposition.

I do not know just how religiously inclined they are in Oregon, but I take it that the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Texas, if we are fortunate enough to visit the exposition, could manage to get along during our brief stay there under any system which it pleases the people of Oregon to live under all the while.

It looks to me as though the very history of this provision, as traced by the Senator from Connecticut, serves to warn us. We first began at Chicago, providing that there should be no exhibits on Sunday. That matter might have safely been left to the State of Illinois, but Congress in its wisdom took it under its own control.

Mr. LODGE. That provision had reference to the United States Government's exhibits.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it means more than that.

Mr. LODGE. No; I think only the Government exhibits were to be closed.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, so much the worse for that, and so much the stronger my objection now. We proceed along this line for ten years. Then comes the St. Louis appropriation, and then the Congress not only says there shall be no Government exhibits open to inspection on Sundays, but that the gates shall be closed. Then when we reach Portland, in Oregon, in this good year of our Lord 1904, we are confronted with a proposition to require religious exercises and sacred concerts. Thus the matter grows apace, and these local communities, in order to get Federal aid in the shape of money, are submitting their local affairs to the control of the General Government.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think the religious people of this country are looking to Congress to protect their religion. Their religion has grown and spread its blessed teachings all over this land without the aid of the laws of Congress and without even the aid of the legislatures of the several States. The religious sentiment of this country makes no such demand as this upon the American Congress. It does not require—indeed, it will not sanction—a law of Congress that assumes that the people of these communities can not be trusted to spend their Sabbath days in the proper observance of their religious duties.

If you make the fakirs close up their establishments and the merchants and manufacturers discontinue their efforts to sell their wares or even to advertise them—with that much done, then it is a kind of innocent recreation, and I should no more vote to compel them to close the gates upon the toiling population of the city where this exposition is to be held than I would vote to close the gates of the Zoo Park in the city of Washington.

But I presume my views on this question are as obsolete as my views on the appropriation. I presume that these expositions will go on as they have done, still increasing the control of the Federal Government, derived solely and purely through its financial aid. It is not generous, to say the least, to contribute something toward the assistance of this enterprise and then to compel it to submit its control in this regard to the laws of Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. In order to meet the objection of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and I think his objection is well taken, I move another amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee. Commencing with the words "provision shall," in line 22, page 21, section 27, I move to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

Provision shall be made by those in charge of the exposition grounds for the holding of sacred concerts on the grounds on Sundays.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] will prevail, and I presume it will, but I should like to remark here that I think it inappropriate for Congress to enact any legislation in regard to the religious observance of the Sabbath or any other matters pertaining to religion.

It was the most fortunate condition that ever occurred on earth that in the formation of our Constitution religious freedom was ordained. The people of the different colonies came here as believers in the creeds of various denominations. They were very radical in their beliefs, and it was many years before the residents of some of the colonies could even visit the others.

When, finally, the conflict came with Great Britain, the colonists united for the purpose of general defense, and after they had succeeded in the Revolution it was found necessary, in order to preserve the Government, that they should form a Constitution. But so jealous were they of their particular creeds—for there were different creeds in each of the colonies—that they left out any reference to creed in the Constitution and provided that each individual might worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

I believe that idea has done more for liberty, for religion, for progress, and for civilization than any other provision of the Constitution or any other proposition that was ever made in this or any other country.

In traveling through Europe last year and some years before I met people there alluding to our country and the blessing of the principle that here prevails, that all people may worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

I am utterly opposed to assuming any jurisdiction over the consciences of men or regulating their religious principles by the General Government, because our position on that question has permeated the entire world; it is world-wide; it is going on revolutionizing the bad practices of tyranny everywhere, and the people of the whole world long for that glorious privilege. All interference in the matter of religion having been removed from the province of the General Government by common consent in forming the Constitution, I agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and I am old-fashioned enough to wish to have all allusion to Sunday closing or religion left out of the bill, and let the States and local communities regulate such matters as they may see proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How does the text read now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 27. That no machinery shall be operated on said exposition grounds on a Sunday for the purpose of display, and all places of amusement within the inclosure of the exposition grounds shall be closed on every Sunday during the period that such exposition shall be held.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] as a substitute for the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] having been made, of course there is no objection that I can see to going further and adopting the amendment which I have proposed. I do not know what the exposition is going to do on Sunday if no machinery is to be run and if no places of amusement are to be allowed.

If it is intended in good faith to live up to that, then I can not see that there is much occasion for objecting to the amendment which I propose.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will make this suggestion: There is the same objection to closing it entirely, even under the present conditions, that there would be to closing any park. Everything is to be seen. The walks are there, the buildings are there, the grounds are there, and there is very much of the display to be seen, practically just as it would be in the case of a city park. The same argument, I submit, that would require the grounds under these conditions to be closed would require every city park and every museum to be closed on Sunday.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the Constitution recognizes Sunday as a day of rest in that it provides that Sundays shall be excluded from the ten days in which the President may hold a bill before signing, and I think when we are called upon to appropriate large sums of money to one of these exhibitions, we may very well provide that the universal sentiment that one day in seven shall be observed as a day of rest shall be observed with reference to that institution.

Mr. President, the suggestion which has been made that the amendment reported leaves it simply a park has very little significance to my mind. If you will add to it that no admission fee shall be charged on Sunday you might perhaps say that it made the exposition like a city park, but I imagine that that is not the purpose of the amendment or of the managers. If the gates are open and an admission charged we all know that there will be in that inclosure something besides a mere park to be looked at. That, Mr. President, I submit, is begging the question, or to use a very homely but appropriate and significant phrase, it is whipping the devil around a stump.

I do not wish to debate this matter at great length. I was mistaken in supposing that it was the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] which was adopted in the case of the St. Louis Exposition. It was, I believe, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I wish to quote from a speech made by Mr. Dingley in the House of Representatives on the occasion of the consideration of the measure relating to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago. He said:

There are in the first place about 12,000,000 members of Protestant churches in this country, and these have protested by convention, association, synod, conference, or individual churches, almost in a body. The dissidence has been so meager that it has only served to emphasize the unanimity. The evidence is conclusive that the great body of the attendants of these churches also are in sympathy with these protests. Three of the most distinguished Catholic archbishops of the United States—Ireland, Gross, and Riordan—have united in the protest, and voice the feelings of a large proportion of the Catholic Church. Protests have come up to us from every quarter indicating an overwhelming judgment against any step that will lead to converting our Sunday into a continental Sunday.

Why are they opposed? In the brief time allowed me I can only indicate some of the reasons without elaborating them:

1. Because they believe that if so conspicuous an example of the use of Sunday for carrying on a great national and international exposition with an admission fee is set, it will break down the barrier which now prevents theaters and all forms of so-called amusements from opening on Sunday.

2. Because they believe that the opening of the day to public amusements will in due time lead to the use of the day for business and industrial pursuits, and thus destroy Sunday as the rest day of the people. I can not conceive a greater calamity than the addition each week of another day of work and worry to the already overburdened people.

3. Because the opening of the exposition on Sunday will make it necessary for the vast army of employees, attendants, watchmen, and exhibitors of goods, and the employees of railroads, which will run excursion trains Sundays from all points within a hundred miles, to work on Sundays.

4. Because they believe that the preservation of a rest day—one day in seven—is essential to the physical health of man. All experience shows that the man who rests one day in seven maintains better health, lasts longer, and accomplishes more than those who disregard this law of health. The divine command to remember the Sabbath day rests on the physical necessities of man.

5. Because they believe that the separation of one day in seven from the other six, and the keeping of it as a day of freedom from worldly pursuits, tends to that thoughtfulness and introspection which elevates manhood and makes men better citizens. The great peril of our nation to-day is the increasing engrossment of our people in pursuit of selfish objects. Greed is overcoming manliness. Sunday is the one day that stands in the way of the triumph of greed and unscrupulousness.

6. Lastly, but first of all, in the estimation of millions, the Divine injunction to "Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy" is regarded as a command of the Creator, to be obeyed as a religious duty, as well as an injunction which is based on the physical, moral, and spiritual necessities of our nature. And any action by the Government which should trample upon this religious conviction of so large a proportion of our people would be an unnecessary and inexcusable outrage.

Mr. President, I could not, if I occupied an hour's time, state so well the reasons why a provision for Sunday closing should be made.

If the gates are to be open and an admission fee charged, it is useless to say that the exposition will not go on. There is no halfway matter in this business. Either there must be a closing of the gates or there must be an open exhibition, to which an admission fee is charged and in which the people think they get the worth of the admission fees.

As I said before, the Senate and the Congress have once adopted this principle, have once recognized the Sabbath as a day in which the Government should not engage, or, if it contributed its money, should not permit States or incorporations to engage in the amusement business, in the show business. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am hardly willing to let the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] make this purely and only a question of Sabbath observance. If the speech from which he read had been delivered in the legislature of Oregon, then undoubtedly it would have been appropriate. I am sure there is no Senator in this Chamber who desires to give any vote that tends to break down the American Sabbath day. I do not believe there is a man of intelligence, infidel or Christian, who would deny that all the people are better, for the physical reason that has been assigned, after the observance of a day of rest. Surely no Senator who believes in sacred teaching would for one moment tolerate a suggestion to profane the Sabbath.

But the Senator from Connecticut would not venture to incorporate into the permanent records of this body a statement that the Federal Government has any proper concern with the observance of the Sabbath day in any State of this Union. And my objection is that here is a proposition for the General Government to seize the opportunity presented by the aid which it is asked to extend, to project itself into a State and control its purely local regulation.

The Senator from Connecticut does not abhor murder more than I do, and yet I would not agree to incorporate in this bill a provision that the State of Oregon must give a bond or enter into a contract that it will punish any man who happens to commit a felonious homicide on those grounds. The Senator from Connecticut does not believe in the Sabbath day more than I do, and yet I would no more ingraft upon this bill a provision that the exposition company shall contract against violating the Sabbath than I would vote to ingraft upon this bill a provision that it must contract to prosecute murder.

The whole question is outside of and beyond Federal jurisdiction, and there we ought to leave it.

There is no doubt that the Congress can attach to its gift or its appropriation what condition it may please, and then it compels the exposition company to abide by the condition or reject the gift. But that does not relieve the Congress from the imputation of seizing an opportunity to project its authority into a State of this Union to control a local or municipal regulation.

The Senator from Connecticut deserves my thanks for characterizing this whole proposition as one of amusement or entertainment, and if Senators with that characterization of it in their minds can vote for it, then I can readily see that they would not hesitate to attach any kind of condition. If the Federal Government has embarked in the business of furnishing amusement and entertainment to the people of the States, it is small wonder that the Federal Government attempts at the same time to control the local and police regulations of those States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that the United States should not attempt to control the matter of Sunday opening of an exhibition or exposition in a State—in this case the State of Oregon—would be very sound if he had not answered his own contention in this: When the Government is called upon to appropriate so much money and really make it a Government exposition—it is not the State of Oregon exposition—we certainly have the right and ought to attach to the grant such provisions as the Congress thinks ought to be observed in relation to the exposition, whether it be Sunday closing or anything else.

There are various other matters in here upon which we insist on the ground that we are contributing so much money to this exposition. It is to be, as I said, a Government exposition. It can not live without this Government aid. The corporation which has been incorporated in Oregon can not carry it through to successful termination without a large appropriation of money on the part of the Government. And so they come here to us and ask us, really and in fact, to establish a Government show in the State of Oregon. That is it exactly and nothing more. If we are going to do that—and I think it is about time that we stopped doing it, because if we do not there is no end to this matter—we have a right to impose conditions.

I remember when the St. Louis Exposition bill was passed that Senator after Senator rose in his place here and said he would not vote for another appropriation of Government money for such an exposition. And yet we are doing it, and, as the Senator from Texas says, we shall continue to do it.

As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says, it has come to be a matter of industrial promotion. Was not that what the Senator said?

Mr. LODGE. I said it was an industry.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. An industry. I will amend it a little by saying that it is a matter of industrial and amusement promotion. Just the moment one exposition, which has been made possible by aid of Government money, is well under way, a certain set of men, who make that a business, look out some other place in the United States and some other event and proceed immediately to promote the enterprise.

I have not had time to examine this bill, but I see in one provision of it that whereas the corporation has raised $400,000 and intends to raise another hundred thousand, and whereas the city of Portland or the State of Oregon has appropriated $500,000, making a million, therefore the Government is asked to appropriate a million and a half. Then I see in another section that the appropriations referred to are mentioned as two millions and a half. Now, I have not had time——

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Connecticut is entirely wrong. It is very evident he has not examined the bill, because nowhere in the bill is there a statement of two million and a half.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Exactly what is the amount?

Mr. MITCHELL. The amount in the bill as reported unanimously by the committee is $2,125,000; but we propose, a little later on, to strike out the sixteenth section of the bill if we can have permission.

That section provided that $250,000 of the proposed appropriation should be utilized for the purpose of erecting a Lewis and Clark memorial building, which it was thought by a good many people did not belong to a bill of this character. I myself do not think it does. I never favored that provision, and propose, as soon as I can get the floor properly, to move to strike out the sixteenth section, which treats of that subject. That will reduce the amount——

Mr. GALLINGER. Does that leave the Government appropriation a million and a half?

Mr. MITCHELL. One million seven hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was mistaken in saying that in section 25 it is $2,500,000. It is $2,125,000. I think I had a right to suppose that that was the amount we were asked to appropriate, because it was in the bill, and no amendment, as I understood, had been proposed to take out any portion of it.

But let us see about the $1,775,000. When St. Louis came here, I will inquire of the Senator from St. Louis how much the people of St. Louis and the corporation raised before they asked the Government to appropriate $5,000,000?

Mr. COCKRELL. Five million dollars by the citizens of St. Louis and $5,000,000 by the city of St. Louis.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That was $10,000,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was $10,000,000, every dollar of which had to be expended before the corporation, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, had a right to one solitary penny of the five millions we appropriated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There was raised, then, from private and municipal or State sources for the St. Louis Exposition $10,000,000, upon which they came here and asked us to appropriate $5,000,000.

Now, this bill says that the exposition people have raised $500,000 surely and $400,000—that is $900,000—and they hope to raise $100,000 more, and they ask us to appropriate, not, as in the case of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, one-half of what has thus been raised, but nearly twice as much. That is, they have raised a million, if they get the $100,000 which they hope to get—and there is no certainty they will ever get it—and they ask the Government to appropriate $1,775,000.

I submit that never before has there been such an appropriation asked of Congress. In the cases of Buffalo and South Carolina and New Orleans, according to my recollection, the Government appropriation did not exceed the amount which it was shown had been raised by private subscription and by appropriation by the States or cities. I do not know whether the $1,775,000 includes all that the Government is to pay to the commissioners who are appointed and for all the expenses of its own exhibit.

Mr. MITCHELL. It includes the pay of the commissioners and everything. The pay of the commissioners under the bill is to be deducted from any appropriation made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If that be so, we have, then, simply the proposition that the private corporation and the public corporation raising a million dollars come here and ask us to appropriate $1,775,000, and we know perfectly well that this is not the last of it. The experience through which we have just passed with regard to the loan of $4,600,000 to the St. Louis Exposition may well remind us that this is not the whole of the matter.

The amount appropriated by the Government in comparison with the amount raised by citizens and appropriated by the city of Portland or the State of Oregon, as the case may be, is such that it shows that we make this a Government exposition, and to my mind the Government has a perfect right, in appropriating this vast amount of money and in making it a Government exposition, to require an observance of the Sabbath day in the conduct of that exposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut for the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the substitute may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. In place of the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to substitute the following:

SEC. 27. That as a condition precedent to the payment of any and all appropriations made in this act, the corporation in charge of the exposition shall contract with the Secretary of the Treasury to keep the gates closed on Sundays during the entire period of the exposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, simply a word. I do not know how it may be in other sections of the country, but I will say, for the benefit of the Senator from Texas and the Senate itself, that the churches of New England desire this exposition to be closed on the Sabbath day; and, in my opinion, if the gates are not closed on that day it makes very little difference what goes in this bill of a prohibitive nature. The exposition will be practically wide open and it will be an affront to the religious sentiment of this country. For that reason I shall vote for the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut for the amendment of the Committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALGER responded to his name.

Mr. BACON. Will the Chair please state what is the precise question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut, closing the exposition on Sunday.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the substitute be read.

Mr. LODGE. It has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute will again be read.

The Secretary again read the substitute.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire information, if you please. Is it an addition to the committee amendment or a substitute for the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts raises the point of order that a Senator has answered to his name. The roll call will be proceeded with.

Mr. BACON. I am entitled to ask for information at any time.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote, and so I withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I am not advised as to how he would vote, and therefore I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. TALIAFERRO'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I do not know how he would vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). I voted in the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. As he is still absent, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN. It has been suggested that we should transfer pairs so that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] will stand paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], thus liberating the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and myself, so that we may vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

Mr. WARREN. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the negative). Then I will leave my vote stand. It is already recorded.

Mr. LATIMER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I do not see him present in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DRYDEN. I should like to announce that my colleague [Mr. KEAN] is absent from the city.

Mr. MALLORY. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] is paired with my colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO], and this transfer will allow us to vote, if that is agreeable to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Entirely so.

Mr. MALLORY. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT. I vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who I understand is not paired, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator know how he would vote?

Mr. NELSON. If I am correctly informed, he is not paired. He is not here. Neither Senator is here.

Mr. PERKINS. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—29.

So the amendment proposed by Mr. PLATT of Connecticut was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer one more amendment. I move to strike out the sixteenth section of the bill. It is the section providing for a memorial building. Striking out the section does not in any manner disarrange the bill, but it eliminates from the bill all relation to the memorial building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon move to strike out the entire section?

Mr. MITCHELL. The entire section—section 16, on pages 12, 13, 14, and 15 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. On page 3, line 14, I move to strike out "seven," before the word "commissioners," and insert "three."

Mr. MITCHELL. That is, reducing the number of commissioners to three?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 3, line 14, before the word "commissioners," strike out "seven" and insert "three."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment——

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota I think will suggest also an amendment to section 4 of the bill. I do not know that the amendment is essential, but I should like to say one word respecting section 4.

Section 4 seems to providefor a board of arbitration which shall be created for the purpose of settling differences between the United States commission and the Oregon corporation or exposition company.

Section 4 provides:

That said Commission, when fully organized under the provisions of this act, shall appoint two of their number to act in conjunction with one appointed by the Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair, a corporation organized and existing under the general laws of the State of Oregon, and having its office and principal place of business at Portland, in said State, one to be chosen from the executive committee of said corporation, and one to be appointed from the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition Commission of the State of Oregon, to constitute a board of arbitration, to whom all matters of difference arising between said National Commission and said company concerning the administration, management, or general supervision of said exposition shall be referred for determination; and in case of the failure of said board of arbitration to agree upon such matters as may be so referred, said board of arbitration shall select a fifth member thereof, such fifth member so agreed upon to be then appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in case of failure to agree on such fifth member, then such member shall be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota there will be three commissioners, and I understand there are five members of this board of arbitration provided for. It seems to me that this section 4 is not a very important section. There can be but very little to arbitrate between the local exposition company and the Commission appointed by the United States.

Mr. STEWART. What are they to arbitrate?

Mr. ALLISON. They are to arbitrate all differences "arising between said National Commission and said company concerning the administration, management, or general supervision of said exposition." That is the matter that is left to this board of arbitration.

My attention was not called until a few moments ago to this bill and to this nonpartisan commission; and, by the way, it would be rather difficult to have it appointed, it seems to me.

Mr. HOAR. What is meant by a nonpartisan commission?

Mr. ALLISON. I refer the Senator from Massachusetts to the Senator from Oregon. I do not quite understand it myself—

That a nonpartisan commission * * * shall be appointed * * * by the President, etc.

Then the third section provides for the duties of this commission:

That the commissioners so appointed shall be called together by the Secretary of State of the United States, in the city of Portland, State of Oregon, by notice, etc. * * * The said commissioners * * * shall organize by the election of their officers, and they may then, or thereafter, appoint such executive or other committees as may be deemed expedient.

I do not know how many committees they can get out of three commissioners, though I am in perfect sympathy with the Senator from Minnesota as to the number of the members of the commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me a moment, there are really but three commissioners to be appointed now, and in view of certain amendments which relate to the bill there is no necessity for that section at all.

Section 4 of the bill as originally drafted with that section provided that the money appropriated by Congress should be disbursed by the local company, but that has all been changed so that the disbursement of money is absolutely and wholly under the control of the National Commission, which has now been reduced by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to three members. I do not see anything to arbitrate particularly, and therefore I move to strike out that section. Is that satisfactory to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether it is or not. As I read the bill, and I read it only hastily, I do not see anything the Government Commission has to do except to have general supervision over the exposition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And to make a report.

Mr. ALLISON. We passed a similar bill for the St. Louis Exposition, and we provided for the appointment of nine commissioners there. We provided, as is provided here, that the commissioners should be immediately appointed and should receive their compensation beginning with their appointment and continuing six months after the close of the exposition.

It was required—as this bill, I think, requires—that they should have general supervision of the exposition.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call the attention of the Senator to this clause in the nineteenth section, on the seventeenth page, as follows:

That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said National Commission, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon vouchers to be approved by such National Commission, acting by and through its president and secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I had observed in reading the bill hastily that it did provide for the disbursement by seven persons. Now, the disbursement is to be made under the direction of three persons. I do not see anywhere a provision here that the commissioners shall give bond for the faithful performance of their duties or that they will have any particular duties except that of disbursement.

Mr. HOAR. Section 7.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They are to accept a site.

Mr. ALLISON. I will take section 6, to which the Senator called my attention. Section 6 leaves all the important questions——

Mr. HOAR. No; I did not mean to call the Senator's attention to section 6, but to the seventh section.

Mr. ALLISON. I am now on section 6. Section 6 provides:

That the allotment of space for exhibitors, classification of exhibits, plan and scope of the exposition, the appointment of all judges and examiners for the exposition, and the awarding of premiums, if any, shall all be done and performed by the said Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair.

Now, the criticism I make on section 6 is that although we have a national commission that is to disburse these funds this National Commission has no power to indicate the scope and extent of the exposition or to state how much money shall be expended in the construction of buildings or the various expenses necessary in opening up and in the preparation of the exposition.

Mr. HOAR. Just read the first line of section 7.

Mr. ALLISON. All right. It provides:

That after the plans for said exposition shall be prepared by said company and approved by said commission——

Mr. HOAR. "Approved."

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; they have the right of approval—the rules and regulations of said corporation governing rates for entrance and admission fees, or otherwise affecting the rights, privileges, or interests of the exhibitors, or of the public, shall be fixed or established by said company.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. By the corporation.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. That, of course, to some extent gives the commission power; they have the power of approval, but the scope of the exposition is to be determined by the local corporation.

I do not wish to interfere too much with the plans of the people who are organizing this exposition, but what I fear is that we will be placed in precisely the same situation we are now as respects the St. Louis Exposition, namely, that they will prepare a plan and scope for the exposition which will require us hereafter to make expenditures either by way of appropriation or by way of loan to the exposition.

So it seems to me, taking these sections as I have read them hastily, and the general scope of the bill, it is not sufficiently guarded to protect the Government of the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I call the Senator's attention to one matter?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see that these commissioners are to receive any salary.

Mr. MITCHELL. Four thousand dollars.

Mr. SPOONER. That is never omitted.

Mr. ALLISON. They are to receive $4,000, which is to be taken out of the money which we appropriate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In what section is it provided?

Mr. ALLISON. That is very clearly provided for on page 16.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I thought it was very strange if it was omitted.

Mr. ALLISON. Section 17 reads:

That the commissioners appointed by the President under this act shall receive as compensation for their services and expenses the sum of $4,000 each per annum, the same to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury and deducted from any money appropriated for said exposition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I had not observed that. I thought they were to be paid merely their expenses.

Mr. ALLISON. They are to be paid a salary and their expenses, and all that is to be deducted from the amount appropriated in this bill.

The same provision was practically in the act for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. The Secretary of the Treasury, under that provision, deducted $245,000 from the general appropriation made by Congress for the St. Louis Exposition, and he will deduct, of course, from this appropriation enough to pay these commissioners, who are to be three now instead of seven.

Mr. MITCHELL. Twelve thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Twelve thousand dollars a year from now until December, or whatever the month is, in 1906.

Mr. MITCHELL. After they are appointed.

Mr. ALLISON. After they are appointed, and they are to be appointed and must enter upon their duties thirty days after the passage of this act.

Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity to look into this bill very closely, but I believe that it ought to be a little more carefully and fully guarded as respects the interest of the United States, and as respects the safeguards which should be thrown around the expenditure of this money.

The bill does not disclose all that the Government will be called upon to pay. We have provided here for a reasonably elaborate governmental exhibit, which will cost at least $500,000 upon any plan that can be devised on the scope proposed in the bill.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is already appropriated, as I understand it, for the Government building and an elaborate scheme of boards to be composed of members of the different Executive Departments. We have provided for Government exhibits to be transferred from Washington to Portland, Oreg., put in place there, and afterwards returned; which will certainly cost $250,000 more unless it is done with greater economy than is being practiced at St. Louis and was practiced in reference to the Government exhibits at Buffalo.

This bill may be all right, and I make these criticisms with a great deal of hesitation, because I assume it has been carefully considered by the committee having it in charge.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has had a great deal of experience in drawing these bills——

Mr. ALLISON. No, I have not. I have had a good deal of experience in providing for appropriations upon bills drawn by others, or providing appropriations on the ground that the law required it to be done.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from

Iowa just what his understanding is as to the true construction of the word "nonpartisan," in section 2, where it is provided:

That a nonpartisan commission is hereby constituted, to consist of seven commissioners, to be known and designated as the National Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition Commission, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts made that same inquiry of me.

Mr. SPOONER. Does it mean not to belong to any party?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose it means that they shall not belong to any party.

Mr. HOAR. Mugwumps, perhaps.

Mr. SPOONER. They would be of the class of people who hate the Democratic party and do not like the Republican party, who flock together.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suppose it is very good to joke about this matter——

Mr. SPOONER. What is meant by the word "nonpartisan," I will ask the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose what the promoters or writers of this bill—I was not the writer of it—intended when they used the word "nonpartisan" was, when this commission should be appointed, if constituted of five members, that three of them should be from the dominant party and the other two from the next largest party in point of numbers. This is very frequently done in legislation, and I suppose is what was intended here. I presume that is what is meant by a "a nonpartisan commission."

Mr. SPOONER. What they meant is one thing, and what the law means is another.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think a fair construction of that provision would be such as I have stated. If I were President of the United States and a provision for the appointment of a nonpartisan commission consisting of three were brought to me, I should appoint two men from the Republican party and one from the Democratic party.

Mr. SPOONER. What kind of a Democrat?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, a good one.

Mr. SPOONER. Ordinarily where commissions consisting of three members are appointed the provision is that not more than two members of such commissions shall belong to the same political party.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe several provisions in the bill which look to me as though they ought to be more carefully guarded. For instance, the provision respecting the importation of exhibits and the transfer of them from St. Louis to Portland, Oreg. The bill may be carefully and sufficiently guarded in that respect, but I should want to have, if the committee has not already obtained it, the opinion of experts from the Treasury Department on that subject. After this bill shall have been passed and become a law all appropriations, of course, must be made in accordance with its terms.

I see also that the Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to grant to this National Commission and to the local commission the franking privilege, which is to continue until the 31st of December, 1906.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was a similar provision contained in former exposition bills?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not sure, but I do not remember having observed such a provision in any of those bills. This privilege is given to these commissions, and I do not think it has been given to other commissions in former bills.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if that franking privilege would not, under the meaning of that section, be very much more extensive than that which is granted to any official of the United States Government? Our franking privilege is limited to official communications with the various Departments of the Government, etc., but this is absolute and unlimited.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an excellent suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. It shows that we should look more carefully, it seems to me, into the various sections of this bill. I think the bill ought to be amended, certainly to require that the franking privilege should only apply to official printing or communications appertaining directly to the exposition.

There would be a very large amount of printed matter which would be passed through the mails under this provision. I hardly think we ought to grant such an extensive franking privilege as is proposed here.

Mr. MITCHELL. That can be corrected by providing that it shall only apply to official matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but I should greatly prefer to look over this bill a little more carefully before voting on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the bill is acted upon, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the words on page 16, section 19, line 25, "in addition to the sums hereinbefore appropriated by this act." Those sums were contained in section 16, amounting to $400,000, and they were stricken out, I think.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let the word "sums" be stricken out and the word "sum" inserted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ought not the words "in addition to the sums hereinbefore appropriated by this act" to go out entirely? Were not those sums all in section 16?

Mr. MITCHELL. No; $250,000 was in a former section. The word "sums" should be amended by making it singular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, section 19, line 25, before the word "hereinbefore," it is proposed to strike out the word "sums" and insert "sum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend on page 3, section 2, line 13, before the word "commission," by striking out "nonpartisan;" and line 14, after the word "commissioners," by inserting "not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I want to be heard for a moment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. NELSON. One vice, to my mind, in the bill relating to the St. Louis Exposition, was the provision establishing a nonpartisan commission composed of nine members. The bill providing for that commission gave them a salary of $5,000 a year each, $3,000 for a secretary, and $10,000 for expenses, amounting in the aggregate to $58,000 a year. I presume that commission has cost the Government, to come out of the appropriation for the St. Louis Exposition, over $60,000 a year, and it will be three years this next spring, during which time the members of that ornamental commission will have had that salary.

The real work and management of the exposition has been done by the corporation of which Governor Francis is the head. The Government commissioners have now for nearly three years drawn $5,000 salary apiece, $3,000 for their secretary, $10,000 for the expenses of the Commission, and, in addition, their traveling expenses. I do not know what those expenses may be, but I imagine that that Commission has cost the Government at least $60,000 a year. By next spring it will amount to $180,000, and they will probably linger another year and get another year's salary.

While, Mr. President, I am willing to vote aid for these expositions, for I think on the whole they are good, I do not believe we ought to fasten an ornamental commission on this exposition. I should be glad in this instance to have this bill recommitted and to have all the provisions in respect to an ornamental commission eliminated from it, because the real work, as I have said and as the Senator from Iowa has well stated, is done by the corporation in charge of it in Oregon. They are the managers and have to bear the burden of the work. Why should we encumber the exposition with an ornamental commission and have the expenses of that commission deducted from the appropriation? I would much prefer to take the amount of the salary and expenses of that ornamental commission and add it to the appropriation for the benefit of the exposition.

Mr. President, I repeat that I should be glad to see this bill recommitted and to have all the provisions in it relating to this so-called nonpartisan Commission entirely eliminated. I think that was one vice in the bill relating to the St. Louis Exposition. We know how that furnished a lot of places for retiring statesmen, and I do not want this bill to afford the same kind of opening for them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will say, if the Senator will allow me, that the vice, if it was a vice, in the St. Louis bill was in the fact that we did not give the Commission power to supervise the expenditure of the funds. This bill not only creates a commission, but gives it control of every dollar of the fund proposed to be appropriated. The Senator talks about an ornamental commission. We do not propose to have an ornamental commission; but under whose control would the Senator place the money?

Mr. NELSON. I would place it in that body who has the real charge of the exposition, the corporation that manages it and controls it. Then the money that you propose to expend on this ornamental commission would be used for the purposes of the exposition. As it now is, all these Government commissioners will have to do will be to go around, look wise, draw their salaries, and say how the money shall be expended.

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems to me that if the nation is going to make a contribution in aid of this enterprise it ought to control the money that is appropriated for the purpose, and the control should not be given to the local company in Portland.

Mr. ALLISON. Then leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury. I will venture another suggestion to the Senator from Oregon, and that is that this commission shall cease to exist on June 30, 1906.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think there is no objection to that; and I will move that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment is, on page 8, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out "31st day of December" and insert "30th day of June."

I should be glad if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] would point out now, in view of what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has said, exactly the power of this national commission as provided for in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on page 8 has not yet been agreed to. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, section 11, line 7, after the word "the," it is proposed to strike out "31st day of December" and insert "30th day of June."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I should like the Senator from Oregon to give me the information I just requested in regard to the powers of the Commission.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the first place, in section 7 it is provided that after the plans for said exposition shall be prepared by said company they shall be approved by the said Commission. That is clear.

Mr. ALLISON. That is in section 7?

Mr. MITCHELL. Section 7. All of the plans in regard to this exposition are to be approved by the National Commission provided for by this bill.

Then again, later on, the bill provides that all the money appropriated or proposed to be appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of this National Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. What section is that?

Mr. MITCHELL. I can not turn to it just at this moment.

Mr. HOAR. They shall approve or accept.

Mr. MITCHELL. Refusing to approve is to disapprove, I take it.

Mr. ALLISON. The sixth section provides:

That the allotment of space for exhibitors, classification of exhibits, plan and scope of the exposition, the appointment of all judges and examiners for the exposition, and the awarding of premiums, if any—

All these things—

shall all be done and performed by the said Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered to section 2 has not yet been agreed to. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, section 2, line 13, before the word "commission," it is proposed to strike out "nonpartisan;" and after the word "commissioners" insert "not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, to perfect the text of the bill, if the Senator will turn to section 25 he will want to change the amount of the appropriation there made of $2,125,000. It should be, I think, $1,775,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. It should be $1,775,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, section 25, lines 1 and 2, it is proposed to strike out "two million one hundred and twenty-five," and insert "one million seven hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. That the appropriations herein made of $1,775,000 in all shall take effect and become available immediately upon the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to strike out the twenty-sixth section.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the Senator from Connecticut willing to amend that section so as to confine the franking privilege to official communications?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It ought to be amended a good deal more than that. If the bill is going to be recommitted to the committee——

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope it will not be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then it ought to be amended more than it can be by a single suggestion, I think. In the first place, I do not see how Congress can delegate to the Postmaster-General the right to extend the franking privilege to anyone. The bill does not say that this corporation shall enjoy the franking privilege, but that the Postmaster-General may grant to the Commission, under such rules and regulations—I will read the section. It provides:

SEC. 26. That the Postmaster-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to the commission created by this act, and to the president, secretary, and director-general of the Lewis and Clark Centennial and American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair, a corporation, and to such corporation, and to the president and the secretary of the Lewis and Clark centennial exposition commission of the State of Oregon the franking privilege, by means of which the free use of the United States mail until December 31, 1906, shall be enjoyed by said commission, president, secretary, director-general, and corporation aforesaid.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator, in order to complete his statement, permit me to observe that the franking privilege is to be enjoyed not only by this commission, but by the corporation?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Exactly; and I think that if we are going to give the officers of this corporation the use of the franking privilege, it ought to be very carefully guarded, and that Congress itself ought to give it to them, and not authorize the Postmaster-General to do so.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let the section go out. I move to strike out section 26.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 17, section 19, line 12, it is provided:

That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said national commission, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon vouchers to be approved by such national commission, acting by and through its president and secretary.

I see a practical difficulty under this provision. The corporation itself, the State of Oregon, the city of Portland, etc., have contributed to this fund $900,000, and the Government contributes $1,775,000. That must be in some way a common fund for the erection of the exposition buildings. I should think a safer provision would be "that the money hereby appropriated shall be expended by and under the direction of the said national commission, under rules and regulations," etc., because the language now employed would seem to indicate that the commission can only disburse the money upon vouchers approved by them.

Therefore, under this provision as it now stands, they have no control over the expenditures until the voucher period shall have arrived. They can only approve the vouchers.

Mr. FULTON. Then the Senator wishes to strike out the word "disbursed" and to insert "expended?"

Mr. ALLISON. "Expended and disbursed," or some words that will give the national commission the power to supervise the expenditures as they are made from day to day, and not simply the power to approve or disapprove the vouchers as they are presented to them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit to the Senator from Iowa if the provision as it stands does not do that very thing. It reads:

That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said national commission, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury—

That they may do before there are any vouchers—and upon vouchers to be approved by such national commission, acting by and through its president and secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then the Senator will not object to inserting, after the words "shall be," in line 13, the words "expended by and."

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all. There is no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. So that it will be read "shall be expended by and disbursed under the direction of."

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well. That is more specific.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, section 19, line 13, after the words "shall be," it is proposed to insert "expended by and;" so as to read:

That the money hereby appropriated shall be expended by and disbursed under the direction of the said national commission, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the celebration at Portland, Oreg., of the one hundredth anniversary of the exploration of the Oregon country by Capts. Meriwether Lewis and William Clark in the years 1804, 1805, and 1806, and for other purposes."

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the sections may be renumbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The sections will be renumbered so as to run consecutively.

BUILDING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I desire to give notice that after the close of remarks with respect to Colombia and Panama to-morrow, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor, provided it does not interfere with the consideration of any appropriation bill.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, I desire to offer an amendment, in the nature of a modification, to Senate resolution No. 82, which was submitted by me. I will state that the modification I offer is one which strikes out all of the resolution after the word "Colombia," in the sixth line, and in lieu thereof inserts the words which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia, as the author of the resolution, has the right to modify it.

Mr. BACON. I ask that it may be read as it will read when modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution as modified by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. As modified the resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate favor and advise the negotiation, with a view to its ratification, of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia, to the end that there may be peacefully and satisfactorily determined and adjusted all differences between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, with the intent of removing any cause of irritation or conflict, and of restoring the cordial relations heretofore existing between the United States and Colombia, and also of securing the hearty cooperation of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal at Panama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution as modified will be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to: and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 9, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 8, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, we bless Thee for the indissoluble ties which bind Thy children together into one great family, so that when one member suffers the whole body suffers with it. Our hearts touched for the stricken people of the flame-swept city of Baltimore, we pray that the tangible aid and heartfelt sympathy which will be poured out upon them may encourage them to build their homes and business interests anew, that they may go forward even to greater success.

Hear us, we beseech Thee, O God, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of Friday's proceedings was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the urgent deficiency bill be nonconcurred in and that the House ask for a conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the urgent deficiency bill be taken from the Speaker's table, and the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the House ask for a conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I will not delay the consideration of this bill, but I shall not consent to the amendments being disagreed to and its being sent to conference. I shall insist, under Rule XXIII, that these amendments, the subjects-matter of which for the first time have been considered by the House, shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection just for one moment——

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest that by this action the House disagrees to every one of these amendments, and there will be ample opportunity as far as one amendment is concerned—that relating to the St. Louis Exposition—for the House to discuss and vote upon it. The conference committee would in no event agree to that amendment without full discussion on the part of the House and a vote upon it by the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the objection in order that the gentleman from Minnesota may——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make objection to this motion by the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment carrying $4,600,000 may be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the purpose of my objection, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that perhaps his objection would be met if the gentleman from Indiana would simply modify his request and ask that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments except amendment No. 10, and reserve that amendment and ask unanimous consent that that amendment be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That certainly would insure every opportunity for consideration of this amendment and also give opportunity for amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAWNEY. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, and I will also state to the House that in any event the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this amendment propose or intend to propose an amendment to the Senate amendment. There is no disposition to ask for a concurrence in the amendment as it passed. If opportunity is given for consideration, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, of this amendment, which the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has instructed me to present, every opportunity for consideration will be given on that amendment if the gentleman from Indiana will so modify his request as to reserve Senate amendment No. 10 and ask that that amendment be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would feel it my duty to interpose the same objection on that. I do not want it to be considered, where the gag of the previous question can be operated, until after there is fair opportunity for discussing the matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, I do not think, will have any reason to complain of there not being ample time for debate.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no reason why this should not take the ordinary course. It is a very important matter. The rule provides for it, and probably there is no proposition that will come from the Senate this session where this rule ought to be invoked more than on this one.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not yielded the floor to anyone.

The SPEAKER. If this bill takes its course under the rule, it will have to go first to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, the Chair suggests to the gentleman from Indiana, if he so desires and asks unanimous consent, that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That would dispense with the necessity of its going to the Committee on Appropriations and being reported back. If there is objection, it would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations first.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, there is no desire on my part to prevent a full and free discussion as to these amendments. I understand that under the rule, if objection is made, this report would have to go to the Committee on Appropriations and be reported back. I am very sure it would be reported back with the recommendation that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments. So I see no reason why we should go through that form, but go into Committee of the Whole at once. I therefore, Mr. Speaker, ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union at once for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table and be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want the reference to be so made that this particular amendment shall have separate consideration, and I make the parliamentary inquiry whether, under this request, it can have that separate consideration.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the parliamentary inquiry by the gentleman from Iowa, the Chair will say that the bill under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would be precisely as appropriation bills are considered, paragraph by paragraph, as to the Senate amendments.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Before the Chair puts that request, I want to add this: That all the other amendments be disagreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve an objection there before the matter passes over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to have this matter considered——

Mr. TAWNEY. Let the other amendments be nonconcurred in.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I arose and was recognized by the Chair, and withheld my objection in order that the gentleman from Minnesota might be heard. The gentleman from Indiana, as I understood, yielded the floor, and the Chair recognized me to make a statement. I have not yet had that opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may have done so, but the Chair did not undertake to take the gentleman from Indiana from the floor and give new recognition to the gentleman from Georgia. But there can be no trouble about it. The gentleman from Indiana, I have no doubt, is naturally desirous to yield to any gentleman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly; and I yield to the gentleman from Georgia to ask a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want to ask any questions. I am desirous of making a statement.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BARTLETT. A few minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BURKETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana yields to the gentleman from Georgia five minutes, pending which the gentleman from Nebraska desires to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to ask if the matter now pending is by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asked unanimous consent that the bill may be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURKETT. If an objection is interposed, the matter must go to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURKETT. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Nebraska, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I make the following privileged report on House resolution No. 194.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution No. 194.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby requested to send to this House for its information a full report showing respectively the dates when the various suits were instituted, which were reported by him in his communication to this House of date January 13, 1904, in response to the resolution passed by this House on January 11, 1904, calling for information among other things as to how many and what kind of legal proceedings have been instituted by him or under his direction, under the provisions of what is known as the Sherman antitrust law, and the law approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto; and also definite information, in so far as same has not been given in said communication of January 13, 1904, as to the places where said suits are pending, and also as to whether or not he has filed in any of said cases a certificate that in his opinion such cases are of general public importance, so as to give them preference over other business, and if he has filed such certificate in any of said cases what cases he has filed it in, giving the date or dates of filing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

On February 5, 1904:

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia.

FRAUD IN REFERENCE TO INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the House resolution 198, report back in lieu thereof a substitute, and recommend the adoption of the substitute, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney-General of the United States is requested, in so far as in his judgment it is not incompatible with the interests of the public service and will not prejudice any investigations or prosecutions now pending, to send to the House of Representatives, for its information, a full report made by any special examiner or examiners sent by the Department of Justice in the years 1903 or 1904 to the Indian Territory to investigate the charges of corruption made by S. M. Brosius, agent of the Indian Rights Association, or any other person, against several United States court officials in that Territory, in relation to the conduct of said officials in dealing with Indian lands and property rights; and also how many and what were the names of such examiners, and was one Leigh Chalmers one of them, and has he sent to the Department any report by letter or otherwise; if so, send it to the House for its instruction; also send to this House a copy of the instructions given by the Department of Justice to said examiners; and also a statement of all Government officials who are now or have been members of corporations known as "Tribal development or trust companies," and also state whether or not said officials who were members of such companies are now in the employ of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute resolution.

The question was taken; and the substitute resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ANN A. DEVORE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1760) granting a pension to Ann A. Devore, with a House amendment disagreed to.

The amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

AUSTIN ALMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 200) granting an increase of pension to Austin Almy, with a House amendment disagreed to.

The amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

SALE OF RED LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1490) authorizing a sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, be taken from the Union Calendar and considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House, and that the same be made a special continuing order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1490) to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, be taken from the Union Calendar and considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House, under the following conditions: That the same be a special continuing order, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or other privileged matters. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the bill is about before I give my consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would state for the information of the gentleman from New York that it is a bill similar to the one considered by the House a few days ago on the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] if this bill has been reported.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state that it has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this bill a bill similar to those that were passed in regard to North and South Dakota lands?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is similar to the bill passed in regard to the Rosebud and Devils Lake reservations with this exception, that all of the land is sold and none of it is given to the State of Minnesota, inasmuch as the Supreme Court has disposed of that question.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no appropriation in the bill?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; there is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. All the money received from the sale of the land goes to the Indians?

Mr. STEENERSON. It all goes to the Indians; the United States acts simply as trustee for the sale of the land and pays the money over to the Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to making this order, as requested?

Mr. PAYNE. When is the bill to be considered? Does this order take effect at once?

The SPEAKER. Oh, yes; it is to be a special continuing order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

BRIDGES OVER THE MINNESOTA RIVER.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 8160) to declare a portion of the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota not navigable and authorizing the construction of bridges thereon was read with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That permanent, stationary, fixed span bridges may be constructed and maintained over and across so much of the Minnesota River, within the State of Minnesota, as lies between Big Stone Lake, in said State, and the place on said river between the counties of Lesueur and Sibley, in said State, where the same is intersected and crossed by the north line of section No. 25, in township No. 112 north, of range No. 26 west of the fifth principal meridian: Provided, That such bridges shall each have a span not less than 40 feet wide over the main current of the stream, which span shall not be less than 20 feet high in the clear above ordinary low-water stage if constructed at or below the city of Mankato, and not less than 15 feet high in the clear above ordinary low-water stage if constructed above said city of Mankato.

"Any drawbridge now constructed across said river at or above the city of of Lesueur, in said State, and maintained by any municipal or other corporation, may be converted into a fixed span bridge, in conformity with the foregoing provisions.

"SEC. 2. That said bridges and accessory works, when built and constructed under this act and according to the terms and limitations thereof, shall be lawful structures, and said bridges shall be recognized and known as post routes, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to such bridges; and said bridges shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post routes of the United States; and Congress reserves the right at any time to regulate by appropriate legislation the charges over said bridges.

"SEC. 3. That the United States shall have the right of way for such postal telegraph and telephone lines across said bridges as the Government may construct or control.

"SEC. 4. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of bridges across a portion of the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota."

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to know from what committee this bill is reported.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. From the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PAYNE. They have prepared this substitute?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, I prepared it at their suggestion.

Mr. PAYNE. It has met their approval?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to know whether it has met the approval of the War Department?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has, in its present form. The Secretary of War objected to the original form, but suggested this form, and the bill has been amended to comply with his suggestion.

Mr. PAYNE. Then this form is in accordance with the suggestion of the War Department?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment, in the form of a substitute, reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the amendment proposed by the committee to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiences in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill with the amendments will, without objection, be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—whether it is necessary now to reserve points of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No points of order can be made against Senate amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to inquire whether this bill as it comes from the Senate provides for the testing of coal at the St. Louis Exposition by machinery offered to the Government for nothing.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand that there is an amendment on the bill carrying $30,000 for the testing of coal. That amendment, of course, will be subject to discussion when the bill is under consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill with the amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before that motion is put, allow me an inquiry. I suppose if the motion be carried there will be opportunity to vote separately upon each of the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. The matter will be considered in the Committee of the Whole, under the rules of that committee, just as any other bill in a like position.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before we go into the Committee of the Whole, I should like to have some arrangement made in regard to the control of the time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the time be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] and myself. In making this request I will state that as there is an item—I suppose the main item to be discussed—providing an appropriation for the St. Louis World's Fair, the time, I presume, will be equally divided between those who are opposed to that proposition and those who are in favor of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Allow me to ask whether either of these two gentlemen is opposed to that amendment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentlemen in charge would divide the time equally between those opposed to the proposition and those favoring it. It is well to have the time under the control of somebody.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it would be better for us to go into the Committee of the Whole under the ordinary rules. I object to the arrangement proposed.

The motion of Mr. HEMENWAY was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. CURRIER in the chair) for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill with the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask that the Clerk report the first amendment of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following:

"For additional amount to enable the President to cooperate through diplomatic channels with the Governments of Mexico, China, Japan, and other countries, for the purpose set forth in the message of the President and accompanying notes submitted to Congress January 29, 1903, and printed as Senate Document No. 119, second session Fifty-seventh Congress, $25,000; and the Commission appointed for this purpose shall terminate July 1, 1904."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to nonconcur in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in the amendment just read. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the motion is on nonconcurrence——

The CHAIRMAN. That is the motion.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to take the floor in opposition. I will yield such time to the gentleman from Indiana as he desires.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how the gentleman can hold the floor when the Chair was proceeding to put the question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hold the floor by reason of the fact that I am recognized by the Chair and have asked for a vote upon this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE and Mr. HEPBURN. Wait a moment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If there is to be a discussion, I will discuss it first.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to make a motion to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE. And the Chair proceeded to put that motion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. PAYNE. Wait a moment. I am asking the Chair, is not that correct that the Chair commenced to put the motion——

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. When I rose to ask for debate. Now, of course, if the gentleman from Indiana wishes to debate this first, that is all right, but the opposition to this four million six hundred thousand——

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from New York seems to have lost track of what is going on and of the question before the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood all of the Senate amendments were included in the motion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will give attention——

Mr. PAYNE. Before that is done, I submit that general debate on this proposition is in order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, if the Chair pleases——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks general debate is in order, and will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, I simply want to state that as to these amendments not affecting the St. Louis World's Fair we seek to nonconcur. I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York, so that he may understand what is proposed by the committee.

When it comes to the amendment in regard to the St. Louis World's Fair, I hope the committee will have ample time to discuss it. I do not care whether it is one, two, or three hours, or whatever time is necessary; but as to the general Senate amendments upon this bill, I simply seek to get them in conference as promptly as possible, and not waste time all through this bill discussing a matter which ought to be discussed all at one time.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me that if we have general debate upon this bill and upon the amendments, it may result that nobody will object to disagreeing to every Senate amendment except this particular one. After the general debate is concluded we may be able then to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments save this single amendment, and then to take a separate vote upon that. It seems to me it would be better to go on with the general debate. I am as anxious as the gentleman to get through with this bill to-day.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We must proceed in order. An amendment has been read by the Clerk. I have moved to nonconcur in that amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. The Chair has held that general debate is in order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That amendment is numbered 1, and under the rule we have five minutes' debate on each side. As far as I am concerned, I have concluded all of the argument I desire to make upon the first amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is mistaken in the observation he has just made. I think the situation is just this: The Speaker held, in response to a question, that this bill, when reported back, would stand before the committee like any other appropriation bill, would stand upon the same ground, and that Members would have the same rights. Now, if this were an appropriation bill, the first order would be the reading of the bill in extenso and then general debate.

Mr. PAYNE. May I suggest right there that the reading of the bill has never been dispensed with?

Mr. HEPBURN. I was about to say that the reading has not been dispensed with. The Clerk began to read, I suppose under that rule, and having read the first section, the gentleman from Indiana immediately rose.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, well, will the gentleman permit now——

Mr. HEPBURN. I think we did not understand that the bill was being read by paragraphs.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman would prefer to enter into the discussion of the amendments in regard to the St. Louis Exposition now, in place of waiting until we get to that subject,

I have no objection; but I was proceeding upon the theory that we would dispose of the formal amendments first, and after they are disposed of take up the St. Louis amendment. Upon that amendment I hope the committee will have all the time that it wants. If the committee wants to take a week to discuss that subject, I do not care.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will permit me, I suggest that if we pursue that course, then when you reach amendment No. 10 any man may object under the manner in which we are reading the bill now, and the debate would be limited to five minutes on a side.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That can not be, because I have not asked to dispense with the first reading of the bill, because I do not want to cut off general discussion. For that sole purpose I do not ask to dispense with the first reading of the bill; but by proceeding and disposing of the formal amendments, then I will ask that this amendment be passed until we get through with the balance of the amendments, and then we can go back and bring that before the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. There will be no disposition to interfere with the gentleman at all if we can be assured that when we come to amendment No. 10 there will be ample time for discussion of that amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman there has been no request to dispense with the first reading of the bill. We can not limit discussion in the committee. We would have to go to the House to do it. I hope to dispose of the formal amendments first, and then take up this amendment last and discuss it.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering not the bill, but certain Senate amendments to an appropriation bill. The inquiry which I desire to make is whether the same rule applies in the Committee of the Whole with regard to the first reading of the amendments or the same rule as to general debate applies in the Committee of the Whole when you are considering Senate amendments as would apply if we were considering an original appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the bill has not to be read, but that each amendment has to be read, and that there may be general debate on each amendment. If the amendment contains more than one paragraph, it may be considered under the five-minute rule, by paragraph. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If there is no further discussion, I ask for a vote on the motion to nonconcur.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House nonconcur in the first Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 2: In lines 24 and 25 strike out "$2,000" and insert "$3,500."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3: Insert on page 3, line 1:
"For the purchase of two horses for the official use of the Department of State, $500."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee noncur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4: On page 3, line 22, strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be a waste of time to go through the bill reading these separate amendments. I understand there are but two amendments that the committee desires to discuss. One is amendment No. 10 and the other is an amendment providing for the analysis of coal at the St. Louis Exposition. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the committee nonconcur as to all the other amendments, and that their reading be dispensed with, unless there is some other amendment some gentleman desires to discuss.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not being acquainted with the character of the amendments, I think it would be better to read them just as they come in, so that the House may understand them.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee nonconcur in the amendment just read.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 13, insert "for expenses, not salaries, of inspection of consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Department of State, $3,000."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 5, after the word "annum," insert "Consul at Dalny, Manchuria, at the rate of $3,500 per annum."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out "(7) $3,111.27" and insert "$4,569.60."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 11, insert:
"For postage required to prepay matter addressed to Postal Union countries, and for postage for the Treasury Department, for the fiscal year 1903, $481.25."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, after line 10, insert:
"Office of the Treasurer: For the following additional employees for the balance of the fiscal year 1904, namely: For one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; nine expert counters, at the rate of $800 per annum each; one laborer; and one foreman pressman at the rate of $1,500 per annum; in all, $6,025."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read amendment on page 8, after line 18:

Louisiana Purchase Exposition——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that be passed over until the bill is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that this amendment be passed over without prejudice until the reading of the other amendments is completed. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. What is that?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask that this be passed over until the balance of the amendments have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, after line 13, insert:
"Paris exposition: The following provisions of the deficiency appropriation act, approved July 1, 1902, namely: 'To complete the unfinished work of the late United States Commission to the International Exposition at Paris in 1900, and to defray the expenses of distributing the medals and diplomas awarded to exhibitors from the United States, to be expended under the direction of the President, there is hereby appropriated for such purposes such sums of money as have been covered into the Treasury as proceeds derived from the sale of furniture or other property used by the Commission, and to continue available during the fiscal year 1903, $13,875.21,' are hereby further continued and the appropriation made available from the end of said fiscal year 1903 to September 30, 1903."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee nonconcur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN The Chair will call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the printed bill it appears that the amendments are numbered, and hereafter the Clerk will report the amendments by numbers and not by page.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Reimbursement to the Independent Line Steamers, of Tampa, Fla.: To pay the balance due to the Independent Line Steamers, of Tampa, Fla., in full settlement of all claims said steamer line may have against the United States for damages to the steamer Manatee, due to a collision with the U. S. S. Hillsboro in Tampa Bay, Florida, on the night of November 18, 1901, $720.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee nonconcur.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is only one other amendment that any gentleman desires to have discussed besides this amendment, No. 10, and I would suggest if that gentleman will name his amendment perhaps we can nonconcur in all the others except those two, amendment No. 10 and the amendment the gentleman desires to have discussed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will excuse me, the gentleman from Indiana made that request a while ago. There are amendments in here of which none of us have heard and of which we know nothing as to their character. Here is one: "To pay the balance due to the Independent Line Steamers, of Tampa, Fla." etc. We have not heard anything about that, and we would like to have some explanation in regard to some of these amendments.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am asking to nonconcur in them. Of course the gentleman will understand these are Senate amendments that the House seeks to disagree to. I do not know why the Senate put it on, and I have no way of ascertaining until it goes into conference. The gentleman is asking the very question I should ask; why this item is on here I would want to know. As it is now I do not know, it being a Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that, but it is very possible there might be other amendments which upon explanation the House would want to concur in.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If there are, the House will have opportunity later on to pass upon them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I know that——

Mr. HEMENWAY. And all I seek to do, in asking unanimous consent to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments except those the House desires now to discuss, is, of course, that the committee on conference will take up these amendments with the Senate and ask the reason why they have inserted them in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I find here on page 20:

To pay the balance due to the Independent Line Steamers, of Tampa, Fla., in full settlement of all claims said steamer line may have against the United States for damages to the steamer Manatee, due to a collision with the U. S. S. Hillsboro in Tampa Bay, Florida, on the night of November 18, 1901, $720.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That item was before the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and we refused to appropriate for it. It went to the Senate and the Senate put the amendment on. Of course there the judgment of the two committees at least disagreed. The Committee on Appropriations of the House turned the item down, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate put it in, and so the question will come up in conference whether or not the item will be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I just read that because that is one of the matters, for instance, that we would like to have some information upon.

Mr. HEMENWAY. All the way through the bill run these different items, which, of course, the House committee can not give information about because they have not the information.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, upon that matter you could give information, because you had it before your committee.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Of course if the gentleman prefers it, the different amendments will be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 13: In line 20 strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so as to read as follows:

"Treasury building, Washington, D. C., special repairs: For enlarging the present drafting room of the Office of the Supervising Architect, Treasury building, Washington, D. C., in order to furnish additional working space for an increase in the force, including all necessary changes in plumbing, and all changes incident to this work; and for all materials and labor required in the execution of the work, $12,000."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move to nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Baltimore, Md., custom-house: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the property known as the Peabody property, immediately adjacent to the site of said custom-house building, abutting on Water street, Exchange place, and Post-Office avenue, in the city of Baltimore, Md., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use for that purpose the sum of $24,988.81, remaining available from the purchase of the Merchants' National Bank property, together with an amount sufficient to make up the said sum of $75,000, from any money remaining available for the construction of said new custom-house building: Provided, That the total limit of cost of the site and building shall not be increased.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the House nonconcur.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 15: Greensboro, N. C., rent of buildings: For rental of temporary quarters and expenses incident thereto, $2,500.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend that the amendment be not concurred in.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, in the temporary absence from the Hall on committee business, of my colleague [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN], who immediately represents the Greensboro district, I want to say I hope the chairman of the committee will not press the motion to nonconcur.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman that there are many of these amendments to which we formally nonconcur to which we may concur in conference, but it is always safer to nonconcur and take them all in conference.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I just want to take this occasion—I shall not insist upon the matter—to say here I think this appropriation is absolutely necessary. The Government building at Greensboro, N. C., is now undergoing, or is shortly to undergo, repairs and enlargement. The post-office, internal-revenue office, and district and circuit courts are necessarily compelled to have temporary quarters, and provision should be made for it, and I hope the committee of conference will agree to it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an item that came to the Senate after the bill passed the House, and probably has merit, but it is safer to nonconcur.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Would it not be as well to concur in the amendment now?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not, because the House is not informed in regard to it. We have not the recommendation of the Department; that has gone to the Senate, and it is always safer to nonconcur in the amendments. Of course there are many amendments, and I doubt not that this is one of them, where the necessity was shown for them after the bill passed the House. I move, Mr. Chairman, that we nonconcur in this amendment.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I shall not further insist now, as I feel confident the conferees of the House will consent to this item remaining in the bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Los Angeles, Cal., post-office and court-house: For additional amount for enlarging the public building site belonging to the United States, as provided by section 17 of the act approved June 6, 1902, $19,700; but the limit of total cost of site and building shall not be exceeded.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend that the House nonconcur in this amendment.

Mr. McLACHLAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on his motion in regard to this item. It is a very important item, and, as the Committee of the Whole will observe, we do not increase the limit of cost as to the building and site. The facts are that $175,000 was appropriated for this additional site in Los Angeles. A suit for condemnation was brought. Just before this session the jury reported in that case, bringing in a verdict in excess of the limit of the cost of the proposed site of $19,700. The measure of damages was fixed at the time of the beginning of that suit, something like a year ago.

If this fails now, another suit must be brought, and I desire to say that the value of this property has increased enormously, and it will cost the Government from $50,000 to $100,000 more to secure the same property which has been condemned and for which this $19,700 is now provided.

The Department of Justice believes that by securing this additional sum of $19,700 at this time it can then go into court, pay the full award of the jury in the condemnation suit already tried, and take the property, and thereby save to this Government from $50,000 to $100,000. The Secretary of the Treasury wrote a special letter in regard to this matter, urging that this item be included in this bill, and I therefore urge that this amendment will be concurred in by the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, this item, like many others of this class, belongs to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has no place upon an appropriation bill. It seeks to increase the limit made in the passage of a bill for the erection of public building at Los Angeles, Cal. If the Committee on Appropriations is to deal with these questions, then there will be hundreds of such cases to come before that committee. Our committee has no jurisdiction of that business. We are not informed as to the merits of these different items. They belong to another committee, and I hope the House will noncur in this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope also that the House will nonconcur in amendments of this character. This brings up a class of legislation at a time when the House has no time to consider it—when the question can not be looked into deliberately. It carries the jurisdiction of these questions to the wrong committee. And that is not all; it still further encourages a very vicious trend of public legislation; that is, for the Senate to put all manner of legislation upon House appropriation bills. I think the more the House restricts and limits that the better for the cause of economy and the better for the cause of good government generally. I do not know but this is a highly meritorious appropriation, but there is no way now for this committee to find out, nor will there be after the conference report for that matter, and it seems to me that legislation of this sort put upon a general appropriation bill ought to be, as a rule, defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The question was considered; and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Heating apparatus for public buildings: For heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, $125,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings: For vaults, safes, and locks, and repairs to the same for all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, exclusive of personal services, except for work done by contract, $15,000; but of this amount not exceeding $3,000 may be expended for personal services of mechanics and others employed outside of the District of Columbia in making repairs and inspecting work done.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

Legislative expenses, Territory of New Mexico: For stenographer and typewriter in secretary's office, $720.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, amendments numbered 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26 relate to the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in all those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in amendments 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed, in the settlement of the accounts of George W. Baird, major and paymaster, United States Army, and lieutenant-colonel and deputy paymaster-general, United States Army, to allow such credits for payments, not to exceed $679.03, as may be recommended under authority of the Secretary of War by the Paymaster-General of the Army.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 31, in the section relating to the Sherman statue, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of supplies and equipments for use in the construction, maintenance, and repair of the submarine cable lines to Alaska, $7,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, amendments numbered 30, 31, 32, and 33 relate to military affairs in the Military Academy. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in all those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in amendments numbered 30, 31, 32, and 33. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Cavite, P. I.: For extension of construction and repair joiner shop, $2,800.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs of Interior Department and Pension buildings and of the old Post-Office Department building, $3,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to steam fire-engine house and Senate and House stables and for repairs to and paving of floors and courtyards of same, $750.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, amendments numbered 37, 38, and 39 relate to the Government Hospital for the Insane. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in all those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in the amendments numbered 37, 38, and 39. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For the support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, for books and illustrative apparatus, and for general repairs and improvements, $1,500.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Howard University: For urgent repairs and improvements to provide suitable protection against disaster by fire to the buildings of the university, as recommended by the inspector of buildings for the District of Columbia, $2,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying boundaries of Yellowstone National Park: For surveying the northern and western boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park: To supply a deficiency existing in the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, $640.40.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the salary due Franklin Moses as register of the land office at St. Michael, Alaska, from May 31 to July 7, $152.13.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of hearings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in this amendment. I want to say in regard to this amendment that the appropriations which have been carried for the purposes provided for in this amendment have amounted to about $10,000 a year for a great many years; that since the last annual appropriation was made Congress passed a law under which registers and receivers of the land offices are authorized to summon witnesses before them in land cases. This necessarily has resulted in a considerably increased expenditure. The officers of the Land Office were not aware of this increased expenditure, however, at the time when they made up their estimates for this bill for presentation to the committee, owing to the fact that at the beginning of the fiscal year it has been their custom to divide the appropriation among the land offices to be used if needed, and about the middle of the fiscal year to call upon the officers to return the sum unexpended.

Very much to their surprise, when they called upon the land offices a few days ago to return or report upon the unexpended balance they found that owing to the passage of the law under which the Government can now summon witnesses a largely increased expenditure had been incurred, and there were no moneys to be returned. There is no doubt that this amendment should be finally concurred in, but I am of the opinion that the committee of conference should have all of these items to pass on. That being my view of the matter, I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment No. 45 was read, as follows:

In the appropriation, on page 51, "for continuation of the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska," strike out "50" and insert "100," so as to read, "$100,000."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment No. 46 was read, as follows:

For completing the report of the mineral resources of the United States and for completing a roster of all the mines of the United States, past and present, $10,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Unless there is some reason why the gentleman thinks that course ought to be pursued, I submit that as this provision is so intimately connected with the provision immediately following it might be reserved for the action of the House. I submit that suggestion.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has nothing to do with the next item.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it is in the line of the next proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 47 be passed without prejudice.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Amendments 48 and 49 relate to the Fish Commission. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Amendments Nos. 50 and 51 relate to the Department of Justice. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in amendment No. 52.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk proceeded to read amendment No. 53, when

Mr. HEMENWAY said: Mr. Chairman, amendments Nos. 53, 54, 55, and 56 are short amendments relating to the Post-Office Department. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in all these amendments.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Amendments Nos. 57 and 58 relate to the Agricultural Department. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to move that the committee recommend concurrence—a motion which I believe takes precedence.

Mr. HEMENWAY. These items are taken care of in another bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That explanation is satisfactory. I withdraw my motion.

There being no objection, the request of Mr. HEMENWAY that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in amendments Nos. 57 and 58 was agreed to.

Amendment No. 59 was read, as follows:

To pay to John G. Ames the balance due him for compiling the Comprehensive Index to Government Publications from 1881 to 1893, authorized by joint resolution of March 3, 1897, $3,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Amendment No. 60, increasing the appropriation for printing and binding for the Department of the Interior from $42,000 to $59,000, was read.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Amendments numbered 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, and 68 relate to the contingent fund of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in all these amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in amendment numbered 69.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Amendment No. 70 was read, as follows:

For expenses incurred in connection with the taking of testimony in Cuba in claims now pending before the Commission, $5,000; and said Commission is authorized to employ in Cuba one interpreter and translator at a compensation of $200 per month.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in amendments numbered 71, 72, and 73.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Amendment No. 74 was read, as follows:

To pay the audited account of Alonzo P. Turner for pay, transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington volunteers in 1855 and 1856, as per certificate No. 407770, $46.85.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in this amendment.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is probably best to dispose of amendment 47—a short amendment—before we go on to the proposition in regard to the World's Fair. I ask unanimous consent that we go back to amendment 47.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the committee now take up amendment No. 47.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And I move that the House recommend nonconcurrence in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the committee now take up amendment No. 47. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Amendment No. 47 is as follows:

For analyzing and testing at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition the coals and lignites of the United States in order to determine their fuel values and the most economic method for their utilization for different purposes, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, $30,000, to be available until expended: Provided, That all testing machinery and all coal and lignites to be tested shall be contributed without charge to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the committee recommend nonconcurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] five minutes' time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the proposition embodied in the amendment of the Senate, No. 47, is for the analyzing of coal to determine the heating properties of it by having machinery valued at three or four hundred thousand dollars furnished free to the Government, the tests to be made at the St. Louis Exposition, the products of the various coal mines of the United States being furnished to the Geological Survey for the purpose of making the tests, and providing a new appropriation of $30,000.

This proposition embodies several others with which it is well for the Members of the House to be familiar at the start. If tests are to be made by the United States Government of the quality of coal for the coal operators of the country who now have the facilities for the making of these tests, and whose province and duty it is to make their own tests of the coal from their own mines, we should note this new departure of the Government. If pursued, we shall have the pharmacists of the country asking us to test particular drugs; we shall have the inventor of a patent nostrum or medicine asking Congress with equal right to put a governmental O. K. on that nostrum or drug.

The distillers of the country will feel that they have a right to come to Congress asking the Agricultural Department or some other branch of the Government to test for them a particular brand of Old Crow whisky or any other brand of rye or corn whisky. In other words, the Government, when it is asked to make a test of this coal product of the country, is asked to make a departure in governmental province. The coal product is produced by companies that have the money to make their own tests. They are amply able and capable, and they can combine in a trust, if they wish to do so, for the purpose of making tests of their respective coals.

This proposition involves more, as is shown by the St. Louis proposition that comes to us now again, and it was involved in the Buffalo proposition and the Charleston proposition, both of which came back asking appropriations that they expressly promised not to ask. If for two years you divert $30,000 from the Federal Treasury to make these tests, with the $400,000 worth of machinery furnished free to you, you will find these gentlemen coming here at the end of that time asking you to purchase that machinery. Thus it is true you magnify the great Geological Survey branch of the Government, you create new officers and new salaries, but do you ever expect to abolish them hereafter? Vain hope it is, but at the same time you fasten a precedent that will enable all people with all manner of products to come and ask like aid of the Government and a like certificate to their particular products.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Indiana permit an interruption?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Indiana will read the latter part of this amendment he will see that it is expressly provided that all testing machinery and all coal and lignite to be tested shall be contributed without charge to the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is true, that the amendment so provides.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, if the gentleman will read the amendment again he will see that the real purpose of it is to provide $30,000, which would pay the expenses and salaries of the United States employees engaged in the testing.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. As I understand, that is all the Federal Government is asked to do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is right—$30,000 a year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I understand that the reason why the Geological Survey asks that this be done now is because at the St. Louis Exposition there can be assembled fair samples of all the coal and all the lignite in the entire country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The companies not to select the samples, but the Geological Survey men to select their own samples, which are to be donated by the companies and to be sent at the expense of the companies to St. Louis.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The samples for the tests are to be donated.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Geological Survey men go to the mines, select their own samples, and then the companies give them this coal and the companies pay the expense of getting the samples to St. Louis. There they will be tested, with the machinery furnished, under the same climatic conditions as to all of them, so that the comparison of samples and the tests can be perfectly fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman to extend to me five minutes more.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Now, that is true, Mr. Chairman. The Geological Survey asks $30,000 for the ingrafting of a system of testing coal, and we shall use the machinery owned by the coal-mine owners to do this testing.

I warn gentlemen when you find Greeks coming to you bearing figs in their hands. If we give them an appropriation of $30,000 for two years you will find them asking you to make this bureau permanent and continue this force and buy this machinery, just as we find to-day there is an appropriation by an amendment of the Senate asking us to appropriate $4,600,000 to the St. Louis Exposition, when they pledged us solemnly that they would not again come to the House for an appropriation when we gave them before the $5,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Can I rely on the gentleman's indulgence for one moment's interruption?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This very same character of work is being done now by the Geological Survey, except instead of having to have the men at one place to-day they are doing it all over the country and are sending men to all the mines.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And sending men to exploit new mines and new territory, not taking the entire product of established mines, and then testing the samples; but not to any considerable extent has the Government entered even this exploring for new mines and new mine territory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not to any considerable extent, but doing that very work, and the only reason they are not doing it to a considerable extent is because they have not the same machinery and the same climatic conditions at all the mines, so that the tests can not be made under similar conditions, and thus secure efficient work.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But not to the extent of wanting an appropriation in this way. Let me ask the gentleman if the mines have not already the men and the appliances to make these tests, and if they are not doing it, showing the value of the coal, and showing the value of their own property?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is made by the mines, by each mine operating, and therefore the mine will furnish the very best sample that can be furnished by their own mine, and the coal which furnishes the test of the company is an untrue, or at least unfair, test.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How would the gentleman differentiate between the Government making tests of coal property and making tests of a particular drug or a particular brand of whisky by the National Government? Why should not these private parties engaged in this business have their own tests made or have the tests made under the State jurisdiction?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Whisky is not a geological deposit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, no; but how would you differentiate as to the other aspects of the case? When you enter that field there will be no stopping it, and before two years there will be an attempt made for an increase in this work, just the same as there was for the Buffalo and Charleston expositions. There will be an effort made to make this a permanent bureau; and this you will have encouraged by your laws, giving this recognition of it and making precedents in the laws. If it is the policy of the Government to go into the State field and to go into the private industrial field, among men who are able to make trusts, to increase the price of the cost of their products, people who are able to pay for the tests of the samples of their own coal—if you do this you are going to enter upon that field, dangerous to my mind and not justified.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman refers to the ability of the coal miners in different parts of the country to have their coal tested at their own expense.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I mean the coal operators and the owners of mines.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not possible, under this provision, for any man owning coal lands which have not been developed, and who is uninformed as to the quality of the coal, to have a test made that, if satisfactory, might enable him to place his coal lands on the market—one who otherwise could not bear the expense of private tests; and is not the Government test the only really valuable one?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But if you give them this bounty and paternalism the gentleman well knows that in the administration of affairs these people with large interests will all go there and be preferred and get their coal tested, and it is for the purpose of having this made for people who are amply able to make the test for themselves.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not think it would be right and proper for them to do this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if this is not done to prevent monopoly and if it is not done for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not coal briquettes may be made merchantable by the employment of lignite coal? I understand that in almost every State there is lignite coal which is almost valueless at present. If that can be manufactured into briquettes and can come into competition with bituminous and antharcite coal, it would furnish a cheap fuel to the nation and prevent monopoly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand, then, the gentleman agrees with me except as to briquettes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think that this work is of very considerable importance to the people of this country. I think it very well that the people should have some reliable analysis coming from some authoritative and impartial source, and the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken in thinking that this is a new thing. So far as the character of the work is concerned it has been going on already, and the very object of this amendment is that we may be able to carry it further with less expense than it has hitherto been costing, because it follows absolutely, of course, that there will be less expense when all the coals are upon one ground and tested with one sort of machinery at the same time rather than sending the men around all over the country, paying their traveling expenses while going from mine to mine, in order to do the work that is proposed to be done.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I understood the gentleman from Mississippi, he stated a moment ago that the United States Geological Department already has men engaged in this service in various parts of the country, but that it can be done more economically at St. Louis and to greater advantage. Then why not call in those men from the other parts of the country and let them do it at St. Louis under salaries which they are now receiving and without this additional expense?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it would cost an additional expense for these men to be sent out to the fields—to the mines. This $30,000 is supposed to carry all the expense of sending them to St. Louis, and if they were sent to all the various mines and did identically the same work it would possibly cost $200,000. Now, I take it for granted——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Wait a minute. I take it for granted the executive chief, whoever he is, will, wherever men can be spared, from the nonnecessity of doing work in the field, send those men thus spared from the work elsewhere to St. Louis, but they are to be paid certain expenses even at St. Louis, although those expenses are less than the expenses that would have been incurred if they had been sent to the mines themselves.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman an infinitesimal amount of work so far is done as is clearly shown in this short sentence, "while isolated partial tests of coal have been made in America, no such comprehensive series of tests, etc".

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is very true. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no fear of this becoming "permanent," because I have no fear the St. Louis Exposition will become "permanent." There is some very important work to be done in this connection. They are trying to make experiments with lignite, for example, putting it into briquettes to furnish a cheap fuel for the people as a substitute for the higher-priced bituminous and anthracite coal. They think with the machinery at St. Louis they can try that experiment to an issue, whether in a successful or a nonsuccessful manner I do not know.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit? Is the gentleman from Mississippi aware of the fact that tests are now being made commercially all over the West or the Northwest with respect to the subject of lignite?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. The only difficulty in the way of the successful manufacture of briquettes from lignite is the fact that no one has yet discovered a binder that will make the briquettes of sufficient solidity or hardness so that they will stand shipment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is just what the Geological Survey proposes to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, it is the fact that our people interested in the development of this industry have had all the experience of the German Government or the German people in the manufacture of briquettes, and in Germany briquettes are manufactured without any binder at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not lignite. Those are peat briquettes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, peat briquettes and lignite briquettes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not know they were manufacturing them of lignite without a binder.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are manufacturing them on a very large scale.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman desire additional time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was aware of what the gentleman from Minnesota——

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one word, as the gentleman's time has been extended. Two prominent gentlemen in Minneapolis about a year or so ago took with them a mechanical engineer to Germany, and they spent some six or eight months over in Germany investigating this very thing. The gentleman said to me that he thought they could make briquettes successfully if they could get the German machinery, but that the duty on the machinery was so high it would be impossible to do it, and so they are going to undertake, and have undertaken, to make plans and specifications for the machinery here in the United States. They are now being prepared for the building, first, of the machines to manufacture the briquettes from lignite, and then for making them without any binder at all.

I do not see any necessity, as this is being done by private parties, for this appropriation. I think all the investigation the Government could make is being now made by those to whom I have alluded and by others who I know are very largely interested in the development of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the Geological Survey does not agree with the gentleman in the last utterance. The machinery will be at St. Louis, the lignite will be there, the various binding materials proposed will be there, and they wish to illustrate as an object lesson to the entire people, if they can, how to manufacture these briquettes, a substitute for the more expensive fuel. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment 47.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, of course the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi has precedence over a motion to nonconcur, but after this matter has been discussed we would like to have the House pass upon the merits of the case, because we shall feel that the conferees of the House are bound by the action of the House. As to our informal nonconcurrence here in other amendments, where there has been no discussion, naturally the conferees will not feel bound; but where the matter has been discussed and the House has passed upon it the conferees will feel bound to carry out their instructions. Therefore I hope the committee, in voting for this, will understand that they are passing upon the merits of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to discuss this amendment, but since the gentleman from Indiana has made the announcement that the conferees will feel bound by it I feel it my duty to say a few words in favor of the adoption of the amendment. We are engaged in the United States in mining domestic coal, and we have to some extent developed a foreign coal trade. We are supplying ships from foreign ports with coal. The coal trade of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Alabama is attempting to get into the South American market in competition with European coal fields. We have a great many different varieties of coal in this country, from anthracite down to soft bituminous coal and lignite. Our coals are not known like the European coals. Outside of a very few coals in this country, one or two in Pennsylvania and a few in West Virginia, we have no coal that is so well known in the world to-day that you might denominate as a standard coal in the markets of the world. Now, when you are dealing with a foreign country and foreign ships you must have some standard, so that you can know what they are, how much fixed carbon there is in the coal, how much volatile matter there is, so that the captains of the ships may, in order to safely land that coal aboard their ships, determine whether there is any danger of explosion or setting their ships on fire by reason of the volatile matter contained in the coal. Therefore I think it is wise for the best interests of the country that this amendment should be adopted.

The foreign coals in all the great countries have had numerous tests. The foreign competitors in the coal trade have had their coal tested, and they are standard coals known to the shippers and known to the consumers, and when we go into the market with a new coal we have got to have something that can stand behind it. It will be of great benefit to us in the foreign markets to have the United States Government apply a test to the various coals of this country on which we can rely and which we can give to the foregn purchaser and the foreign shipper, showing exactly what he is buying from an official test by the United States Government. For that reason I think it is wise that we should adopt this amendment. I think that the expenditure is the least that we can make to have the test properly made, and as the chairman of the committee has announced that the conferees will feel bound by this vote in conference, I hope the House will adopt the proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman know that we have standard tables containing all these things that are credited throughout the world as much as are the tables of life insurance companies?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no standard test of coal to-day that is satisfactory. The naval board has a test by which they are buying certain coal.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The business interests have tables, and so do the coal operators.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Only business concerns; and one tests coal by one method and one by another process, so that they are not standard.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They have gone into standard tables.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are no standard tables on this question that are official.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They are not by the United States, I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Where are these tables, by whom are they made, and how do they become standard?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, Any man knows who is dealing in coal that there are tables giving the heating qualities, the amount of carbon, etc.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course there are standard tables showing what ought to be in a standard coal, but where are the officials of this Government that publish a standard statement showing what are standard coals?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why, there are those tables, I say.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Name them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, I am not an expert on the matter, but I have referred to those tables and experts have told me about them. I will give the gentleman the statements about it.

Roper is a standard authority, and Haswell and Hawkins. Our Government has its Bureau of Standards furnishing authority, and the Navy Department for years has not been in darkness but has the light, as we all have, of its expert tests of coal, and another authority is Chief Engineer Isherwood. The books and tables are all available. Babcock, Wilcox & Co., of New York and London, under the head of steam, its generation and use, in their book of 1897, give us the "Table of American coal," as follows:

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any lengthy statement in regard to this matter after what has been said, but in so far as my State has a coal area greater than that of the State of Pennsylvania and much of it undeveloped, and that the trouble in developing some of that area has been due to the fact that the public at large has not had accurate information as to the value of those coals, I am very desirous of seeing the House concur in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] made his objection on the basis that the large coal-mine operators had ample money to have all the tests made that were necessary. He overlooked the fact that under this provision a man who has virgin coal lands and has not the capital sufficient to have a test made, nor the machinery, and the place where a test can be made, would have a place where he could have the test made, the accuracy of which will be accepted by the world at large.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And without expense to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. And without expense to him, other than the transportation of his coal to St. Louis. Not only is that true, but, as has been said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], there is this situation existing to-day. Take a sample of coal to any man whom you desire to interest in the development of coal lands and tell him that what you have is a coking coal, and he immediately wants to know what proof there is of that fact. He is not willing to accept a private analysis, and you are brought up immediately with the statement that unless you have some proof to show that this coal is of fine coking quality, equal to the Connellsville coal, which makes a standard coke, you have exceedingly great difficulty in getting him interested at all.

Now, the Connellsville coke is an old established coke, but there is coal in my State superior to the Connellsville coal which today is undeveloped because there has been no method by which its value could be brought to the attention of people desiring to invest in and develop coal lands; and for the paltry sum that is carried in this appropriation to forego the opportunity that this presents to exploit the coal areas of America seems to me to be carrying economy to an absurd point. I hope the House will vote in favor of concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will concur in this Senate amendment. In my own State, a few years ago, the State legislature, at considerable expense, sent its State geologists to Germany for the purpose of endeavoring to ascertain whether or not semibituminous or lignite coal, found in abundance in Texas, could be manufactured advantageously into coal briquettes. In that State, and I suppose the same is true of many other States, there is quite a large territory underlain with lignite and semibituminous coals, which at present can not be used because it air-slacks and becomes coal dust. As I understand the proposition stated in this Senate amendment, the German manufacturers of briquette machinery propose to bring their machinery to St. Louis, so that any locality in the United States having this quality of coal—which coal is now valueless and useless—can ship a carload or more of it to St. Louis and have it tested in this German-made briquette machinery, and it can there be ascertained whether or not, by the purchase of such machinery, the locality shipping the coal can put in a plant of its own, so as to manufacture its coal into briquettes successfully at the mines. Therefore I hope that this amendment will be concurred in. No appropriation, in my judgment, would better subserve the interests of the entire people of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is not an expenditure; this is an investment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly, and an excellent investment, and, in my judgment, no better investment could be made by the people of the United States.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, in some of the States of the Northwest the surface is underlain by very large deposits of lignite. Now, this lignite is not of uniform quality, and it is sought to determine to what extent it can be used profitably for household purposes, for manufacturing, and for the purpose of raising water to irrigate arid lands. While some of it in certain localities can be profitably used, it still remains to be determined to what depth one must go to get the best quality, such as can be used most profitably in all these lines.

Now, these Northwestern States lie midway between the anthracite fields of the East, the bituminous fields of the Central West, and the coal fields of the further West, and coal there brings a higher price—the cost of all kinds is greater than in almost any other part of the country. And the bulk of this lignite is so great as it is found in its natural condition that the freightage on it is excessive—that is to say, it can not be carried beyond certain narrow lines to be sold at a price which will enable the people to use it to advantage. So that while the anthracite coal may have certain standards, and while the bituminous coal may have certain standards, as has been suggested here, there is great necessity for experimental efforts with the lignite obtained in these fields to determine to what extent and within what radius it can be profitably used.

And, further, there is a great necessity for experiment on this lignite to determine whether or not it can be profitably put in the form of briquettes so as to make its use more diversified and more extensive. It is of great importance to the people of the Middle West, so to speak, that these experiments should be made, and the experiments will be beneficial to the whole country. I trust that my amendment may be adopted.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the committee recommend concurrence in amendment No. 47.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, for fear that we may have overlooked some one amendment in this bill I ask unanimous consent that any amendment which has been overlooked be nonconcurred in. I exclude, of course, from this request the amendment in regard to the St. Louis fair.

Mr. OLMSTED. What amendment does the gentleman suspect may have been overlooked?

Mr. HEMENWAY. In running over this bill we may have passed some total which needed correction, or something of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Indiana that he is assured by the Clerk that no amendment has been overlooked.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Clerk is very sure of that—if all the totals are correct—of course it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, when he makes his report to the House, will so report.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, there is only one amendment now pending, I believe—amendment No. 10. I ask that that amendment be reported.

Amendment No. 10 was read, as follows:

Louisiana Purchase Exposition: For the purpose of further aiding in the payment of the cost of the construction, completion, and opening of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, at the city of St. Louis, on or before April 30, 1904, $4,600,000; said sum to paid to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company on the request of the president of said company, and in amounts as follows: One million dollars upon the passage of this act, $1,000,000 during the month of February, $1,000,000 during the month of March, $1,000,000 during the month of April, and $600,000 during the month of May, 1904: Provided, That of said sums, $100,000 shall be paid by said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to, or on the order of, the board of lady managers of said exposition for such purposes as said board of lady managers shall approve and at such times as said board of lady managers shall request the same.

That to insure the application of all said moneys to the purposes for which the same is appropriated, the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a suitable person or persons whose duty it shall be to supervise the disbursement of the same when paid, as herein provided, and to make a full and complete report thereof to him as he may require: Provided further, That the amount hereby appropriated when paid to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, as herein provided, shall constitute an indebtedness of the said company to the Government of the United States and shall be repaid by said company to the Treasury of the United States. That for the purpose of protecting the Government and insuring the repayment of said sum of $4,600,000, the Government shall have a first lien upon the gross receipts of said exposition company from all paid admissions to the grounds of said exposition and from all moneys received from concessions. That before any part of this appropriation is paid, as hereinbefore provided, the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company shall execute, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, an instrument in writing giving and securing to the Government a first lien upon its said gross receipts, and said exposition company shall at the same time guarantee to the Government, under suitable penalties, that the said gross receipts are then entirely free from liens, mortgages, or other incumbrances, and that it will not pledge or in any way incumber or dispose of said receipts so as to injure or affect the right of the Government to first receive therefrom the amount to be returned to the Treasury, as herein provided.

The said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company shall repay into the Treasury of the United States the said sum of $4,600,000, as follows: On the 15th day of June, 1904, said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company shall report to the Secretary of the Treasury in detail the total amount of all said gross receipts received by said company from June 1 to June 15, both inclusive, and 40 per cent of such receipts shall then be paid by said company to the Secretary of the Treasury as a part payment for the loan to said company herein provided for, and after that and during the continuance of said exposition a like report in detail shall be made on the 1st day of each month and upon the 15th day of each month, and in the same manner 40 per cent of the gross receipts of said company shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, as before provided, until the entire amount of $4,600,000 shall have been paid to the Secretary of the Treasury in satisfaction of said loan: Provided further, That if at any time after said exposition company has received the amount hereby appropriated it makes default in the application or in the repayment of said sum, or any part thereof, as herein required, then, and in that case, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to supervise the collection and take possession of all said gross receipts and continue such supervision and possession until the full sum of said $4,600,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided.

In accepting the amount hereby appropriated the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company shall be taken and held to agree to all the terms and conditions upon which the same is made and upon which the same is to be repaid into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That range cattle and halter-broke cattle from all sections of the United States, whether above or below the quarantine line established by the Secretary of Agriculture, may be exhibited at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the Senate amendment; and I will state that I am directed to do so by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

The amendment of Mr. TAWNEY was read, as follows:

Strike out, after the word "shall," in line 11, page 5, of the engrossed copy of the Senate amendments (line 6, page 12, of the printed copy), down to and including the word "loan," in line 21 of said engrossed copy (line 16 of the printed copy), and insert the following:

"At the same time be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury and thereafter, during said exposition, and until said sum of $4,600,000 shall have been fully paid as herein provided, a like detailed report of said gross receipts shall be made by said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company on the 1st and 15th day of each month, and in the same manner and at the same time 40 per cent of said gross receipts shall be paid by said company to said Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1904, and until the said sum of $4,600,000 shall have been fully paid, the said payments on the 15th and 1st day of each and every month of 40 per cent of said gross receipts shall not be less than $500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing on this amendment to the Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] what is the difference between his amendment and the present text of the bill as it comes from the Senate? From the reading I could not catch precisely the difference.

Mr. TAWNEY. I had supposed that the general discussion on this proposition would come on a motion to concur in the Senate amendment as amended. The difference between this amendment and the Senate amendment relates entirely to the repayment of the amount which it is proposed to loan to the exposition company. Under the Senate amendment the exposition company would be required to pay to the Government 40 per cent of their gross receipts, and if at the closing of the exposition the 40 per cent should be found insufficient to pay the entire indebtedness of $4,600,000, then the Government would have to come in with other creditors and participate in the distribution of whatever remaining assets there might be.

The proposition I have submitted requires the company to pay not less than $500,000 on the 15th of July, a like sum on the 1st of August, and so on until the $4,600,000 has been repaid. Now, the Government is to receive 40 per cent of the gross receipts during the month of May and the month of June. It is reasonable to suppose that 40 per cent will at least take care of the $600,000 if the subsequent months will enable them to pay $1,000,000, so that $4,000,000 will have been paid by the 1st of November, thirty days before the closing of the exposition—that is, if the amendment which I propose is adopted.

Mr. BARTLETT. The amendment of the gentleman, I think, applies to the wrong line in the bill. Probably the gentleman prepared it as an amendment to this print, and the amendment is being made to the House bill. I merely wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to that so that he could get it technically correct as to the line to which it applies.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I prepared the amendment to the House print of the urgent deficiency bill, as the Senate amendments are numbered. It is on page 12 where I propose the amendment, after the word "shall," in line 6.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think your amendment read to line 16.

Mr. TAWNEY. Line 6, down to and including the word "loan," in line 16, striking out all of that and substituting what I have sent to the Clerk's desk. It simply makes definite and certain the amount that is to be paid, beginning July 15, every two weeks.

Mr. PAYNE. When is the first payment to be made?

Mr. TAWNEY. The first payment is to be made on the 15th of June, and the second payment on the 1st of July.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear from my friend from Minnesota seriously on the proposition of the Government ever being paid back a cent if we make this loan.

Mr. TAWNEY. When the amendment is agreed to, I shall move to concur in this amendment, and will endeavor to address myself to the merits of the proposition. I understood from gentlemen around me that they had no objection to this amendment, inasmuch as it was adding a further security, or making definite and certain the fact that the Government would receive this money out of the receipts of the exposition.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to know if the commissioners of the exposition favor his amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are in favor of it.

Mr. SULZER. Then I shall favor it and vote for it. I want to do all I can to make this great exposition a success.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Am I mistaken in supposing that the House committee provided that all of the gross gate receipts should be devoted to the repayment of this loan, instead of 40 per cent? I understood that was the House proposition. Am I mistaken in that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The House committee prepared and submitted, at the request of one member of the subcommittee on Appropriations of the Senate, the amendment which is printed here at the beginning of page 1 of the hearings before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Did you offer that as an amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, but it amounts to that. The Senate amendment requires the repayment of this fund at the rate of 40 per cent of the gross receipts from paid admissions and from concessions semimonthly. The amendment which the House committee prepared provided for a lien upon the gross receipts from all paid admissions, and then required the payment of not less than $500,000 semimonthly, beginning on the 1st of July.

The Senate changed that—and the change was made at the instance of the committee, not at the request of the exposition company—and provided that if at any time the gate receipts were not sufficient the Secretary of the Treasury should supervise the collection of the gross receipts. They provided what they thought would be sufficient for the collection of the money. They gave to the Government a lien upon the gross receipts from paid admissions and from concessions, but requiring the repayment of the loan at the rate of 40 per cent of the gross receipts semimonthly, and the making of a detailed statement of the total receipts from all sources.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then, as I understand, the amendment that you drew was less favorable to the exposition than this Senate amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think so.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. You do not offer that now?

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment which I have offered amounts to practically the same thing, because in the amendment originally proposed by the House committee they were required to pay not less than $500,000, beginning on the 1st of July; but this makes the first payment on the 15th of June, so that the payment on the 15th of June and the payment on the 1st of July will equal what under the House amendment would have been the 1st of July payment.

In the amendment the House committee now proposes that after July 1 the payments shall not be less than $500,000; so that if 40 per cent does not equal $500,000, then in that case they will be obliged to pay the balance of the $500,000 out of the 60 per cent. Now, I will say that that must be done every two weeks, and, under the amendment I have offered, by the the 1st of November the entire amount will be paid, and if there is default in the making of any of these payments the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed under this provision to take possession of the gate receipts, to collect the receipts, and to apply them to the payment of this indebtedness.

In order that there may be no question as to whether the exposition has agreed to this proposition and is thereby bound by it, there is an additional provision that in accepting this loan the exposition company shall be taken and held to agree to the conditions upon which the appropriation is made, and upon the terms and conditions upon which this indebtedness is to be repaid to the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand the gentleman, the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, of which the distinguished gentleman is chairman, has passed on the Senate amendment and given its approval to every part of the Senate amendment with the exception of the amendment the gentleman offers, including that portion of the Senate amendment which provides for the exhibition of range and halter-broke cattle above and below the fever line.

Mr. TAWNEY. Every other part of the Senate amendment, including that part referred to by the gentleman, is agreed to by the committee. The amendment I have just offered relates only to the repayment of the money.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it the honest opinion of the gentleman that if this loan shall be made the money will be returned to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the honest opinion of the chairman of the committee, and I think of even those few members of the committee who are opposed to the proposition, that it will be repaid.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). And that judgment is based upon the experience of Chicago. It will be conceded by everybody who knows anything of what has been done at St. Louis in the matter of buildings and grounds that it far surpasses the exposition at Chicago, and it is believed that because we are in a more prosperous period than we were in 1893, when the Chicago exposition was held, the attendance will be very much greater than at Chicago and the receipts necessarily larger.

At Chicago the number of paid admissions was over 21,000,000. The receipts from paid admissions were almost $11,000,000, and in addition to that there were other receipts received by the Chicago Exposition that made the receipts between $16,000,000 and $17,000,000.

To secure the repayment of this loan the Government of the United States has a first lien, not only declared by this act, but the act itself provides that before a dollar of this money shall be paid to the exposition company the exposition company must enter into and execute an instrument in writing, giving to the Government of the United States an express lien upon its gate receipts and receipts from concessions, and in addition to that it must guarantee that they will not dispose of or in any way incumber those receipts so as to interfere with the return of the money to the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman what became of the nearly $17,000,000 of gross receipts of the Chicago Exposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. Five millions of it went to pay the bonds that were issued as a first lien upon the gate receipts. The balance of it went to pay the expenses and debts of that exposition, and between 19 and 20 per cent was paid to the stockholders of the Chicago Exposition. This is shown in their final report.

Mr. HEPBURN. Was any of it paid to the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; and no provision of the law making the appropriation required the repayment to the Government of a dollar of the appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Was there even any possibility of making any return to the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the Government had provided in the original appropriation for the Chicago Exposition, as the Fifty-sixth Congress provided for the original appropriation for the Louisiana Exposition, namely, that the Government should receive one-third of the net receipts, the Government would have received the same percentage that the stockholders received.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much would that have been?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not tell the gentleman. Between 19 and 20 per cent.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Government would have received, under that reduced percentage, about 13 to 14 per cent.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the Government had participated in the final distribution it would have materially reduced the per cent received by the stockholders. That is very manifest.

Now, this amendment makes this an indebtedness. If gentlemen will read the amendment carefully they will see it is hedged about in every possible way for the protection of the Government and to insure the return of this money. It makes it an indebtedness against the exposition company, and to the extent of the gross receipts of the exposition company it makes the Government of the United States a preferred creditor and secures the repayment of the money by making it a lien upon the gross receipts. This is done both by the act and by the contract which the company must execute before they can get a dollar of this money.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the Chicago Exposition borrow money for which bonds were issued upon the gate receipts?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand Chicago borrowed money for which bonds were issued.

Mr. PAYNE. To the amount of $5,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand it was $5,000,000, but I will not be positive.

Mr. PAYNE. And they borrowed from banks and private individuals?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; in 1892.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And that was paid back?

Mr. TAWNEY. And that was paid back.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. As I understand, the gentleman is speaking of this being a good loan. Suppose the receipts did not pay the running expenses and leave this 40 or 60 per cent (I do not know the exact amount, 40 per cent, I understand), what would then be the result? Suppose 60 per cent is given for the management and 40 per cent for the Government loan; I think those were the figures.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKETT. Suppose that 60 per cent left does not run the fair; then how is the Government going to get its money?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the 60 per cent does not run the fair, 40 per cent will not enable the exposition company to pay $500,000 every two weeks, and the Secretary of the Treasury will have to go in and take possession of the total receipts.

Mr. PAYNE. And run the fair?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; simply collect the receipts.

Mr. BURKETT. What I am trying to get at is, What are you going to do with that fair? You say it is sure to come back. This is going to be an expensive proposition; there is to be more ground than in the Chicago Exposition; there are to be more exhibits, and it is to be larger in a great many respects, all of which means greater expense, and it is going to be more extensive than the Chicago Exposition. Now, suppose the expenses are larger than you anticipate and it will take more than the margin you have left to the exposition management, what is the management going to do when we take out this 40 per cent? Congress will not be in session then, and they can not come to Congress and ask for more money, as they have done in the past. What are you going to do in that contingency?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a matter that will address itself to the exposition management, I will respectfully state to the gentleman from Nebraska. It is easy for gentlemen to suppose conditions that will render this exposition an absolute failure, none of which are probable. You can suppose conditions even that will render it such a failure as to be a disgrace to the United States after having invited the nations of the world here to participate in commemorating this great event; but I want to say this to the gentleman from Nebraska, that there are only two conditions, in my judgment, in view of the present prosperous conditions of the country as compared with 1893, there are only two possible conditions—they are not probable, neither of them—that will render it impossible for the Government to get back this money, and that would be a pestilence or a conflagration wiping out the gate receipts and all other receipts entirely, or a failure on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the provisions of this law. These are the only conditions.

Mr. BURKETT. Has there been any other exhibition in our experience that has had 40 per cent profits to turn over to anybody?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the Chicago Exposition had more than that. The Chicago Exposition paid all of its indebtedness.

Mr. BURKETT. According to the gentleman's figures, as I gathered them here, that was not 40 per cent by about 4½ per cent. All they saved out of it was only about 36 per cent, and that is the best return that is on record.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know to what the gentleman refers at all.

Mr. BURKETT. I got the figures from the report somewhere that all the indebtedness and all they paid back to the stockholders only made about 35½ per cent of the total receipts. Therefore it cost more than 60 per cent altogether to manage, and that is the best return on record. It cost more than 60 per cent to run the exposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the gentleman is including the cost of construction.

Mr. BURKETT. This four million and a half that they are asking for is cost of construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman includes in his estimate the cost of construction, and we have already paid fifteen millions for that.

Mr. BURKETT. Is not this for cost of construction?

Mr. TAWNEY. A part of it.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, you are going to pay the running expenses of the exposition and anything more that it may cost to construct it, and pay this back, and you expect to do it with 40 per cent of the profits. I say there is not a fair that ever occurred that paid 40 per cent over and above the cost of construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the Omaha Exposition paid every dollar of its indebtedness and paid 92 per cent back to the stockholders of the amount they had advanced?

Mr. BURKETT. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask the gentleman if the Omaha Exposition did not pay out of its receipts the cost of construction, operating expenses, and then pay back to the stockholders 92 per cent of the total amount they contributed?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; I made that exception when I started out, or I intended to if I did not. But the Government only gave $200,000 to the Omaha Exposition, and the State of Nebraska put in $100,000. It was a little affair, it was not expensive, it was right in the center of the continent, and was exceptionally and liberally patronized. It was the only one that ever paid to that extent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me give the gentleman another example. The first international exposition ever held in the United States, in 1876, when Congress appropriated $1,500,000 as a loan without taking a dollar of security; every dollar of that money was paid back by the Centennial Exposition after all the debts and expenses were paid by the exposition company.

Mr. BURKETT. Was that 40 per cent of it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I don't know whether it was 40 per cent or 60 per cent. I know that after all the indebtedness was paid this money was to be returned, and every dollar of it was returned.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment, till I yield to the gentleman on my left who has been seeking to interrupt me for some time. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Chicago Exposition borrowed $5,000,000 and pledged the gate receipts therefor?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it borrowed that amount in 1892, as I am informed.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Why can not the St. Louis company do that without appealing to Congress?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is just what the St. Louis people are trying to do. I will endeavor to answer the gentleman further later on, after I have yielded to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much has the Governmant up to this time advanced to the exposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. We appropriated $5,000,000 by the act of March 3, 1901.

Mr. HEPBURN. To be returned?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. HEPBURN. What were the terms of that grant?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state. Section 19 of the act of March 3, 1901, is the section that appropriated the $5,000,000, and for the information of the committee I will read the condition upon which that appropriation was made. The gentleman from Iowa and others will recollect that in the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, Congress enacted a law stating that when St. Louis or the exposition management had raised to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury the sum of $10,000,000, that then the Government would appropriate $5,000,000 to aid in building and carrying on the exposition.

In the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which convened in December, 1900, the people from St. Louis came on here with a certificate to the effect that they had raised this sum of $10,000,000. The city of St. Louis voted $5,000,000, and the citizens of St. Louis and other parts of the Louisiana purchase territory had contributed five millions more. The mayor and the city officials certified to these facts. But that was not sufficient for the Secretary of the Treasury. He wanted to know whether the contributions were valid, whether the parties making them were able to fulfill and carry out the contribution contracts, and therefore he had the gentleman in charge of the subtreasury and the United States district attorney in St. Louis go over all the evidence, both as to the legality of the action of the city council and as to the validity of these contracts and as to the financial responsibility of the men who had subscribed to this fund. He then certified to the Fifty-sixth Congress, and that is the reason for the language with which this section begins:

SEC. 19. That whereas the Secretary of the Treasury has certified, under date of February 6, 1901, that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company has presented to him proof to his satisfaction that it has raised $10,000,000 for and on account of inaugurating and carrying forward an exposition at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the year 1903, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory; therefore, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 to aid in carrying forward such exposition, to pay the salaries of the members and secretary of the national Commission herein authorized, and such other necessary expenses as may be incurred by said commission in the discharge of its duties in connection with said exposition; and to discharge all other obligations incurred by the Government on account of said exposition, except for the erection of its own buildings and the making and care of its own exhibits at said exposition.

That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon vouchers to be approved by him: Provided, That, except for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the National Commission, no part of said appropriation shall become available until the sum of $10,000,000 shall have been expended by said company on account of said exposition to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That all sums expended by the Government on account of said exposition, including the salaries and expenses of said National Commission, except for the erection of its own buildings and the making and care of its own exhibits at said exposition, shall be limited to and paid out of the appropriation of $5,000,000 herein provided for such purpose.

Now, under that provision the expense of the National Commission was paid. The salaries of nine National Commissioners were paid out of this appropriation of $5,000,000, as well as the salary of the secretary of the Commission. Then there is a provision allowing $10,000 annually for contingent expenses, for office rent, and for other incidental expenses connected with the business of the National Commission. All of that has come out. The life of the Commission extends, I think, from March, 1901, to the 1st of July, 1905. The nine commissioners are paid each at the rate of $5,000 a year, and the gentleman can estimate about how much will be necessary to expend for that item out of the $5,000,000, none of which goes to the construction of the exposition or to its opening or to its operation.

If my memory serves me right, these amounts aggregate in the neighborhood of $249,000 or $250,000. That comes out of that $5,000,000 appropriation. In addition to that the governor-general of the Philippines, now Mr. Secretary of War Taft, when he was here in 1901, proposed to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company that if they would pay out of their treasury $100,000 the Philippine government would appropriate $500,000 to defray the expense of that magnificent Philippine exhibit, which will excel, perhaps, any other exhibit in the exposition. Subsequent to that came the rinderpest and the plague. Governor Taft then notified the exposition company that they could not raise the $500,000 and asked the company for a further contribution from its treasury of $100,000, and the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company appropriated that additional sum, making in all $200,000, which goes to help make the Philippine exhibit. Of that there has been taken out now, I think, $164,000, and that which remains must come out of the $5,000,000 appropriation.

In addition to that, the Fifty-seventh Congress authorized the payment of $250,000 of this $5,000,000 in souvenir gold coins of $1 each. On one side was the head of McKinley and on the side of another set of these coins is the head of Jefferson. That $250,000 in gold coin has been turned over to the exposition management. At that time there were no gold dollar coins to be had anywhere, and it was the judgment of everybody that that coin would sell readily for not less than $3. The price was fixed at $3, and they have not been able up to the present time to dispose of more than $14,000 of them at that price, but having entered into a contract with those that did purchase at $3 each that they would sell for no less, they are not disposing of them for any less, and can ont do so. That $236,000 is available as collateral, but that is all they are worth at the present time, unless they want to pay them out for labor or on contracts.

As a matter of fact, it will be seen that for the purpose of constructing the exposition and opening the same the exposition company has received about $4,250,000. Now, the Government expressly excepted, in the act making the original appropriation, the expense of building its own building and of making its own exhibit, and in the Fifty-seventh Congress we appropriated money for the erection of the building and for the purpose of defraying the expense of the Government exhibit. In addition to that we also appropriated $40,000 for an Indian exhibit. We appropriated $50,000 to aid the Territory of Alaska in making its exhibit. We appropriated $25,000 to aid the people of the Indian Territory in making their exhibit. So that the total amount or total cost of the Government building and the Government exhibit, including these appropriations for Territories, amounts, if my memory serves me right, to a sum between $1,400,000 and $1,500,000. That will answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. PAYNE. That is in addition to the $5,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand the gentleman to say that there was no pledge, no obligation for the return of this $5,000,000 or any part of it. Was it not always discussed here as a loan, and did not every advocate of that appropriation speak of it in that way?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read the section——

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the gentleman. He was here at the time and is absolutely familiar with the circumstances.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is the condition, to be exact, upon which the appropriation was made, and the gentleman can call it a loan or he can call it an absolute appropriation. This is the condition upon which the appropriation was made—viz, that if there was one dollar of net receipts, the Government of the United States would get 33⅓ per cent of that dollar, the city of St. Louis would get 33⅓ per cent, and the contributors to the $5,000,000 fund would get the other 33⅓ per cent. Section 20 provides that there shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States the same proportionate amount of the dollar given by the United States as shall be repaid to either the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company or the city of St. Louis, provided that this section shall not be taken or construed to give the United States a right to share in the proceeds of said exposition beyond the actual amount appropriated to aid in carrying forward said exposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Was it not also expressly understood at that time that that $5,000,000 gift of the Government to the exposition was all that the Government was to be called upon to give? Was not that expressly stated on this floor?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was—not in that language.

Mr. DALZELL. In substance, was not the pledge made on the floor of the House that if that sum of $5,000,000 was given to the exposition the Government would never be called upon to contribute another dollar; and was there not a provision put in the law excluding the idea that the United States should ever be called upon to contribute anything more?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know of any such provision in the act.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I will call the gentleman's attention to the language, if he will allow me, in order to avoid any trouble on this subject, for we all recollect that Congress has had some considerable experience in this industry that has grown up in the United States—of having expositions. We recollect how we had to pay out $500,000 to pay the debts of the Buffalo Exposition upon the ground——

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the gentleman's question? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. All right. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this provision in the act:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States——

Mr. TAWNEY. I was coming to that.

Mr. DALZELL (continuing to read):

direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States, in settlement or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am glad that the gentleman has called my attention——

Mr. DALZELL. I will ask the gentleman now, just for the purpose of getting his views on the subject, whether or not he does not consider this application now made to Congress for this additional aid to be a violation of the pledge made on the floor of the House and in the act itself?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that I do not; and I do not think the gentleman himself, good lawyer as he is, would make any claim of that kind. He knows this is not an application for an additional appropriation, but merely for the use of a certain amount of money on condition that it be repaid and upon security that will insure its return.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If my colleague will allow me a moment, I should like to ask him whether it is not estimated that the 40 per cent here referred to will yield something like six and a half million dollars——

Mr. TAWNEY. Over eight million.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. While this loan amounts to only four and one-half million.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say in answer to my colleague that the estimate given to the committee—and I think the reasonableness of it will appeal to any man who reads the hearings before our committee—was that 40 per cent will amount to not less than $8,000,000. Calculated on the basis of the gross receipts at the city of Chicago it would be over six million.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And your judgment is that the attendance at St. Louis, by reason of its climatic conditions, will be more uniform and steady, and therefore larger throughout the period of the exposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the judgment of the committee, and there is another reason, too, for that judgment in addition to the reason stated by my colleague—the fact that there will be no cold spring or cold fall at St. Louis and that the exposition will continue until December 1. If you draw a circle around the city of St. Louis, 500 miles in diameter, you will find that you have a much larger population, almost three times, certainly twice as large a population as if you should draw a similar circle around the city of Chicago, because to the north of Chicago you have nothing but water or waste. The city of St. Louis has in the territory surrounding it a much larger population than the city of Chicago in a corresponding expanse of territory. In addition to that there is the enormous increase in population in the Southwestern States and Territories since 1893.

More than that, in 1893 the Southern States did not participate to any great extent in the Chicago Exposition, and their people did not attend to any great extent because of the hard times then prevailing. To-day that section of our country—happily for all of us and for them—is in a more prosperous condition than it has been for a great many years, if not ever before. So that there is every reason to believe that the attendance at St. Louis will be much greater than it was at Chicago.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. So that it would not require 40 per cent? The thing that the committee and the House are concerned in is the certainty of the return of this money. Now, referring to the experience in Chicago, I understand my colleague to assert—and of course since he asserts it it must be so—that Chicago was able not only to pay $5,000,000 of a loan—a larger amount than this loan—but to return to the contributors 19 per cent of their contributions. Now, the query is, If Chicago with her attendance was able to pay $5,000,000 of a loan and 19 per cent of the contributions, why will not this company be able to pay four and one-half million dollars, since there is no further obligation to be paid by the stockholders?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that anyone who will take the trouble to go through the hearings and study the proposition as to the population and attendance will agree that the Government is secure, and I am sure there is not a man on the committee who has studied this subject who is not satisfied that the security is ample to insure the repayment of this money. The objections made to the proposition are objections on constitutional, not other, grounds.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman state what the present indebtedness of the exposition company is, and how it is secured?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not state the amount of the present indebtedness of the company. Of course they have outstanding contracts on the buildings that are not quite completed, and buildings that have been completed but have not been accepted. It is estimated, however, by Governor Francis, who is at the head of the exposition, and by Mr. Thompson, who is the treasurer and chairman of the executive committee, that this $4,600,000 will pay all of the cost of completing the exposition and the expense incident to the opening of the same and operating it until the gate receipts are ample for that purpose.

Mr. FINLEY. How is the indebtedness secured?

Mr. TAWNEY. The outstanding indebtedness of the company is not secured at all. There is no lien of any kind on any of the property, and I am authorized to repeat what the chairman of the exposition company said to the Senate committee. When they spoke about giving a lien upon the buildings, the reply was that they would be perfectly willing to do it provided in case of default the Government would pay for removing the buildings. Under its contract with the city of St. Louis that has donated the use of the beautiful Forest Park of that city the exposition company must pay for the removal or must remove the buildings.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that the gate receipts are not mortgaged or liened at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all. Not only that, if the gentleman will pardon me, but this amendment provides that before a dollar of the money is paid to the exposition company that company must enter into a written contract with the Government of the United States not only securing this loan by an express lien which can be filed there and which will meet the requirements of the local law, but they must also stipulate in that contract, under suitable penalties, that they will not appropriate or use or divert the receipts or encumber them in any way, by mortgage or otherwise, so as to interfere in any way with the right of the Government to receive the same in payment of its loan.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I believe you hold to the proposition that the security is ample?

Mr. TAWNEY. As I said before, I think the security is ample. There are only two conditions that might happen that would interfere. One would be the destruction of the exposition so that there will be no receipts or a failure on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the law.

Mr. FINLEY. I think the gentleman said something a moment ago in reference to the gate receipts at Chicago. Now, no loan was ever made by Congress to the Chicago Exposition on the basis of gate receipts, I believe.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; there was a direct appropriation in aid of that exposition.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the gentleman estimates that the gate receipts will approximate something like $20,000,000. Am I correct?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the total receipts.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, would not the security be ample, so that the exposition company could go to a trust company or bank and make the loan of them?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think, if the gentleman will take the trouble to look through these hearings, he will readily see why it is far better, on account of financial conditions in certain quarters, for the Government to use $4,600,000 of the $158,000,000 now in the banks, yielding the Government no income whatever, for the purpose of completing and opening this exposition which it has authorized—that it is better to take that $4,600,000 out of the surplus and apply it to this purpose and use it for three months and put it back into the Treasury than it would be to jeopardize the business interests of any of the commercial or great business centers of the country from which this money must otherwise be drawn.

Mr. FINLEY. Even on that proposition can not the Secretary of the Treasury designate the banks in St. Louis, and deposit money there to the amount of $4,600,000 without Congress making this loan?

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume he could, but it might subject him to criticism on the ground that he was discriminating in favor of those banks as against others. The gentleman is aware, I suppose, that the Secretary of the Treasury has made a call on all the banks for this proposed loan and the amount to meet the Panama Canal payments.

Mr. FINLEY. I am aware of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. And among others he has made a call on the banks of St. Louis to the extent of three million.

Mr. FINLEY. Has he not funds with which he can continue to make these deposits?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether there is sufficient surplus to enable the loaning of public money to national banks without interest, which method of loaning the public money is approved by some people who seem very much opposed to loaning the amount necessary to insure the success of the greatest exposition the world will ever see—one, too, it has authorized and invited the world to participate in making a grand success.

Mr. FINLEY. In all cases where loans are made on national bonds and ample security, United States bonds?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. I merely wanted to get the gentleman's opinion on this point.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the opinion of the committee the security for the return of this money is ample.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman any better reason for not requiring the company to borrow the money from people who are in the business of loaning money?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to discuss the matter in full. I was simply answering the gentleman's question. I do not think that any statement that I could make would be satisfactory to the gentleman from New York in relation to this particular subject. Nor do I think the gentleman would think it reasonable or a businesslike arrangement.

Mr. PAYNE. It would be satisfactory if a businesslike reason.

Mr. TAWNEY. I started out to discuss the proposition, and my time has all been taken up by answering questions in regard to the details of the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. For some information. Of course, there will be some debts against this concern. Is not that true?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me to what extent?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir. I answered that a moment ago. I can not say to what extent there are obligations. I do not know that there are any due and payable. I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Please tell me what legal process or resort can be had by which those debts already existing can be postponed and the rights of the Government substituted or preferred by reason of this act of Congress. Are the receipts of this concern pledged for the debts at this time?

Mr. TAWNEY. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that the object of this loan is to pay those obligations, and under the terms of this amendment it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to see that the money is applied to the purpose for which it is appropriated. That will wipe out any indebtedness for construction or for labor and material.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Has it got as much as $4,600,000 indebtedness at this time?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; it has not.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then, why do you want $4,600,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. The exposition is not completed, and there is yet ninety days in which the necessary remaining construction must be completed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Do you mean to say that at that time it will be $4,600,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentlemen in charge of the exposition have told the chairman of the Senate committee and have told the House committee that $4,500,000 would be sufficient to complete the exposition and would meet the obligations. So that the Congress of the United States might be satisfied that there was ample security of getting the money back, and in order to insure the application of the money to the purposes for which it is appropriated, the Secretary of the Treasury is given jurisdiction over the disbursements of this money, so that there is no possible ground for fear of the Government losing by reason of any existing contract at this time or any contract that may exist in the future, because before the money is paid a lien is filed upon the gross receipts of the exposition company.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Has any effort been made to secure this money from banking institutions, and have they not been able to get it on account of the lack of security?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not able to answer the question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The hearings before your committee do not disclose that?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have here the hearings on that question.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman asked if that application had been made for the loan elsewhere.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, I have the answer to that. Mr. Thompson, the secretary, says that they never contemplated any other way of raising the money except by pledging their receipts; and Mr. Francis said that they had not considered any other way than applying to the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman from Massachusetts will understand very well that to come to Congress for legislation of this character and admit that application for a loan had been made elsewhere and refused would be a very good reason why Congress should not make it, if private individuals were not willing to make it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word in conclusion. I will say that under the terms of this amendment we now propose I want this committee to keep these facts in mind: First, the appropriation is made. Second, to insure the application of the money appropriated to the purpose for which it is appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury is given jurisdiction over the disbursements of the money. Third, it is declared to be a lien on the gross receipts of the exposition, which at Chicago aggregated more than $16,000,000. Fourth, before any of this money can be paid the exposition company must execute an instrument in writing securing to the Government of the United States a lien and a guaranty that it will under no condition encumber this security so as to interfere with the right of the Government to enforce the lien for the collection of the debt. Then it is provided that this money shall be repaid at the Treasury of the United States, beginning on the 15th day of June, by filing a detailed statement of the gross receipts and make a payment of 40 per cent of those gross receipts to apply on this loan. On the 1st of July the same is to be done, and on the 15th of July not less than $500,000 must be paid, whether 40 per cent of the gate receipts aggregate that amount or not, and thereafter on the 1st and 15th of every month until the 1st of November not less than $500,000, when the full amount of the loan will be paid.

Now, if the exposition company makes default in the application of any of this money, or applies it to any purpose for which it is not appropriated, that would constitute a default, declared so by this act, and it would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to take possession of the gates and collect the total receipts and apply them to the payment of this indebtedness. On the other hand, if they make default at any time in the repayment of this money, the Secretary is authorized, and it is made his duty, to do the same thing. Then, in addition and as a double security, so that there can be no legal question about the exposition company having agreed to this, we make it a condition precedent that they shall agree to it, and in accepting this money they are to be held and construed to have agreed to all the conditions upon which the appropriation is made, and all the conditions upon which it is to be returned to the Treasury of the United States.

Now, this proposition to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the territory of Louisiana did not originate in the city of St. Louis. At a convention held in that city in 1899, attended by representative men appointed by the governors of the several States carved out of the Louisiana territory, it was decided to commemorate that event, the first and greatest international event in the history of the United States, by holding an exposition, and the city of St. Louis, being the metropolis of that great territory, was designated as the place. The people of St. Louis and the people inhabiting the territory of the Louisiana purchase have not started out on this proposition with any idea of commercial advantage or commercial profit—none whatever.

They were actuated by a sense of duty, of patriotic duty, to the forefathers of this country, through whose sagacity and wisdom it became possible for the Government of the United States to acquire and possess this territory, thus making it also possible for the Government of the United States to become in less than one hundred years from the date of that purchase the greatest people and one of the greatest governments on the face of the globe. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the committee should not consider this matter from the commercial standpoint in any sense.

We owe to ourselves the duty of making this exposition a splendid success. We owe it because under the authority of Congress, and by its express direction, the President of the United States—President McKinley—has invited the nations of the world to participate in commemorating the acquisition of the territory of Louisiana. They have accepted that invitation, and as an evidence of the commanding respect of our nation among the nations of the world let me say that every foreign government exhibiting at St. Louis has demanded more space both for its buildings and its exhibits than was demanded at Chicago.

The foreign governments occupy 40 per cent more space at St. Louis to-day than they occupied at Chicago. There are ten more foreign governments exhibiting there than exhibited at Chicago. There are ten more States exhibiting there than exhibited at Chicago. Every State in the Union except two is participating in this exhibition, and almost all of them have erected magnificent State buildings. This increased foreign participation and increased State participation in this exposition has carried the cost of the exposition far beyond the amount originally estimated as being necessary to complete and open the exposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five or ten minutes to complete his remarks.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentlemen of the committee will understand that I have been interrupted all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Minnesota to have ten minutes more time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, as a result of these applications for increased space on the part of foreign governments that are now here upon our invitation and as our guests for the purpose of taking part in the celebration of this great international event—as a result, I say——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. We didn't think it would be so expensive when we invited them.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was a matter that Congress should have considered before extending the invitation. When you extend an invitation to a man to dine with you, you do not stop to measure the expense after he has accepted the invitation, do you?

As a result of this increased demand for space the exposition company was obliged to build three additional exhibition palaces beyond the number originally contemplated. They started out with the idea that if they could equal Chicago they would be doing well, and estimated the cost of reproducing an exhibition like that of Chicago, and estimated that it would exceed $15,000,000. To-day they have 120 acres under roof for exhibition purposes. At Chicago they had 86 acres. To-day, at St. Louis, they have inclosed in the exhibition grounds 1,260 acres. At Chicago they had 680 acres.

This space was demanded, and it was necessary to provide for it in order to supply the governments from different parts of the world we had invited to participate in this exposition with the amount of exhibit space which they required.

Now, they also had to sewer these extended grounds. Why, gentlemen, I have a statement here showing that almost $3,000,000 have been expended on these grounds, and you can not see where a dollar of it has gone. It is all underground, placed there for sewerage, water pipes to insure to the people attending this exposition the necessary sanitary and fire protection. An insurance agent said to me only last week that they had provided the best fire protection any exposition has ever had in the history of the world.

Now, as a result of this increased cost they are here not asking for an appropriation, but simply asking for the use of $4,600,000 for a period of about ninety days. The average length of time would be about ninety days. They ask for it on security that, in the judgment of the Senate and in the judgment of the House committee that considered it, is ample to insure the repayment of every dollar of the money we are asked to advance, and it is proposed to give it to them under conditions that will compel the return of every dollar of it, if there are any gate receipts at all or if the gate receipts equal $4,600,000.

The Centennial Exposition had $1,500,000 given to them as a loan, and, after paying all the indebtedness, every dollar of that $1,500,000 was returned to the Treasurer of the United States. I feel absolutely confident that this exposition in every respect will excel any exposition that the world has ever seen or ever will. I believe that the attendance at this exposition will be far greater than that at Chicago and, inasmuch as we have provided in this amendment for the absolute return, and to prevent any misappropriation of these funds except the repayment of the loan, that the Government of the United States will have every dollar of this $4,600,000 in its Treasury before the Fifty-eighth Congress convenes next December. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What is the parliamentary situation at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion was made by the gentleman from Minnesota to amend the Senate amendment, and that will be followed by a motion to concur.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The motion to concur is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to amend is pending, and that will be followed by a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with that amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No time limit has been fixed for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. No time limit has been fixed for debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, as far as the amendment to this paragraph of the bill offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is concerned, I believe it improves the text of the bill and shall vote for his amendment. But after the paragraph is amended I intend to vote against the whole proposition. I am unable to find any sufficient reason why the Government of the United States should go into the business of loaning its money to a private corporation. I have heard many distinguished gentlemen on the floor of this House, and, if I am not mistaken, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] himself, abuse the Populist party for their idea of going into partnership with the United States Government.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this is a private corporation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I consider it a private corporation, although it is indulging in an enterprise that is of interest to all the people in the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is not in any sense a private enterprise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No more than a bank or a railroad company is a private enterprise if engaged in the business of the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the gentleman ever hear of a railroad or a bank that was doing business in which all the people are interested?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I imagine a railroad is more or less of interest to every man, woman, and child in the United States to some extent.

Mr. COCHRAN. To what extent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To the extent that it carries the mail of these people and delivers their letters; but I do not care to go into that subject.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman think that by going into it deep enough he could make it appear that there is any private interest to be served?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I do not know about that. I understand there is a private corporation organized and that there has been stock subscribed. I do not understand that the company was organized for the purpose of making profits, but if there are any profits made after debts are paid I take it that the stockholders who subscribe their money will reap those profits.

Mr. COCHRAN. One further question. Is it not customary in many States for the public to provide and pay the necessary expenses, including sometimes deficits, to keep up State fair associations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, possibly the public does, but it does it out of the public property.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the public do that out of funds raised by taxation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I do not recall any institution——

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman if the State of Alabama has not made such appropriations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was going to state to the gentleman that I do not recall any instance where the State of Alabama has done so. It may have done so in times past that I know not of, but of my own knowledge I know of no such thing.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman think there is very much difference in the aspect of this as a national enterprise and a State fair association as a State enterprise?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say that I do.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is a State fair association a private enterprise?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When it is organized by private corporations for private gain it is.

Mr. COCHRAN. And the gentleman says he does not think the St. Louis Exposition was organized for private gains.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not imagine it was; but it is organized on that basis.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then the only thing the gentleman says about this is that the incorporators of the World's Fair Association incorporated under the laws as a private corporation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably, and if they make a profit the profits will go into their private pockets.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can the gentleman suggest any other way in which these great public enterprises could be carried on?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no desire to do that. I will leave that to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, I think the gentleman ought to leave it to somebody.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not contended that this corporation was organized as a private corporation to serve a private purpose; but it is a private corporation. I say that when the Government of the United States attempts to go into partnership with or to lend its money to a private corporation I draw no distinction between that proposition and the proposition that was made by the farmers of this country some ten or twelve years ago, in which they advocated that the Government of the United States should lend its money to them on their wheat and their corn and their bales of cotton as collateral security.

I have heard distinguished gentlemen on that side of the floor and on this inveigh against that proposition, and challenge its constitutionality, challenge the governmental power to do such a thing; but here, when we come to a corporation in which a vast number of the people of the United States are interested, from the point of public interest or in a pecuniary way, they seem to lose sight and thought of that proposition entirely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the gentleman regards this as an unconstitutional measure?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I will say candidly that from my point of view I do not think the Government of the United States has the power to use money collected by taxation for the purpose of making a loan to anybody.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has the Government of the United States power to become a stockholder in a corporation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not think it has. That is my personal opinion.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman regard the United States as interested to the extent of the $5,000,000 in this property of the exposition as it now stands?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that the United States Government has given to this exposition $5,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman not also understand that in the event that any portion of the liability, including that $5,000,000, is paid, it should be paid back——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not understand that the Government of the United States shall ever participate in the profits to any extent in the world. The gentleman may be better informed on that proposition than I am, but I understand that out of the profits the Government may get back its money, but it will never participate in any profits of the concern. I can not see the distinction between these two cases—that is, between the case of lending the people of my district money on the pig iron that is stacked in the yards, lending to a railroad company governmental money to complete the building of a railroad, and lending this exposition money of the Government to carry on this exposition.

Therefore I think it improper—for myself, at least—to vote for this paragraph. But aside from that, on the question whether the Government of the United States is secure or not, I take issue with the gentleman from Minnesota. I notice that in the Senate hearings the president of this company was distinctly asked how many people lived within a hundred miles of the city of Chicago. He was asked to estimate whether the gate receipts at St. Louis would equal those at Chicago. But he did not answer the question, although he was asked it more than once. He said, however, in response, after waiving a direct reply, that if you would draw a circle around Chicago having a radius of 500 miles and a similar circle with a radius of 500 miles around St. Louis, you would find a great many more people in the circle which inclosed St. Louis than in that which inclosed Chicago.

In the same way you might take some little interior town and draw a circle around it with a radius of 1,000 miles, and you would find more people within the radius of that circle than you would in a similar circle around the city of New York, because in one case your thousand-mile circle would extend into the Atlantic Ocean.

We know as a matter of fact that these expositions are kept up and paid for to a great extent by the people who live in the towns or cities within which the exposition is held or who live within a radius of 100 miles of such town; that from the people living beyond such a radius the gate receipts are comparatively small.

Now, sir, we find that the total gate receipts at the Chicago Exposition were only about $11,000,000—the entire gate receipts. What have we pledged here as security for the loan it is proposed the Government shall make? The gate receipts of this exposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the concession receipts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. By the gentleman's amendment, provided it is adopted——

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. No; by the Senate amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Government is to have a lien on the gross gate receipts, from all paid admissions, and also on all concession receipts; and the concession receipts on the basis of Chicago and Buffalo would be from 40 to 44 per cent of the gate receipts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the gentleman, then, the Government of the United States is pledged 40 per cent of the gate receipts to pay back this money. Now, the total gate receipts from the beginning of the Chicago Exposition down to its close amounted to only $11,000,000. You propose to allow this exposition to run for over two months—from April until June—before you take one dollar of these gate receipts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, the gentleman must be fair. The exposition is not to be opened until the last day of April or the 1st of May, so that the period which the gentleman speaks of as two months would only be four weeks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I understood the exposition was to be opened in April; I did not get the exact date.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman will also remember that the St. Louis fair is to run longer than the Chicago Exposition did. It is to continue a month longer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I understand is that not the entire gate receipts, but 40 per cent of the gate receipts, are to be paid, beginning on the 1st of June, and you begin to take out this proportion on the 15th of June. You throw out the month of May entirely; you say that on this basis the Government will be repaid for its loan. Now, you assume that the St. Louis Exposition is to get the entire amount of gate receipts that Chicago did, with all that immense city to draw from; and the total loan that you propose to make is $4,600,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I hope the gentleman intends to be fair in his discussion of this question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am trying to be so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I hope the gentleman will state the facts. He has omitted to state that the lien is upon the concession receipts as well as the gate receipts, and the concession receipts will amount to 40 per cent of the gate receipts, and if the gate receipts are $11,000,000 you have 40 per cent more to add to that. The total receipts at Chicago were between $16,000,000 and $17,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not had an opportunity to study the gentleman's amendment as carefully as I could wish. It provides, as I understand, that the Government shall take charge of the receipts and take out a certain portion and repay its loan. Now, is there anything in this proposition that will allow the Government to take all these concession receipts; and if not, what security is there that the Government will be repaid?

Mr. TAWNEY. The language of the amendment is clear and explicit. The Government, in the first place, has a lien by this act and by this contract on the gross gate receipts and on the gross concession receipts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I recognize that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, then, on the basis of the receipts at Chicago—assuming that the receipts at St. Louis are to be no greater than they were at Chicago—the gross receipts from these two sources would aggregate almost $17,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You mean 40 per cent.

Mr. TAWNEY. No. I mean that the gross receipts at Chicago aggregated between $16,000,000 and $17,000,000. Now, if the St. Louis Exposition receives no more than was received at Chicago, the Government has as security for the repayment of its loan 40 per cent of about $17,000,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In other words, $6,800,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Six million eight hundred thousand dollars, contingent on some 22,000,000 people passing through the gates.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to another fact in connection with this proposition. In the event that default is made in the payment of this money at any one of the times specified in the act, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall assume control of the gates and take possession of all the receipts upon which the Government has a lien.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was coming to that, and that was one of the things——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit me, I have the paragraph here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have already discovered it, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman spoke of gate receipts.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Alabama has admitted that he is mistaken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It says the gross receipts. The Secretary of the Treasury shall take possession of the gross receipts from all sources in case of default in the payment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am coming to what the gentleman has just referred to—that the Government of the United States, provided there is default in the payment of $500,000, at any time, until the amount pledged to the Government has been paid, may take charge of the gate receipts. Well, now, what does that mean? He takes charge of all the receipts of this exposition provided there is default. Now, if this theory about the fair working out and paying so much money is a mistake, and the Secretary of the Treasury is compelled to take charge of these receipts, what has he to do to get his money back? He has got to run that exposition company, because if he does not pay the employees, buy the material that is necessary to run it, pay the bands, pay for the balloon ascensions, he will not get anybody there and there will not be any money. In other words, by this amendment, under a possible contingency, the Government of the United States is invited to go into partnership with a side show.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman point out the part of it that he refers to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said that there is a provision in this bill—

That if at any time after said exposition company has received the amount hereby appropriated it makes default in the application or in the repayment of said sum, or any part thereof, as herein required, then, and in that case, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to supervise the collection and take possession of all said gross receipts and continue such supervision and possession until the full sum of said $4,600,000 has been collected and repaid into the Treasury of the United States, as herein provided.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does that make the Government in any sense a part of the management of the exposition, except to take possession of its gross receipts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I just stated that if he takes possession of all its gross receipts, and does nothing else, it will stop the exposition, because there will be nobody to pay the doorkeepers, to pay the ticket sellers, to pay the dime-museum men.

Mr. COCHRAN. I understood you to say that we would go into partnership with a side show. But did you say that the exposition would stop?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Begging the gentleman's pardon, I said that some time ago. I said that this provision would force the Government, in case of a default, to take charge of the exposition and run it in order to get its money back.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And then what would happen to it when the public knew that it had been levied on?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all I desire to say now about this matter, and I desire to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for forty minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I caught exactly the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, as to the position of members on that committee. I do not think he intended to say, if he did say so, that the members of that committee were all in favor of this Senate amendment. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. TAWNEY. On, no; the gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say so.

Mr. BARTLETT. I was informed the gentleman said that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I tried to interrupt the gentleman, but found it was not his desire to be interrupted.

Mr. TAWNEY. What I did say was that it was the judgment of every member of the committee that the security would be ample, and those who did object to it objected upon other grounds than that the security would be amply sufficient. That is what I intended to say.

Mr. BARTLETT. I knew the gentleman did not intend to say that all the members of the committee favored this proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I knew the attitude of the gentleman from Georgia and recognized it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of this proposition and can not vote for it, no matter how ample I may think the security given is to protect the Government, nor can I even accept the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that it was agreed that the security was ample. I do not think that the proposed lien will be any greater security than the simple contract of this exposition company to pay. I say I entertain views different from my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], Mr. Chairman, with reference to this proposition. I was one of seventy-five Members when the roll was called in June, 1900, who in this House went upon record as against the proposition in its inception for the Government to aid this exposition by giving it $5,000,000. I have not changed my views on this subject. I am still opposed to the policy of this Government expending the money of the people in aiding these expositions or shows of this character.

When the Government makes its own exhibit and erects the buildings for such exhibit, that is as much as should be asked. I shall not vote for anything more. I remember very well, being then a member, as I am now, of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, from whom the bill providing for the St. Louis Louisiana Purchase Exposition originally came, when all the gentlemen, one of whom is now president of this exposition and one is the treasurer, and a number of most elegant gentlemen, came before us from all parts of the country, including the present Secretary of the Treasury and governors of various States embraced in territory comprising what is known as "the Louisiana purchase," and urged us to report the bill which finally was passed March 3, 1901. It may have been well that the Congress enacted that law.

I am not going to gainsay it now. But I know full well that it was passed at the urgent solicitation of these gentlemen who now are here asking for this loan; and when we were considering the proposition to grant this, the largest sum that had been given to an exposition of this character, we were told that Missouri would pay $10,000,000 before a dollar would be expended from the Government Treasury, and that they would not follow the example of other exposition companies, which had in the past appealed to Congress for more money; that with the $10,000,000 which would be subscribed and paid in by St. Louis and her people and the $5,000,000 which the United States Government was asked to contribute, they would be amply able to inaugurate and carry to a successful end the great enterprise that was then being undertaken.

The act of Congress of March 3, 1901, to provide for holding this exposition in the twenty-fourth section provided as follows:

That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said Commission.

Doubtless this section was placed in the bill at the instance of the friends of the measure to aid in its passage. Surely this should estop the same gentlemen, who are now urging this Congress to extend "pecuniary assistance" to this exposition company. In good faith and conscience they should not now be heard to urge its violation.

This company who are here asking for this loan of the people's money for the purpose of carrying on the enterprise of a private corporation have made no effort to borrow money from the banks or any other source. They came to Congress in the first instance, relying doubtless on the fact that the United States Treasury is full, and upon the belief that this Congress in this age of alleged progress and extravagant expenditure of the public money will be more liberal and extravagant than any of the preceding Congresses.

In confirmation of this I read from page 25 of the hearing before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, on February 1, 1904.

Mr. GARDNER, a member of that committee, asked Governor Francis this question:

Suppose this does not meet with Congress's approval, what are you going to do then? You are going to borrow that money from private parties, I suppose?

Mr. Francis replied:

We have not considered that. I suppose that a few of us, comparatively few, would have to raise this money by mortgaging our residences, or giving personal collateral of some kind, and getting the money as fast as we can.

Mr. GARDNER. The gates won't shut?

Mr. FRANCIS. Oh, no.

And Mr. Houser, a member of the committee from St. Louis present to urge the committee to favor this proposition, said:

If it takes all our fortunes, the gates will not close.

And Mr. Thompson, a leading and well-known banker and financier of St. Louis, stated before that committee the following, to be found on page 40 of the hearings:

The people living in St. Louis are anxious to have the gates opened. Even parties who were shaking their heads at first are now enthusiastic, and there is no question in the mind of anyone connected with the exposition that it will be a grand success. Not only will it be a success as a show, but it will be a commercial success. I do not want to guarantee that without a reasonable compensation for so doing, because if I am going into the guaranty business I want a percentage, but parties who have looked the matter over and who have made estimates feel safe in saying that the original subscribers——

The CHAIRMAN. Including the Government?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; including the Government and the city. Everybody who has estimated carefully says that we will get back 50 per cent of our outlay, and I think if you take the figures Governor Francis has given you this morning and analyze them you will see why that is reasonable. I am satisfied it is reasonable to estimate that we will have $7,500,000 over and above the running expenses of the exposition.

So that if this proposed contract with the Government is ample security and the prospects are so flattering that this exposition will be so great a financial success these gentlemen should be able to easily borrow this money from the banks, who are legitimately in the business of lending money. They should not be permitted to borrow it from the Government of the United States, for it ought not to engage in the banking business.

I have another objection. I believe this kind of legislation is vicious and should not be upheld. The original proposition to aid in holding and contributing $5,000,000 thereto was put by the Senate upon an appropriation bill, as this one has been, passed the Senate through "Senatorial courtesy," and it was brought here and carried through the House on a vote on a conference report, had on an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill in June, 1900——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does my friend intend to convey the idea that St. Louis has not made good her word in raising $10,000,000?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; and nobody who understands the English language could understand that I intended to convey any such idea. I did not state it, nor insinuate it, because Governor Francis, in the hearings before the committee on last Friday and Saturday, made a statement showing that it had been done, and it could not otherwise than have been done unless the Secretary of the Treasury had violated the solemn provisions of the act under which this exposition is being held, because that act required them to be satisfied from evidence that every dollar of the $10,000,000 had been subscribed by the people of St. Louis and expended before the Secretary of the Treasury should pay out any of the $5,000,000 appropriated to this exposition; and I am sure the Secretary of the Treasury will comply with the law and that he has complied with the law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. He has.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is that the Government shall loan money to this exposition company, which is a private corporation incorporated and organized under the laws of Missouri. It is the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company. It has all the powers and all the attributes and all the liabilities of a private corporation. It can sue and be sued; it can incur and collect debts. It is a private undertaking aided by the Government at the request and solicitation of the corporation.

It will not do to say that because the Government in 1900 authorized the grant of and did give $5,000,000 to aid it in carrying on its business that the Government became liable as a partner and has now to contribute additional money that it might be inaugurated and successfully carried on. The act referred to distinctly negatives any liability of the United States for the acts of the corporation. These gentlemen came to Congress in 1900 and urged the passage of the measure under which they proceeded, as the hearings before our committee will show, and they came from various States and from Missouri, urging us to grant them this money upon the condition contained in this bill of March 3, 1901, urging us to aid them; and now, after we have given them the money and they want more, they come back and say you must grant us relief because you authorized this whole exposition; because you invited the nations of the world at our request you must pay more money.

This argument used by my friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was not used by the president of this exposition, for when pressed to give us a reason why the Government should aid them further because the United States had invited foreign nations to participate, said (page 33 of the hearings):

> I can not say that the Government has been responsible for the cost being increased over our estimates, except to the extent that it has aided us to interest foreign countries.
> Mr. BARTLETT. But, as I understand it, this invitation of the General Government to foreign countries to participate in this exposition was about the same as has been extended heretofore. In other words, the language of the act is about the usual language; it is about the language used in the case of Chicago.
> Mr. FRANCIS. That is so.

But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I am not in favor of this character of legislation upon appropriation bills. I remember in recent years the Senate has time and time again added to appropriation bills, in violation of its own rules and in violation of the rules of this House, legislation of this character as "riders" on such bills. Why, we know the whole Philippine government bill was passed as a rider on the army bill in 1901; and this very identical proposition to inaugurate and start this exposition, giving $5,000,000 to it, originated in the Senate, by an amendment or a rider to the sundry civil bill, in June, 1900.

If important legislation is thus to be enacted the power and influence of the popular branch of the legislative branch of the Government is seriously curtailed and virtually destroyed, and the Senate will become the supreme legislative power. If, as is contended by some Senators, the Senate can, without reference to the House, affect the revenues of the Government by treaties, and can also pass any sort of legislation by tacking it as a rider to necessary appropriation bills, and the House submits, the power and influence of the House is destroyed. For one I do not and shall not approve such vicious practice in legislation.

That bill had been referred to a committee appointed by the House to specially consider it. These gentlemen who were advocating it had been before that committee, and had urged the committee to report a bill favoring its passage. That committee did not report a bill favoring its passage. That committee reported a bill without any recommendation whatever, and because they then were satisfied that the House would not——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the gentleman not mistaken when he says they came before the Appropriations Committee that made up the deficiency bill and had a hearing, and we refused——

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say the Appropriations Committee. If I said so I did not intend to do so.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One other question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not believe my colleague would refuse the appropiation of this money at any time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We had no hearing and did not pass upon it. I simply desire to correct the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not desire to put my friend and colleague in any position that he ought not to occupy. I meant to say, and I repeat, that these gentlemen came before a committee to whom this bill, the act of March 3, 1903, had been referred by this House, the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, over which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] presides and of which I happen to have been an humble member since its organization.

They came before that committee with all the influence, with all the eloquence, with all the power they could exert, and they failed to secure a favorable recommendation from that committee for the passage of this bill; and when they found that could not be done, they went to the Senate and by means of the exercise of Senatorial courtesy, that alone exists in the United States Senate, the Senator from Missouri put it upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, and that is how this legislation originated for the Government to place its credit and its faith and promise to pay them the $5,000,000 in the first instance.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is recognized as a lawyer of ability, and I would like to submit to him this query: Aside from the question of policy of the General Government going into the exhibition business, does the gentleman believe that there is warrant under the Constitution of the United States for the General Government to make this loan to a private corporation?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know any express restraint placed upon the power of the Congress to donate, to give away, or throw away the money of the people if they can find enough men in Congress to vote it away. There are certain powers given to Congress providing what they shall appropriate for—armies and navies and post-offices and post-roads and the maintenance of the General Government.

There is not in the Constitution of the United States any restraining power that says that the Congress can not appropriate money to these expositions, or for such like purposes. I wish there were. I do not believe it would even then restrain a good many people from voting to squander the public money, if they desired to do so. I do not think the Constitution of the United States stands in the way of this Government lending this money to this association, if Congress sees fit to do so.

Mr. BURLESON. Right on that point, what power has Congress to make any appropriation except for governmental purposes?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think it ought to have the power.

Mr. BURLESON. Has it any such power?

Mr. BARTLETT. It ought not to have it. The gentleman has asked me what the provisions of the Constitution are in this respect. I do not know of any that prohibit it. It would only be arguing an inference to be drawn from the expressed commands of the Constitution. There is no expressed inhibition upon Congress from making any such appropriation as there are in the constitution of my State, which prohibits them from making appropriation except for certain specific purposes.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman says he knows of no provision prohibiting it. Can he put his finger upon the provision of the Constitution authorizing it?

Mr. BARTLETT. I can not; nobody can; but there are a great many things for which money is expended not authorized expressly by the Constitution. I take it for granted that this Government was authorized to collect revenues by taxation of the people and to pay it out for governmental purposes and not for expositions or for shows. I take it for granted, so far as I am concerned, and that is my political faith, that the Government of the United States, when it has more money in its coffers than it ought to have or taxes are too high and unjust, ought to reduce the rate of taxation or return the surplus back to the pockets of the people whence it came.

Mr. BURLESON. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. But as you asked me as a lawyer, I am undertaking to give you my opinion as a lawyer.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BARTLETT. Just for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can my friend point his finger to the provision in the Constitution of the United States or in the laws of the country which would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to go into the open markets for the purpose of purchasing Government bonds at a higher premium merely for the purpose of relieving the money stringency?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to undertake to say whether some Secretaries of the Treasury have gone into the markets and bought Government bonds or not. I apprehend the Government has a right to create a debt and to borrow money and issue bonds; and the Government has the same right that every other creditor has to go into the market and pay the bonds before they become due, like I have, if my creditor agrees to it, and the question is not at all pertinent, nor does it suggest anything to a lawyer's mind, in regard to the subject-matter of discussion.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But it is done for the purpose of relieving the money stringency, and here is an opportunity to do the same thing to the extent of four million dollars and a half.

Mr. BARTLETT. What money stringency? Why, Mr. Chairman, I have here a statement of the banks in New York, published weekly, and this is the statement of last Saturday from the commercial papers. I also have here the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, which shows that the banks are so far from being without money that they have $21,000,000 and over above their surplus reserve, showing that they have more money on deposit, more money in their vaults, than they ever had before in many years.

I have here an account where the Pennsylvania Railroad on Friday last made arrangements to borrow $50,000,000 to carry on improvements for the railroad, and I have not heard of a jar or ripple in Wall street so far as money is concerned, unless it happened this morning. The rate of interest has not gone up; there has been no demand on the Secretary of the Treasury to supply a contemplated deficiency of $50,000,000. Why, Mr. Chairman, have we arrived at this stage in this great era of prosperity that the national banks, with their hundreds of millions of dollars in their vaults—on Saturday the surplus reserve in the New York national banks was over $21,000,000—are to be shaken to their centers, and that business is to be disrupted and a panic coming in the money market because the paltry sum of $4,000,000 is to be borrowed in that market? What becomes of your vaunted prosperity, what becomes of the talk about more money than you can use and of the assertion that the vaults of the banks are full to overflowing, if we can not borrow that small amount of money?

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. I would rather not be interrupted just now, but I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BAKER. If the money is loaned by the Government, will it not be simply transferred from some bank into another bank?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is an A B C of finance which does not necessarily require an answer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before I leave this proposition I want to state that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is far better, in my judgment, than the original proposition that came from the Senate. The Senate amendment is either carefully or carelessly drawn, it is immaterial which. If the gate receipts do not equal 40 per cent, then the Government could get only 40 per cent of the gate receipts, and they might not at any time be sufficient to pay this loan. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota it provides that the Government shall get the 40 per cent, but, at any rate, $500,000 semiweekly. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota was drawn at the request of the committee, and it is carefully drawn, more so than the Senate amendment, for the exposition company is required to repay the amount loaned whether 40 per cent of its receipts suffice to do so or not.

But I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, when you come down to the question of security, that this is any security or any lien by the Government on the gross receipts. I mean by that, and every lawyer will understand it, that as between any contesting creditors of this Exposition and the Government the lien hereby provided for will not avail as against the creditors so as to give the Government in a contest in the courts a superior lien upon its receipts. I say that for the reason that when you mortgage something—and that is what this is, a mortgage—when you mortgage something there must be something in existence. There must be something in præsenti. "A man can not give that which he has not" is the language of the law.

It will not do to say that it has been held that a railroad might mortgage its income and after-acquired property and after-acquired receipts; that because the courts have held that mortgages on after-acquired property and after-acquired receipts of the railroad are subject to the mortgage that therefore this is so. There is this distinction: The railroad first mortgages the property out of which the income grows, as if you mortgaged the sheep and its next year's clip of wool; as if you mortgaged your own sheep and not some one's else; as if you mortgaged the orchard and income of next year's crop of apples. But you can not mortgage the clip of another's sheep or a flock of sheep you are to purchase or the apples in another's orchard. It is because you own the land out of which the apples grow and because you own the sheep upon the backs of which the wool grows.

I read now from Jones on Chattel Mortgages, section 140, as follows, to sustain my statement:

> One may make a valid mortgage on a thing in which he has a potential interest at the time. Thus, to use illustrations familiar since the time of Chief Justice Hobart, "Land is the mother and root of all fruits; therefore, he who hath it may grant all the fruit that may arise upon it after, and the property shall pass as soon as the fruits are extant. A person may grant all the tithe wool that he shall have in such a year, yet perhaps he shall have none, but a man can not grant what wool that he shall grow upon his sheep that he shall buy hereafter, for there he hath it neither actually nor potentially."
> If he owns land he may mortgage the crops that grow upon it, or if he owns sheep he may mortgage the wool to grow upon them, for the mortgagor having the present ownership of the land and sheep has a present vested right to the product, growth, or increase of the property whenever it comes into existence. He may, therefore, sell or mortgage the natural or expected growth or increase of his own property, but he can not sell or mortgage the crops to be grown upon the land of another, or the wool to be grown upon another's sheep, or upon sheep he may buy hereafter; but the mere possibility or expectancy of acquiring property, without any present interest in it, is not the object of a mortgage or sale.
> The fisherman may expect to catch fish; but while they are in the sea uncaught he can not make a valid sale or mortgage of them. The fact that he owns a fishing ship and is about to proceed upon a fishing voyage gives him no potential interest in the fish he may possibly catch.

In support of this the author cites the case of Lowe v. Pew. (108 Mass., 347.)

I read from the case of Beall v. White (94 U. S. Rep., p. 382, 3d headnote):

> It is only when no rule of law is infringed and the rights of third persons are not prejudiced that courts of equity will in certain cases give effect to mortgages on subsequently acquired property.

The same proposition is sustained by Story's Equity Jurisprudence (9th ed., sec. 1040) and by the cases of Dunham v. Railway Co. (1 Wallace, p. 254) and United States v. New Orleans Railroad (12 Wallace, 362).

The case of Pinnock v. Coe (64 U. S. Rep., p. 117) sustains my view of this lien. I read from pages 127 and 128 as follows:

> This rule is founded on the maxim that "A person can not grant a thing which he has not: Ille non habet non dat," and many authorities are referred to at law to prove the proposition, and many more might have been added from cases in equity, for equity, no more than the law, can deny it: the thing itself is an impossibility. It may at once, therefore, be admitted that whenever a party undertakes, by deed or mortgage, to grant property, real or personal, in præsenti, which does not belong to him or has no existence, the deed or mortgage, as the case may be, is inoperative and void, and this either in a court of law or equity.

I refer also to three cases in 99 U. S. Reports, to wit: Fosdick v. Schall, page 235; Fosdick v. Car Company, page 256; and Hale v. Frost, page 389. In these cases the court discusses the question as to what a court of equity will do in a contest between creditors and mortgagees who have a lien on after-acquired property and income arising therefrom. These decisions, in my judgment, would authorize the courts of the United States to hold in a contest between the United States and the creditors of this exposition company—in case such a contest should arise—that the United States did not get any priority or precedence over the gate receipts by reason of this act or any lien given in pursuance of this act.

Whatever may be the decisions of the State courts on this subject, though they may hold differently, the questions of law which might arise under this act will be determined in the United States courts, and in that case the rule as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States will control. Therefore I must dissent from my distinguished friend when he says that all of us are agreed that this lien would be sufficient. I do not agree to that. I dissented at the time it was proposed.

Perhaps I did not exactly dissent, but I made the suggestion, as is shown in the copy of the hearings which I hold in my hand, to Governor Francis, and asked him whether that had occurred to him. I made the suggestion in the committee room when we were considering the proposition and I have given it some consideration. I will read from the decision of the Supreme Court, to be found in 64 United States Supreme Court Reports, in the case of Pennock v. Coe, wherein the court says:

> It may at once, therefore, be admitted, whenever a party undertakes by deed or mortgage to grant property, real or personal in præsenti, which does not belong to him or has no existence, the deed or mortgage, as the case may be, is inoperative and void, and this either in a court of law or equity.

I will follow that up by a suggestion from another case, as follows:

> It is only where no rule of law is infringed and the rights of third persons are not prejudiced that courts of equity will, in certain cases, give effect to mortgages of subsequently acquired property.

I have here a half dozen or more cases upon that subject and also some opinions from the law writers upon the subject, and I make bold to say here that if ever a contest comes between the United States Government and other creditors as to the validity of this lien, if it shall be made in pursuance of this act, that the lien will he declared to be a nullity, because the exposition company has not got the receipts and can not tell what they will be. It does not own the property upon which the lien is given. What the receipts will be are mere possibilities of the future, dependent upon every sort of circumstance. Whether these receipts shall be five million or six million or ten million or twenty million dollars, or more, no man can tell now.

If we shall pass this bill to-day and it be approved to-morrow, and if the Secretary of the Treasury shall decide that there is now no lien on the gate receipts—and there can be none under the law—then when he accepts, as he is directed to do, and the lien is delivered to him and he lends the money, and when the exposition shall progress, if it shall progress, to the time when this 40 per cent of the $5,000,000 is not paid and the Government takes charge of these receipts, both gate and concession, and there shall come a contest between the Government and the laborer, or those who have furnished material, or those who have loaned money to the exposition company in order to carry on this exposition, it will be found that the Government must stand upon the same plane as an ordinary creditor, having no more right in the courts of the country than these gentlemen had in these decisions I have quoted who had mortgages on the after-acquired income of the debtor.

Whenever the United States Government abandons its function of government to engage in the business of lending money and to become a competitor with private individuals in the money market, in the banking business, it steps down at the same time upon the same plane with the other money lenders and creditors of the country. We have seen that illustrated in this country no longer ago than last year, when vessels which were being built for the Government were taken charge of by the courts, and the question in the contest was as to whether the Government had a right superior to that of other creditors. So that this lien, in my judgment, is worth no more than the lien on a simple contract undertaking of this exposition to pay the money of the Government back in the event they are called upon to do so.

Now, I have offered these suggestions and presented my view to this committee as to the validity of this lien. In my judgment it is not worth the paper upon which the amendment is written, so far as other creditors are concerned, and if such a contest arises it will be as between the Government and the other creditors a simple contract debt.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. ROBB. I desire to ask this question: In this case the law itself creating the lien is to be distinguished as between that and a contract between ordinary individuals, is it not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Why?

Mr. ROBB. Because the law itself authorizes the lien. The law makes it a lien if we pass this amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the only reason that it could be a lien, and that is the only opposition to the view that I have suggested.

Mr. ROBB. I have reference to the case from which the gentleman cited. Those were cases of undertaking to create a lien under a general law existing at the time, but here we have a law making a specific transaction a lien.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the common law and, so far as I know, under the laws of all the different States, unless where specified exceptions have been made authorizing a man, for instance, to give a lien upon crops, planted or to be grown, or something of that kind, you can not make a lien upon property that is not in existence.

Mr. ROBB. But in a case where the law expressly provides for a lien of this kind, would not the court sustain it? My point is that in this case, by adopting this provision, we would authorize just this kind of a lien—would create a lien by the passage of this law.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think that is the fact. And I am frank to say to my friend that the suggestion he has made presented itself to my mind when I was determining whether this lien would be valid. The language of this proposed law does not create a lien; it simply says that the exposition company shall execute a lien upon the gross receipts. But the Supreme Court of the United States has said frequently that the Congress of the United States has no authority or power to pass special legislation upon any given subject; in other words, you can not adopt a provision of this kind in the form of special legislation applying in only one case.

In the case of Ellis v. The Railway Company (165 U. S.), as I now recall, a recovery against a railroad company was had for killing stock, and the statute of Texas provided fees amounting to $10 might be recovered in addition to the value of the stock destroyed in suits against railroad companies. The Supreme Court said that such a law was unconstitutional and void, because it undertook to specify that the railroad companies and they alone in the whole country would be subject to a recovery for attorneys' fees. It was special legislation; it was in derogation of common right and of the common law, and was therefore void.

I therefore dispute the gentleman's position, because I undertake to say that any attempted legislation in derogation of the common law and of common right, any proposed law which would undertake to prevent a creditor from having the money of his debtor applied to the payment of his debt can not stand in a court of equity or a court of law. You can not establish a preference in this way in favor of some creditors against others. In this way I undertake to dispose of the objection of my friend from Missouri; and I think the court must sustain me in my position.

Mr. Chairman, we have spent a great deal of money upon expositions of this character. I have here and will place in the RECORD a statement of the contributions by the Government to these expositions from 1876 down to the present time, not including the present proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman ought to add to those the amount that Georgia got.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have that here, and it is added in the statement I made. In reply to the gentleman's suggestion I will say that Georgia did not get a dollar out of the Government. And if I had been a Member of the House at the time that appropriation was made I should have voted against any proposition to give or loan money to that exposition in 1895. So long as my people give me the right to represent them on this floor I will continue to maintain the position that the Government has nothing to do with this kind of business.

The Atlanta Exposition got $200,000. For what? For Government exhibits and a Government building—not another cent—and that was for an exposition in the great city of Atlanta, the greatest and most progressive city in one of the greatest States of the Union, if not the greatest. That appropriation did a great deal of good. The Government has contributed to other expositions over $11,000,000, and if this bill passes the sum will reach

$22,000,000 so spent since 1876. It contributed $1,500,000 to the Centennial exposition in 1876——

Mr. HERMANN. Does not the gentleman from Georgia believe that that one exposition at Atlanta, Ga., conferred ten thousand times more benefit upon the people than the amount of money expended?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I do.

Referring to the Cotton States and International Exposition, held in Atlanta, Ga., in 1895, that exposition did not receive one dollar of gratuity or aid from the Government. The Government simply put up its building and made a Government exhibit at a cost of $200,000. No city of that size had ever before undertaken so vast an enterprise which succeeded so magnificently. To use the language of a distinguished scholar and historian, Prof. E. Benjamin Andrews:

> Atlanta was the only city of its size in the world which had ever before undertaken so vast an enterprise. With less than 100,000 inhabitants at the time, 40 per cent of whom were negroes, it set on foot and carried to completion, in dull business times, one year after the World's Columbian Exposition, an exposition which outdid the California Mid-Winter Fair of 1893 and 1894, the New Orleans Exposition of 1884, and even the Centennial, being among the American expositions second only to the World's Columbian at Chicago.

Never once did they call upon the Government, but the managers of that exposition, with a public spirit and enterprise which should commend itself to the citizens of much larger cities, of more wealth, who undertake such enterprises, repeatedly supplied out of their own pockets deficiencies in the revenues, and no one ever heard of their applying to the Government for a loan.

Mr. HERMANN. Then it was a good investment.

Mr. BARTLETT. It was a good investment for the people of Georgia, and if the Government had not placed its exhibits there we would have had the exposition all the same and with the same successful results.

Now, as to the appropriation for Charleston, S. C., I voted against that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman must not forget the proposed celebration in Oregon of the Lewis and Clark expedition.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will cross that bridge when I come to it.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, as the suggestion is made by my colleague, that Georgia did not receive a dollar from the Government, nor ask a dollar as a loan or gratuity, either before or after the exposition.

What did you do at Omaha? You gave Omaha $200,000 for an exhibit, nothing more.

What did you do at Philadelphia? When this country desired to celebrate the centennial of the Declaration of Independence and the birth of this Republic at the place where clustered so many historic memories, you only loaned that exposition $1,500,000, and Philadelphia paid back every dollar of it. You contributed $578,500 to a Government building exhibit at that great exposition, and that is all you gave to the place where you celebrated the birth of the independence of this our people. You contributed $578,000, and you advanced $1,500,000 afterwards to aid her, and she paid back every dollar of it, for which Philadelphia and her people are entitled to great credit.

What have you done for St. Louis? You have given that exposition $5,000,000 in cash, which is now expended, except some $275,000. Provision has been made to expend nearly $1,000,000 for the Government exhibit——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman was sure we should get this money back he would favor the Government loaning it to them, would he not?

Mr. BARTLETT. I would not.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I thought the gentleman approved what had been done.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman misunderstood me, or I did not make myself understood.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I thought the gentleman approved what had been done at Philadelphia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not approve of lending money for that. I said that the Congress in its utmost liberality, in the desire to celebrate the greatest event that ever occurred on this continent and probably the greatest event that ever occurred in the history of the world, at the place where was born and where grew up the life of the greatest people on the face of the earth, that gave to the world its last, best hope for liberty and the preservation of constitutional republican government—Congress, in its liberality, expended $578,000.

Now, when you propose to celebrate another event—great, it is true, in the history of this country—you have already given them $5,900,000, and in addition to that you propose to go into the business of making the Government a lender of money upon a security which, in my judgment, is not valid as between this Government and other creditors of this exposition. Where are you to stop?

Some years ago there arose in this country what was known as the "Farmers' Alliance" movement. Times were hard in 1890. I believe that was under a Republican Administration, although I do not desire to say anything in reference to hard times just now at any time under any Administration. In 1890, when all the products of the farm were low in price, the farmers in my country and the farmers in all the great West formed what was known as the "Farmers' Alliance," and my good friend and colleague from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] was one of the leaders of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask about ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for ten minutes more.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not like to object to the time of the gentleman being extended, but I have heard it rumored that an effort to cut off this debate would be made in a few minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not by me.

Mr. PAYNE. If there is to be such an effort I should like to have some one on this side of the House heard in opposition to this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not heard of any such thing.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to state to the gentleman that I am upon this committee, of which my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is the chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I jokingly referred to my good friend and colleague [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. I want to say that we are glad he was a member of that alliance. He did the people of Georgia and the Democratic party of Georgia a great service, both as a member of the Farmers' Alliance and as a member of the Democratic party, and we are proud of him to-day that while he was a Farmers' Alliance man he continued to be, as he now is, a strong, faithful Democrat.

They formed an association and they were anxious to have the Government loan money to them upon their cotton, which is a staple, advancing them one-half of its market value as a loan at a reasonable rate of interest. They proposed to have warehouses all over the country in which to put the cotton to secure the Government. It would have been as secure as any loan could have been made. Cotton is always a staple. There never has been a time when it would not have brought one-half of the market price.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It is a little higher to-day.

Mr. BARTLETT. If such a scheme was on foot to-day the Government could afford to loan $50 a bale upon every bale of cotton raised in the South, but those of us who were opposed to that sort of governmental policy went before our people and attacked the scheme as being one of paternalism and socialism and as destructive of the true functions and province of government.

And while the farmers of Georgia were hard pressed for money, while they had to toil day in and day out, and many of them saw their property go to the auction block to pay their debts, yet when the proposition came up before them at the ballot box—true to their convictions, true to the great doctrines of government taught them by their fathers, true to the teachings of the founders of this Republic and of the party to which they belonged—the "subtreasury" plan and the politicans who upheld it, this unhealthy growth, from wrong policies of government, fell beneath the ballots of the sturdy yeomanry of Georgia and the South.

To-day we have not the farmer with his horny hand, his skin sunburned and brown, asking the Government to loan him money. Thank God in his Providence, He has prospered the farmer, and his surplus profits swells the Treasury to-day with the excess of exports over imports, until to-day you are more prosperous than you ever were in your life, because the farmer has made the greatest production of crops and is more prosperous than at any time in our history. Upon his sturdy shoulders he has carried us to prosperity unbounded.

But we have the farmers (?) of St. Louis, gentlemen, who are engaged in this exposition, asking us to make a loan of the people's money, without interest, to carry on the exposition they have undertaken.

For one, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the Government was organized or intended to become a loaner of money to the people to carry on their private business. I do not believe that we are here to keep a pawnshop, in which to loan money upon any kind of security. If so, I suggest that we should take down the emblem of this Government that adorns yon mace of the sergeant-at-arms and supplant it with the "three balls pendant," the sign of a pawnbroker and money lender.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote against this proposition as I voted against the proposition in its inception to contribute $5,000,000 to it.

Before I take my seat I desire to call attention to what the distinguished chairman of this Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HEMENWAY] said, opening his remarks upon this very identical bill:

Mr. Chairman, before referring to the provisions of the bill which I bring before the House, I want to call attention to the condition of the Treasury of the United States. It is well in the affairs of Government as well as private affairs to take occasionally an account of stock and see "where we are at."

In view of different statements made by Members of this Congress in which legislation is suggested upon the ground that we have a large surplus in the Treasury, I think it my duty to call the attention of the House and of the country to a real problem that we are called upon to solve. It is this: How can we reduce the estimated expenses of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year $42,000,000?

Then he goes on and gives his statement and proceeds further:

There should be no legislation passed reducing revenues, and this Congress must exercise economy, not refusing any necessary item to meet the growing expenses of this great country, but to strike from the estimates and from the appropriation bills reported to this House every superfluous item. We must keep within the revenues.

Then later on he told you what should be done in coming to the assistance of the Treasury, that it might not show a deficit of $42,000,000. Yet, regardless of this, you are here to take out of the vaults of the Treasury—poured in there from the taxation of its people—$4,600,000 to aid in an exposition to which you have already contributed nearly $6,000,000.

I take it for granted when the gentleman made this statement with reference to the Treasury when he reported this bill, that the statement was correct, and when he made it it was not to alarm you and alarm the country, but he told you you had neared the danger line.

If you vote this appropriation, when the time comes you will be called upon to give it instead of their paying it back. Such has been the history of such expositions; but whether it succeeds, as I hope it will do—I hope it will be the greatest exposition that the world ever saw—whether it succeeds or is a failure, they will ask you for this money, will insist it should not be repaid.

For one I call upon those who believe as I do, that the people's money should be spent for governmental purposes, to vote against this appropriation, and following the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this House, I call upon you from that side not to walk beyond the danger line, down over the precipice and into the abyss of a deficit, and leave the Treasury where it must be replenished by the issuance of bonds in times of peace.

The people have had enough of that. The policy or the party that brings such a necessity about will receive, as it is entitled to receive, the condemnation of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether or not it is possible to conclude the general debate on the amendment to-day; but I ask that general debate be closed at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the amendment be closed at 5 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Chair will recognize a member of the Committee on Appropriations favoring the bill at this time, if there is any such gentleman who desires recognition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be permitted to add some data in addition to the statement that I have made in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3117. An act to expedite business in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon;

S. 3738. An act granting an increase of pension to Linus S. Ludington;

S. 2345. An act to amend the provisions of the naturalization laws of the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 2815. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, and repealing all laws inconsistent therewith;

S. 2698. An act to establish a life-saving station at or near the entrance to Tillamook Bay, Oregon;

S. 3118. An act to amend the act approved February 18, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners,' approved August 19, 1890, and for other purposes;"

S. 1278. An act to provide for the erection of buildings for an immigrant station at the port of San Francisco, Cal.;

S. 1537. An act to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians; and

S. 1607. An act granting to the State of Oregon certain lands to be used by it for the purpose of maintaining and operating thereon a fish hatchery.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 958) granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 892) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6022) granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3903) granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the diagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3776) granting an increase of pension to Alfred J. Judy, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE TO URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa such time as he may desire.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this proposition is a very simple one. It is a bold, bald, naked proposition for the Government of the United States to loan to a corporation, without interest, upon questionable security, $4,600,000. That is the proposition. It comes to us from the other end of the Capitol. It comes to us on an appropriation bill, in violation of the rules of that body, and in violation of the rules of this House.

It comes to us in the same questionable form that the original proposition did that the gentleman now states was a gift—a proposition that we did not understand four years ago—a gift of six and one-quarter million dollars to this institution. It comes in the same objectionable way—in violation of the rules of that body, in violation of the rules of this.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me——

Mr. HEPBURN. It is part of the gentleman's proposition for this Government to invest more than $11,000,000 in this great exposition at St. Louis——

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether the gentleman refers to myself when he speaks of this coming or the statement having been made that $5,000,000 was a gift. I certainly made no statement of that kind. I said an appropriation was made on the terms of this section, which says the Government of the United States is to receive one-third of the receipts, and I would now, if the gentleman will pardon me, correct another statement. The original bill authorizing the exposition passed the House of Representatives making a $5,000,000 appropriation for the purpose of aiding and completing that exposition. It passed the House in the form of a bill as a separate proposition, and then went to the Senate, where it was amended by putting on the Charleston proposition, and it was passed, too, by a two-thirds vote of this House, not on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DALZELL. That bill was not passed in this House until, after a previous session of Congress, an amendment was put on the sundry civil appropriation bill, appropriating——

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the amendment did not appropriate $5,000,000; it pledged $5,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Pledged it in the event of their raising $10,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. That is what the gentleman from Iowa stated.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am substantially correct in the statement I have made, and I will stand by it. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to throw any obstacle in the way of this magnificent spectacle we are to have in the city of St. Louis during this year. With the general purpose had in view by the gentlemen who have the matter in charge I have the fullest sympathy.

I believe that every ten or fifteen years this Government could well afford to expend a few million dollars in the educational processes that come through these great international expositions. I also think that there is no criticism to be made upon the superb management that the gentlemen who have this matter in charge have exhibited. I approve of all that they have done. I even approve of the nine somewhat belated, rheumatic statesmen who constitute the Commission whose existence is complained of by the gentleman who made the opening address in favor of this proposition. He seems to feel that a grievance is had on the part of himself and others that these gentlemen are permitted to draw $50,000 a year in compensation for the ornamental features they furnish to the great enterprise. [Laughter.] I want this to succeed. I want this exposition to be the greatest that the world has ever known; but I want the gentlemen who are to be largely the beneficiaries to furnish this money. I want them to do as that once rival of theirs, the empire city at the foot of Lake Michigan, that raised the $5,000,000 that was needed after all other resources had been expended, and so I want the city of St. Louis to emulate them in that respect. It is pleading the baby act for gentlemen to come here and talk about the conditions of the money market as it affects the wealth of St. Louis. The raising of this $4,600,000 is a mere bagatelle to those men of stupendous wealth who live in that city, and I want them, while they are having so many of the great advantages of this enterprise, to pay their full share of the expenditures. St. Louis ought to do this. St. Louis is a beneficiary far beyond the city of Chicago. There is no question between the two. Here, in the first place, are $5,000,000 of permanent improvements put upon the lands largely of St. Louis. Five million dollars! You will remember what the gentleman from Minnesota told us a little while ago—that $3,000,000 had been put on the grounds in sewerage and other permanent works of that character.

Mr. TAWNEY. The exposition——

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman made a speech of more than an hour in which he was explaining explanations. I hope he will not interrupt me——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he did not deliberately interrupt me when he thought I had misstated the facts? I think the gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield. Did not the gentleman from Minnesota say that $3,000,000 had been permanently put there underground?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I did not. I said that almost $3,000,000 had been expended and that nobody could see anything of it, because it was for sewerage and in water pipes and fire protection and in the preparation of the ground. That is what I said.

Mr. HEPBURN. The statements of the gentleman are so much more certain after they are reduced to writing that I will read——

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that the exposition could be held on the grounds without sanitary arrangements, sewerage, water piping, etc.? That amount has been expended for that purpose.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will read from page 38 of the hearings before the gentleman's committee on the subject of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition:

> The CHAIRMAN. I see from the statement showing the cost of the fair to date that there have been almost $3,000,000 expended there which has gone underground?
> Mr. FRANCIS. Yes; that is true.

There are three millions of dollars permanently planted on these grounds. Now, there is a million and two hundred and fifty thousand dollars that has been put in the permanent structure known as the "Art Building;" a million and one-quarter of dollars, making four and one-quarter millions. Shall I give the gentleman from Minnesota the page for that statement, or does he concede it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I concede that a part of the Art Building is a permanent structure.

Mr. HEPBURN. A million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! Then there is $750,000 for permanent structure put upon the college grounds of Washington University. Is not that correct?

Mr. TAWNEY. The exposition company pays $750,000 for the use of the Washington University building for a period of three years, and the Washington University is obligated under their contract to use that money in grading and in ornamenting the grounds which are within the exposition grounds.

Mr. HEPBURN. I read from page 37, from the statement of Governor Francis:

> These buildings are all permanent, fireproof structures. Therefore, of the money at our command $750,000 will go into permanent structures for educational purposes.

That is upon the grounds of the Washington University. There are $5,000,000 of permanent improvements put upon the grounds of St. Louis and of this educational institution, money of the exposition, either the $5,000,000 raised by the city or the $5,000,000 raised by the corporation or the $5,000,000 given by the General Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman consider that a less wise expenditure than to place the same amount of money in buildings which will remain there for only a few months and then be removed and be of no benefit to anyone?

Mr. HEPBURN. Surely not. I am making no criticism of the board; no criticism. I have been unfortunate if the gentleman has not understood me. I am approving of what these gentlemen have done. Here is $5,000,000 saved, not wasted; $5,000,000 saved to St. Louis, not wasted; and therefore I say, "Gentlemen of St. Louis, you who are largely beneficiaries from the five millions the Government has already given to you, put your hands in your pocket and take the bonds of this association for $4,600,000."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As one who knows the details of this whole transaction, I should like to ask my friend from Iowa whether he does not know that $10,000,000 has been expended, raised by the city of St. Louis and expended by the corporation, before one dollar could be touched of the money appropriated by the Government, and that the improvements of which he speaks have all been from money appropriated by the city——

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield, because that is entirely impertinent to the argument I am trying to make. I am not saying that St. Louis did not raise her $5,000,000; I am not saying that the corporation did not raise its $5,000,000. They were compelled to before they could get $5,000,000 from the United States. That is conceded. They did it. Now they are getting it back. Again, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact—and I do not criticise it at all; I am glad that it is true—I want to call attention to the fact that $40,000,000 will have been expended upon these works when the exposition opens. Am I not correct in that statement, gentlemen? Forty million dollars! Mr. Francis says, "There will have been expended when our gates open, gentlemen, $40,000,000. That will be the aggregate cost of the exposition."

Oh, it will be magnificent; no doubt of that. I am glad that they were such financiers that they might raise this stupendous sum, and I am glad that they have it in their minds and hearts to expend it in the education of the American people. It is a grand enterprise. This gentleman informs us further that of that $40,000,000, $20,000,000 has been expended in labor. Fifty per cent of all the cost of that great structure, or series of structures—seven hundred and odd buildings—is labor. Twenty millions of dollars!

Is there any dispute about that, gentlemen? If there is, I will turn to the page where the statement has been authoritatively made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman has asked the question, I will say that the president of the exposition company did state to the committee that when the exposition was opened and the exhibits all installed there would have been an expenditure of about $40,000,000 on the grounds. That was his estimate. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I have here a detailed statement of the expenditures, which I was to put into the hearings, but neglected to do, and I want to call his attention to the fact that that involves an expenditure of about $4,000,000 by the commissionnaires for their buildings on the grounds. It involves an expenditure of nine or ten millions of dollars——

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I think it is hardly fair for the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman has asked if that is correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am stating the facts. I do not care who expended it. It has been expended under directions in that locality for labor. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. TAWNEY. And for the buildings of the exposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am trying to show that the people of St. Louis—the laboring classes of St. Louis—have had $20,000,000 given to them through this great enterprise. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; not by the United States; but the United States has done her full share, I say. I am trying to show that the people of St. Louis have been largely the beneficiaries because of this largess of the nations and the people, and that now something ought to be done on their part in acknowledgment of it, viz, the loaning—a little, petty, trivial thing on their part—of four and a half millions of their wealth on what is called "undoubted security" for six or eight months. Mr. Chairman, not only this, the laboring classes of St. Louis have not only had this vast amount of labor, but they have had it under circumstances that make more than five millions of it a gift to them. The city of St. Louis, instead of strengthening the hands of these gentlemen who had charge of this great work and relieving them from the oppressions and extortions of labor, have simply refused or neglected to do anything and compelled these gentlemen to pay an excess of 25 per cent of the prices of labor that they were paying when they began the enterprise.

It has gone on to a limit of extortion almost incredible. Carpenters have been paid $4.40 for eight hours of work; plasterers, from $5 to $7 for eight hours of work; electrical workers, $5; iron workers, $4.40; common laborers, $2—all for eight hours' work each. Those are the prices that they have paid; an excess of 25 per cent, the president of the institution says, over the prices that they paid when the enterprise was begun. Now, then, St. Louis has had these five millions permanently placed in those grounds. The people of St. Louis have had the labor coming from twenty millions of expenditure. They have had this five millions of excess extorted from the Commission. The people of St. Louis have had it. Outsiders have had no participation in these extra and extraordinary prices that seem willingly to have been paid. Is it not true that under such circumstances St. Louis should do something?

But this is not all. It is estimated that the attendance will be vastly in excess of the attendance at the fair in the city of Chicago. Think of the millions who were there! It is not at all improbable that five, six, possibly seven millions of people will take their way to the city of St. Louis between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of December. All of these millions leave their dollars there. Suppose there are but five millions, and suppose that they are there long enough to expend $10 each. We would then have the enormous sum of $50,000,000 which will go into the coffers of the business men of that city, resultant from this fair. Under those circumstances ought they to ask the people of the United States, who the gentleman tells us have already given them $5,000,000, to loan five millions more? Gentlemen talk about this being returned. I do not believe it. It will be contrary to the experience of the United States, save in one instance. Is it fair for the patriotic people of St. Louis to ask that Democrats especially should violate the Constitution of the United States and make of the United States Government a money loaner?

Oh, I know that this is the age of progressive Democracy. They progress from the good old days of Jackson and of that time. A little while ago I saw the gentleman from Georgia, from the Atlanta district [Mr. LIVINGSTON], a progressive Democrat, who wrote the Ocala platform, which authorized the loan of greenbacks to the farmer upon a security of farm products. A progressive Democrat! Ah, he has progressed from Jackson's time, and he is progressing still. In that platform he did not propose to loan money to any but the farmers. Now they are taking in the corporations; the day of good feeling has come. They have no longer their knives and tomahawks out for the corporations. Oh, no.

Then they were willing to take security upon farm products—a wagonload of pumpkins. They have gone beyond that now. They are willing to take as their security a mortgage on the gate receipts of the show where the pumpkins may be exhibited. [Laughter.] If this is not progressive Democracy I would be glad to know what it is. [Renewed laughter.]

I am glad to know that there are gentlemen on the other side of the House who refuse to stifle their convictions with regard to the Constitution in order to accommodate their friends. "What is the Constitution between friends?" That comes from New York. It does not affect the gentleman from Georgia, I take it, as I listened to him and to what he had to say in reprobation of this prostitution of our powers.

I remember not a great many years ago when good Democrats would not vote for a grant of land for a corporation to aid in the construction of a railway, although the alternate sections that they did not grant were to reimburse the General Government through the double minimum price that was charged for them.

They thought then that the proceeds of the sale of the public lands were a part of the common treasure, belonging to all the people, to be used for governmental purposes, and only for such purposes. Now, the money of the people, the money that belongs to all the people—each man entitled to his full ownership of each individual dollar—that money can be taken from the Treasury of the United States, not for governmental uses, not to promote the general welfare, but in order to be loaned to a corporation in order to carry out this enterprise.

Mr. BARTLETT. Without interest, too.

Mr. HEPBURN. And the gentlemen say now—and I think it is "the unkindest cut of all"—"Oh, you are bound to do this; you have invited the crowned heads of Europe and all their subjects to come here." And the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] grows lachrymose in his fears that we are going to do discredit to ourselves as hosts and fail in respect to our guests. Do the gentlemen remember that the President of the United States extended these invitations at the instance of these gentlemen who are now using as a threat that very thing that they induced the Government to do? I do not think there is kindliness in that. That invitation came at the instance of these gentlemen. They were right. I do not criticise them for it; but I criticise the wisdom and propriety of using that as an argument to extort further millions from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The act authorizing this exposition expressly authorizes and directs the President of the United States to invite foreign nations——

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly it did; but at whose instance was that put there?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was put there by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. But at whose instance? At the instance of the same gentlemen who inspired the whole act.

Mr. TAWNEY. The moment that you authorize and provide for an international exposition that necessarily implies invitations to foreign nations.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, according to the purpose for which the gentleman uses this suggestion, it was in hostility to the purposes of these gentlemen. They did not want these invitations to be made. Oh, no! They did not want any obligations of hospitality to be created. Oh, no! Is that what you mean to say? Everybody knows that every sentence in that law that is beneficial to this institution was placed there at the instance of these gentlemen—not at the instance of the Government. Whatever requirement there is, is made in the interest of that institution. And I am not quarreling with that—not at all. I am quarreling with the specious character of the argument that the gentleman from Minnesota sought to present to the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that no one will accuse me of hostility to this great enterprise. I want to see it succeed. I know it will succeed. I know something about the purposes, something of the ability of the men that are behind it. I know they intend to make it a success. But while I bid them godspeed, while I am full of hope for the splendor of their success, while I firmly believe that infinite benefit will come to the people of the United States from this exposition, I think the people will cheerfully pay their share as the Government has paid its share; and I want the city of St. Louis to pay her full share in compensation for the wonderful and special advantages which in the nature of things are to come to her and her people and can not be common to all of us. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] proposed to close debate about this time. I am willing to take a vote now, if he so desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. I asked unanimous consent to close debate, and objection was made. I think that, having the affirmative of the proposition, we have the right to close; and I do not think that it can be done this evening. A number of gentlemen wish to speak in favor of the proposition; and I do not think I should be justified in shutting them off.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] has twenty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the amendments of the Senate to the urgent deficiency bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2345. An act to amend the provisions of the naturalization laws of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

S. 1278. An act to provide for the erection of buildings for an immigrant station at the port of San Francisco, Cal.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 1537. An act to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé Indians—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1607. An act granting to the State of Oregon certain lands to be used by it for the purpose of maintaining and operating thereon a fish hatchery—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2698. An act to establish a life-saving station at or near the entrance to Tillamook Bay, Oregon—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3117. An act to expedite business in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3738. An act granting an increase of pension to Linus S. Ludington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb Mr. FOWLER of New Jersey and Mr. SIMS.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. HEMENWAY (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a copy of a communication from the Chief of Ordnance, a report of tests of iron and steel and other metals—to the Committee on Manufactures, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Active, Samuel Pote, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Apollo, John Ring, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John A. Chandler, administrator of estate of Garrett S. Chandler, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Anne C. Livingston against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Joseph T. Blanton, administrator of estate of Benjamin Blanton, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Puyallup and other waterways of the harbor of Tacoma—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2009) for the relief of the estate of Sven J. Johnson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 736); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 9, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on the request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved.

OFFICE OF THE TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Treasurer of the United States requesting the adoption of an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill relating to the force of his office, so as to provide for nine expert counters in lieu of nine clerks, at $700 each; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, requesting that certain United States officials be permitted to receive decorations of the order of the Legion of Honor conferred upon them by the French Government; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. Mr. KEAN. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of New Jersey, in favor of an appropriation for the construction of a new harbor of safety adjacent to the city of Cape May, in that State. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

Concurrent resolution by the senate and general assembly.

Whereas the physical formation of the New Jersey coast, with its dangerous shoals, shallow harbors, and tortuous inlets, offer no refuge to vessels of modern draft, the depth of which are increasing year by year; and

Whereas the merchant marine proceeding south oftentimes encounter unexpected gales after leaving Sandy Hook, while the entire coast of the State offers no harbor of safety; and

Whereas deeply laden vessels proceeding north or east from Delaware Breakwater frequently encounter storms that prevent their return, making a new harbor of refuge absolutely necessary; and

Whereas an association of capitalists are excavating at least 500 acres of land north of Cape May city, and propose thereby to make an inland body of water of sufficient depth for vessels of the greatest draft, and at a great outlay of individual funds to create an artificial harbor, equip it with embankments, piers, docks, and coaling wharves, all of which on a scale sufficient to meet the demands of commerce for the coming century; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, through its River and Harbor Committee, have under consideration the needs of all rivers and harbors of the Atlantic coast, and have before them many propositions in aid of maritime commerce, including pending legislation from the Senate, looking to a cooperation on the part of the National Government in the creation of the harbor of safety, and under Federal authority deepen the approaches and maintain the channel from the high seas, known as "Cold Spring Inlet," to the mouth of the new harbor, in order to make it accessible for vessels of considerable draft: Therefore,

Resolved (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of New Jersey be requested to arrange with the Congressional Committee on Rivers and Harbors to give early consideration to the pending legislation, having in view an appropriation commensurate with the vast undertaking to create a new harbor of safety adjacent to the city of Cape May; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy hereof be forthwith mailed to each of our Senatorial and Congressional representatives at Washington.

I hereby certify to the adoption of the foregoing resolution by the house of assembly of the State of New Jersey, on Monday the 18th day of January, A. D. 1904, the senate concurring therein on Monday the 25th day of January, A. D. 1904.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8160) to authorize the construction of bridges across a portion of the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the formal reading be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

FORT SHERMAN ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVE.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask what became of the joint resolution I introduced yesterday, and which went over until to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is on the table subject, of course, to the call of the Senator.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator from Maine will indulge me just a moment, I will dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HALE. An appropriation bill is now being considered. I can only yield for morning business, and I wish Senators in that respect would wait.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Maine that yesterday I introduced a joint resolution and asked that it might lie over until to-day, when I would submit some remarks upon it. I do not care to submit any remarks and will dispose of it in a moment, if the Senator will just allow it to be presented to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. There is so much debate going on upon this side of the Chamber——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. HALE. That I can not hear the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will state to the Senator from Maine that on yesterday I introduced a joint resolution and asked that it might lie on the table and that to-day I would submit some remarks on it. I do not care to submit any remarks, but to dispose of the joint resolution quickly. It is important to me. It will take but a moment, if the Senator from Maine will allow me to call it up.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The joint resolution (S. R. 46) to dispose of the Fort Sherman abandoned military reserve in Idaho was read the second time by its title.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, and diplomatic agent in Bulgaria, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries of ambassadors and ministers," on page 3, line 16, to increase the appropriation of chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad from $30,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of ambassadors and ministers from $409,500 to $415,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations," on page 5, line 6, after the word "Belgium," to insert "Denmark, Portugal;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine thousand" and insert "twelve thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretaries of legations to Belgium, Denmark, Portugal, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, Turkey, Spain, and Brazil, at $1,800 each, $12,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations, from $84,525 to $88,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 5, to insert:

LEGATION BUILDINGS AT SEOUL, KOREA.

For the erection of new buildings for legation purposes at Seoul, Korea, on ground owned by the United States, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 20, to insert:

COLLECTION OF CONSULAR AND OTHER COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

For the cost of cablegrams in instructing consular officers to report upon matters of immediate importance to commerce and industry, and of cablegrams of consuls on such subjects; also to defray the extra expense imposed upon consular officers in collecting certain data by direction of the Department of State, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in Schedule B, under the subhead "Consuls-General," on page 14, line 25, after the word "Hamburg," to insert "Lourenço Marquez;" on page 15, line 1, before the word "and," to insert "Tientsin;" and in line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

Antwerp, Halifax, Hamburg, Lourenço Marquez, Singapore, Tientsin, and Vienna, at $3,500 each, $24,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, after the words "Buenos Ayres," to insert "Chefoo;" in line 4, after the word "Frankfort," to insert "Fuchau;" in the same line, after the word "Guayaquil," to insert "Hankow;" and in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Apia and Nukualofa, Barcelona, Buenos Ayres, Chefoo, Coburg, Dresden, Frankfort, Fuchau, Guayaquil, Hankow, Monterey, Rome, Rotterdam, St. Gall, and Marseilles, at $3,000 each, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 15, to increase the total appropriation for salaries of consuls-general from $155,000 to $171,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Consuls," in class 2, on page 16, after line 4, to strike out:

Tientsin, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in class 3, on page 16, after line 15, to strike out:

Chefoo, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 16, to insert:

Chungking, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 19, to strike out:

Fuchau, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 22, to strike out:

Hankau, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 23, to insert:

Hangchow, China.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 9, to insert:

Odessa, Russia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in class 4, on page 18, after line 6, to insert:

Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 12, to strike out:

Lourenço Marquez, Africa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 14, to strike out:

Odessa, Russia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in Class V, on page 19, after line 15, to insert:

Budapest, Austria-Hungary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 20, to strike out:

Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in Class VI, on page 22, after line 20, to strike out:

Budapest, Austria-Hungary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 23, to insert:

Moncton, New Brunswick.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 5, to insert:

Port au Prince, Haiti.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 12, to insert:

Rouen, France.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 4, to insert:

Turks Island, West India.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in Schedule C Class VII, on page 25, after line 18, to strike out:

Rouen, France.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 23, to reduce the total appropriation for salaries of consuls from $482,500 to $480,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Allowances for clerk hire at United States consulates," on page 27, after line 2, to insert:

Monterey, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 15, after the word "Messina", to strike out "Monterey;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Beirut, Buenos Ayres, Cape Town, Colon, Dawson City, Dresden, Dundee, Guayaquil, Kingston (Jamaica), Leipsic, Maracaibo, Melbourne, Messina, Naples, Palermo, Panama, Port au Prince, Singapore, Smyrna, Tangier, Toronto, Tunstall, Vancouver, Vera Cruz, and Victoria, at $800 each, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 24, to increase the appropriation for clerk hire at United States consulates at Aix-la-Chapelle, Ciudad Juarez, Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Halifax, and Lucerne, at $640 each, from $2,600 to $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 1, before the word "Cairo," to insert "Bahia;" and in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight thousand four hundred" and insert "nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Bahia, Cairo, Cologne, Constantinople, Huddersfield, Mainz, Munich, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Odessa, Para, Pernambuco, Solingen, Tampico, and Zurich, at $900 each, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 11 to increase the total appropriation for clerk hire at United States consulates from $95,500 to $96,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk hire, no greater portion of this sum than $500 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year, $25,000: Provided, That the total sum expended in one year shall not exceed the amount appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 19, to insert:

For thirty clerks, who shall be American citizens and shall receive not more than $1,200 a year in any one case, to enable the Secretary of State to provide clerical services at a number of the principal consulates where most needed, $36,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BACON. Has the Secretary read the entire bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire bill.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair may lay before the Senate the Bacon resolution, in order that I may submit a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution known as the "Bacon resolution" shall now be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the resolution called up by the Senator from North Carolina is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the unfinished business, but it would not have come up until 2 o'clock unless the Senator had asked unanimous consent that it might be taken up now.

Mr. BACON. I had not noticed the hour.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th ultimo, as modified by him yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate favor and advise the negotiation, with a view to its ratification, of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia, to the end that there may be peacefully and satisfactorily determined and adjusted all differences between the United States and the Republic of Colombia, with the intent of removing any cause of irritation or conflict, and of restoring the cordial relations heretofore existing between the United States and Colombia, and also of securing the hearty cooperation of the Colombian people in the construction of the canal at Panama.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this long debate upon the pending resolutions in regard to the treaty with Panama is about to close. Being a new Senator, I have preferred to adhere to the traditions of the Senate and remain silent for a while at least. I do not now rise for the purpose of making a speech, but to make a plain statement of my position.

I have preferred to vote with my colleague, who at the very outset announced his purpose to vote for the treaty, and I have hoped, having always been a strong advocate of a canal, and knowing that a very large number if not a majority of my people and probably the people of the country desire the treaty ratified, that I could get the consent of my conscience to support it. I have heard the debate, have for myself investigated every phase of the controversy, have familiarized myself with all the facts and circumstances surrounding the revolution in Panama, and its recognition by this Government as an independent Republic, with a view, if possible, to vote for the treaty, and at the same time not violate my duty as a Senator, representing not only the great State of North Carolina, but representing my country as well.

But, Mr. President, there has been all the time standing before me an insurmountable barrier which has prevented my coming to this conclusion.

Here is a solemn treaty—the treaty of 1846—entered into between this country and New Granada—now Colombia—a solemn covenant, sealed, signed, and delivered, ratified, interchanged, and filed in the archives of each Government for its future conduct, the one to the other, for all time unless modified or repealed. It is called a treaty of "peace, amity, navigation and commerce." For the purpose of my statement I will read only a summary of the thirty-fifth article, which is as follows:

The Government of New Granada guaranteed to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama, upon any mode of communication then existing or thereafter constructed, should be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States, and for the transportation of any articles of produce, manufactures, or merchandise of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States. * * * And the Government of the United States, in order to secure to themselves the tranquil and constant enjoyment of the advantages mentioned, and as an especial compensation for said advantages and other favors acquired by the treaty, guaranteed, positively and efficaciously, by that stipulation, the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama with the view that free transit from one to the other sea should not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while the treaty should exist; and, in consequence, the United States also guaranteed in the same manner—to wit, positively and efficaciously—the right of sovereignty and property which New Granada then had and possessed over the said territory, to wit, the entire Isthmus of Panama.

Therefore, Mr. President, we not only guaranteed the perfect neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama, but the United States in the most positive terms guaranteed the rights of sovereignty and property which Colombia had and possessed in the said territory, the entire Isthmus of Panama.

It is contended that the guaranty of sovereignty means only the guaranty of sovereignty as against foreign nations, and not as against secession and dismemberment from Colombia.

The friends and high contracting parties could have had no such intention. Why, Mr. President, I ask, why guarantee the sovereignty against foreign nations only when that was already guaranteed by the Monroe doctrine to Colombia, as well as all other South American republics, to the extent that no foreign nation should ever acquire any of their territory?

Besides, preceding this clause of sovereignty, as I have read, there is a clause of neutrality which has always been held and construed to mean an obligation on the part of the United States for the preservation of the Isthmus against warlike acts of foreign nations. Mr. Seward, Lincoln's great Secretary of State, said:

Neither the text nor the spirit of the stipulation in that article by which the United States engages to preserve the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama imposes an obligation on this Government to comply with the requisition of the President of the United States of Colombia for a force to protect the Isthmus of Panama from a body of insurgents of that country. The purpose of the stipulation was to guarantee the Isthmus against seizure or invasion by a foreign power only.

Again, Secretary Seward wrote to our minister at Bogota on April 30, 1866, as follows:

The United States desire nothing else, nothing better, and nothing more in regard to the State of Colombia than the enjoyment on their part of complete and absolute sovereignty and independence. If those great interests shall ever be assailed by any power, at home or abroad, the United States will be ready, cooperating with the Government and their ally, to maintain and defend them.

Again, during Mr. Cleveland's Administration, Mr. Bayard, his Secretary of State, said:

On several occasions the Government of the United States, at the instance and always with the assent of Colombia, has, in times of civil tumult, sent its armed forces to the Isthmus of Panama to preserve American citizens and property along the transit from injuries which the Government of Colombia might at the time be unable to prevent. But in taking such steps this Government has always recognized the sovereignty and superior right of Colombia in the premises.

Then, Mr. President, the Monroe doctrine and the neutrality clause were sufficient to guarantee sovereignty as against foreign nations as to transit across the Isthmus. There is then added in this treaty, in addition to the neutrality clause, the guaranty of the sovereignty of Colombia over the entire Isthmus. It means something more than that we would guarantee her sovereignty as against foreign nations, not that we would aid her in suppressing rebellion, except at her request and for the purpose of protecting the transit across the Isthmus; but, in my judgment, it does mean and clearly means that this country will not intervene to prevent Colombia herself from suppressing a rebellion or prevent her attempting to maintain or to regain her sovereignty over the Isthmus in case of secession. Guaranteeing sovereignty means much more than simple acquiescence in sovereignty. To guarantee means "to engage, assure, or secure as a thing that may be depended on." The Constitution guarantees to each State a republican form of government, and guaranteeing a republican form of government means that the United States intends that each State shall enjoy it if it requires the whole Army and Navy of the country to accomplish it, if requested by the State.

Not only the right of sovereignty, Mr. President, but the right of property is guaranteed—the right of ownership that a sovereign has or ought to have over the Isthmus; that is, supreme government control.

What is sovereignty, Mr. President? The law books tell us that it is a combination of all power, the power to do anything and everything in a State without accountability, the right of a nation to govern itself independent of any foreign power, which includes the right to suppress revolution and to prevent dismemberment of its territory. Then, if this definition be correct, we have solemnly and positively and efficaciously guaranteed to Colombia all governmental control over the Isthmus, with the right to suppress her revolutions, secessions, and any attempts at dismemberment of her territory, without fear of interference on the part of this Government.

If France or any other power had stepped in to prevent Colombia from asserting her rights and suppressing rebellion, out duty then would have been plain to stay the hand of such interference, even without any such express obligation.

Colombia to-day, poor, weak, and helpless, a cripple and dismantled, is prevented from asserting her sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama, was prevented from suppressing a rebellion, prevented from regaining her lost territory by this great and powerful country with whom she had entered into such friendly relation and solemn compact. No one, I take it, will deny that but for the presence of our war vessels and our hasty recognition of the new Republic the revolution would have been suppressed by Colombia in a few days. She is to-day forbidden to land her troops for the purpose of asserting her control and regaining her sovereignty over the Isthmus, because the President in his message says:

The following instructions were sent to the war vessels, the Boston, the Dixie, and the Nashville: "Maintain free and uninterrupted transit. If interruption is threatened by armed force, occupy the line of railroad. Prevent landing of any armed force with hostile intent, either Government or insurgent, at any point within 50 miles of Panama."

Why prevent their landing within 50 miles of Panama? If the President wished to protect the transit across the Isthmus, as was his duty, why not prevent the landing of troops within 5 miles, or within 10 miles, or even 25 miles of Panama? Either of these distances would have been ample for that purpose. If Colombia could not land within 50 miles, she could not land her troops at all, and making that the distance amounted to an absolute prohibition against Colombia's landing her troops anywhere upon the Isthmus. Of course it was a bloodless revolution. Colombia was tied hand and foot and could not move. She was helpless. Whether intended or not, I am not here to say; but it had the effect to stay Colombia's hands, and, weak as she is, she could not even make the attempt of asserting her rights or of regaining and maintaining her sovereignty.

It is very true that the independence of Panama has been recognized by other nations; but no country, in my judgment, would have taken this step without the example and the consent of the United States. The Republic of Panama is indeed an assured fact; but this order to the Nashville and the other war vessels was sent before her independence was recognized. Yes, sir; even before there was a revolution. The order is dated on November 2, and the revolution did not occur until the night of November 3. This in itself was clearly an act of war. It is very certain that if such action were taken against a nation of equal dignity as ours it would mean war.

The President in his message says, on page 6, that Secretary Hay warned Colombia time and again that grave consequences would follow her rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty. Colombia having the right to make the treaty, she certainly had the right to reject it. I voted, Mr. President, for the Hay-Herran treaty, and I, with everybody else, felt indignant that Colombia had rejected it in view of the reasonable terms proposed; but I deny that the fact that she did reject it is a justification of our subsequent action.

I want to say here that the President is my President, and I have for him the profoundest respect. When right I defend him; when wrong, if wrong, I see no reason why he should not be criticised in a spirit of fairness. I do not subscribe to the doctrine, "The king can do no wrong;" "the President, always right; right or wrong, the President." Just criticism of public servants is always wholesome in a free republic. May the day never come in this country, Mr. President, when our public servants can not be criticised by anyone wishing to do so. The Administration was evidently very much irritated when the treaty was rejected, and very justly so, but extreme strenuousness overcame better judgment.

The President admits his irritation in his message when he says (p. 6):

My intention was to consult the Congress as to whether under the circumstances it would not be proper to announce that the canal was to be dug forthwith; that we would give the terms we had offered and no others; and that if such terms were not agreed to we would enter into an arrangement with Panama direct or take what other steps were needful in order to begin the enterprise.

On November 3, the day after the order was given to our war ships to prevent the landing of troops within 50 miles of Panama, the following telegrams were sent:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
Washington, November 3, 1903.

Uprising on Isthmus reported. Keep Department promptly and fully informed.

LOOMIS.

Mr. Ehrman to Mr. Hay.

PANAMA, November 3, 1903.
(Received 8.15 p. m.)

No uprising yet. Reported will be in the night. Situation is critical.

EHRMAN.

On the night of November 3, with our war vessels in sight, a few men get together and secede, form a junta, a pronunciamento is made, signed by three men; this Government is informed, and on November 6th, within seventy-two hours, the new-born Republic is recognized as a free and independent state. Never in the history of the world was ever such haste displayed in recognizing a new state under such circumstances—a state without arms, organization, or the ability to defend itself or maintain its independence. The President himself says:

I have not denied, nor do I wish to deny, either the validity or the propriety of the general rule that a new state should not be recognized as independent till it has shown its ability to maintain its independence.

But he says also that this rule is subject to exceptions and a departure in the present case was justifiable. The rule he cites, Mr. President, is a good one; to make the exception is authorized by no precedent that I have ever seen or heard of. We recognize a republic without a constitution, without laws, without a navy, without an army, without anything but a junta composed of three men—a newborn republic set up and recognized in the space of three days. How different, Mr. President, was the action of Andrew Jackson when Texas had seceded. Texas had a government and an army and was knocking for admission into the Union. Hear what Jackson says:

Prudence, therefore, seems to dictate that we should still stand aloof and maintain our present attitude, if not until Mexico itself or one of the great foreign powers shall recognize the independence of the new government, at least until the lapse of time or the course of events shall have proved beyond cavil or dispute the ability of the people of that country to maintain their separate sovereignty and to uphold a government constituted by them. Neither of the contending parties can justly complain of this course. By pursuing it we are but carrying out the long-established policy of our Government, a policy which has secured to us respect and influence abroad and inspired confidence at home.

It is, Mr. President, to the best interest of "collective civilization" to build the canal and that speedily, but it is not to the interest of "collective civilization" to violate a solemn treaty obligation nor to violate a plain rule which obtains among the nations of the world. Rather is it to the interest of "collective civilization" that the same good faith, the same respect, the same sacredness which individuals should have for their contracts and agreements, the same moral principles which they hold for the government of their conduct, shall obtain among nations. I fear our action, Mr. President, will not be justified in the eyes of "collective civilization," in the eyes of the world. I fear the great influence and friendship we have always enjoyed with the South American states will be somewhat impaired.

But it is not with me a question of canal only. The canal would have been dug either at Panama or at Nicaragua no matter what our actions had been toward Colombia. The strongest advocates of the canal, Senators who for years have fought and labored for a canal, who have made it almost their life work, have spoken for it, have pleaded for it, have molded public sentiment for it, are now most strongly opposed to this treaty. With me, as it is with every Senator here, it is a question which rises far above politics and partisanship, far above dollars and cents, far above local and sectional considerations or popular clamor—it is a question of principle. Believing, as I do, that to ratify this treaty is to violate a solemn contract, to violate a well-known principle of international law, to violate that great moral principle "Might does not make right;" and believing, Mr. President, that I am best serving my country in so doing, I shall vote against the treaty.

An accomplished fact it is, but, assuming to myself no superior virtue or wisdom, accomplished, in my judgment, in wrong, I can not condone it.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President. I have received several petitions from commercial bodies in my State asking me to vote for the ratification of the pending treaty with Panama. Many of these petitioners are my personal and political friends, and for them and the organizations they represent I have the highest respect; yet I do not believe they could have the respect for me that I have for them if, with my understanding of the situation, I should cast a vote in accordance with their views and against my own conscience. It is because of my very high regard for them, and by way of reply to their requests, that I now undertake to restate, in as brief and comprehensive form as I may, the reasons which control my action.

I can sympathize with the feelings of men who in their zeal for a canal have taken what I believe to be a hasty and imperfect view of this question. These gentlemen have been led to believe that the ratification of this treaty and the construction of an isthmian canal are bound inseparably together. I have never believed for one moment that the fate of the canal was involved in the fate of the treaty. So firmly am I of that opinion that I should not fear to stake my political fortunes upon the hazard. So long as there remains upon the statute books a law which provides for the construction of the canal in an easy, safe, and honorable way, it is not necessary, from any point of view, for me to vote my approbation of any other way.

The strength of the President's position is in the fear of the people that he will not permit them to have a canal at all unless they accept it upon such terms and conditions as he may choose to prescribe. I beg to say that this is a groundless fear. I can assure my anxious friends that there are limits to the lawlessness of this Administration. Defeat this treaty and there remains in full force and effect the provision of the Spooner law which requires the President, upon failing to obtain the canal at Panama, to go to Nicaragua. I have never regarded seriously the threat that the President would continue, out of pure perversity, to disobey that law.

Much as he loves to have his own way, he loves much more to be President of the United States. With a mandatory law before him, and the responsibility for the failure or success of the canal upon him, he would proceed at once to the construction of the canal by the Nicaragua route. He could only escape doing so by withdrawing his intermeddling hand from Panama, permitting that State to adjust its troubles with the mother country, and then negotiating a new treaty with Colombia. In either event it would save the canal and the nation's honor. He knows but little of the gentleman in the White House who supposes that he would dare to face a Presidential campaign with a record of having defeated the canal by violating the law. And so, I repeat it, the question of defeating or obstructing the canal is not, either nearly or remotely, involved in the present aspect of the question.

Mr. President, I heartily join in the tribute paid by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I agree with him that, by whatever route this canal shall be contructed, the Senator from Alabama will be known to history as the father of that great enterprise. It seems a little strange to me that he and those who follow his leadership should be expected to answer the charge of trying to defeat or obstruct the great work to which he has given the most brilliant efforts of his mind and the most fruitful years of his life. I imagine there are few people who will believe that the Senator from Alabama is bending all the energies of his great mind toward making a shameful ending of his great career.

It has been charged that we are trying to force the Administration to a route where a canal is impossible of construction. This opinion is largely due to an amazing statement from Mr. Loomis, of the State Department, that the great engineers of this country had decided that the Nicaragua route was impracticable. Many people who had not given study to the matter did not believe that a man in Mr. Loomis's position would make a statement so impudently false and unfounded as I assert this to be. Let me say that I was never an extreme partisan of a particular route. I was once prepossessed in favor of Panama out of respect for the great French engineer who selected that route.

I did not then know that De Lesseps himself preferred the Nicaragua route and had sought in vain to obtain a concession there before going to Panama. While my later preference for Nicaragua has grown and strengthened by such investigation as I have made, I have been willing always to take any practicable route that might be obtained, without measuring too critically their relative advantages. I should not now have anything to say on this matter if the immense superiority of the Panama route had not been asserted to justify the President's course and to discredit the motives of those who oppose him.

I beg to call attention to the fact that the ablest and most effective champions of an Isthmian canal have all along been in favor of the Nicaragua route, while the other was championed very early by some men, at least, who were not suspected of any too great zeal for a canal anywhere.

Different commissions, composed of the greatest engineers in this country or in the world, have reported again and again in favor of the Nicaragua route. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has called attention to the fact that at a meeting of the world's great engineers, held in London, all these engineers except those of France were decidedly in favor of Nicaragua. Our last Commission recommended that route, and changed its recommendation only after the canal company had enormously reduced the price of its property. The Senator from Wisconsin, while admitting the practicability of the Nicaragua route, asserts that it was no trifling preference which the Commission gave to the other. Fortunately, the Commission itself gives us a pretty exact measure of the extent of its preference. It advised this Government to pay not more than $40,000,000 for the rights and property of the Panama Canal Company, and to take the Nicaragua route if more than that should be demanded. This would have made a difference in total cost of about $5,000,000 in favor of Panama. In other words, the Commission favored the Panama route only upon the condition that it was to cost less than the other. Except for the matter of cost the Nicaragua route was preferred. I have had printed as a Senate document that Commission's own summary of the relative advantages and disadvantages of the two routes, and I assert that from its own showing the Nicaragua route is the better from a commercial point of view. I will call attention to just one statement on page 6 of that report:

Except for the items of risks and delays, the time required to pass through the canals need be taken into account only as an element in the time required by vessels to make their voyages between terminal ports. Compared on this basis, the Nicaragua route is the more advantageous for all transisthmian commerce except that originating or ending on the west coast of South America. For the commerce in which the United States is most interested, that between our Pacific ports and Atlantic ports, European and American, the Nicaragua route is shorter by about one day. The same advantage exists between our Atlantic ports and the Orient. For our Gulf ports the advantage of the Nicaragua route is nearly two days.

The Commission also shows that the canal can be more quickly constructed by at least two years by the Nicaragua than by the Panama route.

It shows furthermore that sailing vessels will be at a great disadvantage by the Panama route, and, while the effort is made to minimize this by the statement that sailing vessels are being displaced by steamships, I believe the fact to be the other way.

I believe the statistics show that sailing vessels are largely increasing in number and will play a greater part in the transportation of products in the future than they have in the past. Men who have been to Panama and Colon have expressed to me their surprise at the vast number of sailing vessels they saw in those ports. Because of the dead calms that prevail in the regions of the Panama route these sailing vessels must continue to go round the Horn or be towed through the canal and out to sea at heavy expense.

The report further shows that health conditions are far more favorable at Nicaragua than at Panama, because of the cool and steady breezes along the former route and the dead and deadly calms along the latter. This is an element of the greatest importance in computing the cost and the difficulties of construction. It cost a man for every cross-tie to build the Panama Railroad and De Lesseps's laborers perished by the thousand. Contractors who built a railroad through the swamps of Nicaragua declare that the deaths from disease were not greater than would have been likely to occur in any other country. These unhealthful conditions will add immensely to the cost and the difficulties of constructing the Panama canal and will greatly retard the completion of the work.

Certain persons have imagined, or have pretended to believe, that my course in this matter has been inspired by partisan prejudice or antagonism to this Administration. Mr. President, my antagonism to this Administration had its origin and owes its continuance to just such acts as I have condemned in this business. I have been consistent in my opposition to everything that savors of imperialism or tyranny, and my views have never been colored by my feelings toward the Administration in power.

The Hawaiian infamy had several things in common with this Panama coup. An American minister engaged in a conspiracy to overthrow the very government to which he was accredited and with which we professed to be at peace, and American marines were landed on a false pretext to aid that conspiracy. No man was more bitterly opposed to the general course and policy of Mr. Cleveland's Administration than I was, and yet when he raised his hand against this infamy I publicly approved and applauded his act, because it was directed against a deed of perfidy and shame and in behalf of the nation's honor.

Mr. President, the experience of my own people in other days has impressed upon me the danger of permitting abuses of executive power. We may say that those days have past, and yet we know that because of conditions peculiar to the South we are subject to a more or less hostile feeling in other parts of the country. We have seen this very President abolish a Southern postoffice in violation of the law, as his own Postmaster-General had construed it, thus depriving all the people of an important community of post-office facilities because of the alleged acts of a few.

We know that this act of the President was vociferously applauded by a large proportion of the press and people of the Northern States; and we know that such an act would have been impossible, and that no man would have approved it, if the President had been dealing with a Northern instead of a Southern community.

We have seen the fugitive murderer of a prominent Southern Democrat received with honor, and given refuge and protection by the governor of a Northern State, and the President holds that governor up to the world as a model champion and defender of the law. Indeed, it was published at the time in the newspapers, and, so far as I know, never denied, that the President himself, while governor of New York, offered a safe asylum to this fugitive criminal.

We know that such a thing would have been impossible if the murdered man had been any other than a southern Democrat.

With such startling lessons before us, we of the South can not afford to say that we will oppose Executive lawlessness only when we are immediately concerned. People of other parts of the country, constituting a vast majority, may as reasonably say, as many of them have said, and do say, that they will not oppose it when it only touches us and does not affect them. Whatever others may do or say, the people of the South must cling to the Constitution and the law as their only refuge and hope of protection.

The present occupant of the White House, more than any man that ever sat there, needs to be restrained within the strict limits of the Constitution. He needs to be taught that he is not the Government and that his will is not the law.

A man who has not hesitated publicly to proclaim in the bitterest and most contemptuous language his scorn for the Congress of the United States when its acts have not accorded with his views is not likely to withhold his hand out of respect for the constitutional rights of the people, or their chosen representatives. I consider it of the greatest importance that some memorable and effective protest be made against the President's conduct. I trust there is no need to contemplate the probability of the present Executive being elected to the office he happens to hold; but that event would have a much graver significance if he should enter upon another term feeling that his lawless acts were approved, and his lawless tendencies encouraged by a vote of this Senate and of the American people.

Mr. President, others honestly take a different view, but I can not rid myself of the belief that in voting to ratify or reject the pending treaty I vote to approve or condemn the President's course. The issue, then, as it seems to me, is simply as to the rightfulness and the lawfulness of his conduct.

A great deal of irrelevant matter has been poured into this debate. We have had much talk of "mandates of civilization" and of "international eminent domain." I am not altogether displeased with the use of such expressions. The euphemisms of tyranny testify a respect for freedom, just as the mask of the burglar testifies a respect for law. But these expressions, sir, while they reveal the spirit of the Administration, have no meaning or relevancy in this debate. The state of facts which the Administration itself assumes as necessary to justify these new rules of national conduct are nowhere to be found in the transaction. There is no such law as that of "international eminent domain," and if there were there are no facts in this case to which it could be applied.

The real question lies within a narrow compass. The acts of the Administration are known. Many of the main facts have been officially communicated, and the law under which the President was acting is so plainly written that no man can misunderstand it. I have charged and undertake to prove that the President's conduct was in violation—

First. Of a fundamental principle of international law.

Second. Of the Constitution of the United States.

Third. Of the obligations of a solemn treaty.

Fourth. Of the very statute under which he was acting and from which he derived his authority to act.

I assert, first, that in the recognition of Panama he violated a fundamental principle of international law.

Let me say here that international law is not to be treated as lightly as some people are disposed to do. It is recognized in our Constitution, and the Supreme Court has again and again declared that international law is a part of the law of the land. Our greatest statesmen have again and again asserted the principle which applies to this case as being of the utmost importance to both the honor and security of this nation. President McKinley simply restated the rule followed by all his predecessors when he said that "Recognition of independent statehood is not due to a revolted dependency until all danger of its being subjected by the parent State has entirely passed away." Such is the law.

President Roosevelt recognized as the government of a sovereign state, as large as the state of Indiana, a baker's dozen of conspirators, whose so-called insurrection was not only not supported by the people, but was unknown to the people. The proof of this I have heretofore given. These alleged insurgents had not fought a single battle against the parent country; they had neither army, nor navy, nor constitution, nor courts, nor legislature, nor laws, nor any treasury except the money they had stolen, nor any form or system of government.

Unless the President can bring this act within some recognized exception to the rule, he has violated one of the most fundamental principles of international law.

This he attempts to do. He admits the "validity of the general rule that a new state should not be recognized as independent until it has shown its ability to maintain its independence." "This rule" he tells us, "is derived from the principle of nonintervention * * * but like the principle from which it is deduced, the rule is subject to exceptions; and there are, in my opinion, clear and important reasons why a departure from it was justified, even required, in the present instance." He admits, therefore, that his act was a "departure" from the law.

The President makes a very clear statement of the grounds upon which he acted. The duty to refrain from premature recognition is properly deduced from the general rule of nonintervention, and the exceptional right of recognition in such a case is properly deduced from the exceptional right of intervention. This is a correct statement of the doctrine, because recognition, where the intention and effect is to give moral support to an insurrection, is itself an unfriendly act and a species of intervention. In this case there was not only constructive, but actual, intervention.

The right of intervention exists only in extreme and exceptional cases. It is, in plain words, simply the right of self defense. The authorities lay down the principle that no nation can interfere with another in the exercise of its sovereign powers "unless such interference is authorized by some special compact or by such a clear case of necessity as immediately affects its own independence, freedom, and security."

There is no compact in this case. The President does make a weak claim, unsupported by argument, of a right under the treaty of 1846, but neither he nor any of his champions have indicated a single line of that treaty from which such an extraordinary right can be derived.

Grants made by a sovereign power must be strictly construed in favor of the grantor, and none of its sovereign rights or powers can be surrendered by implication. The President's friends in this Chamber have frankly abandoned that claim. The right of intervention, then, rests solely upon the plea of a clear case of "necessity" affecting the "independence, freedom, and security" of this country. The President himself places it upon this ground, or, as he phrases it, upon the ground of "our national interests and safety."

Upon the truth of this claim his act must be tried. Let us assume that a canal across the Isthmus is absolutely necessary to "our national interests and safety." But that does not mean a canal at Panama any more than it means a canal at Nicaragua. The law under which the President was acting declared that our "national interests and safety" would be amply safeguarded by a canal on either route. So long as there was a way—an easy and honorable way—to obtain a canal without violating this great principle of international law there was no "necessity" that could justify the President's "departure."

In this case the very law under which the President was acting provided such a way by directing him to go to Nicaragua upon his failure at Panama. There was no "necessity," and, therefore, no excuse, for a violation of this principle of international law.

I have charged that the President violated the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution gives Congress the exclusive right to declare war. The President is not authorized to levy war upon a country with which we are at peace without the authority of Congress. I charge that the President violated the Constitution in that he committed acts of war against the friendly Republic of Colombia.

He sent warships to Panama, then a part of Colombia, in expectation of an insurrectionary movement which had not then occurred, and he ordered them to resist with force the landing of Colombian troops sent there to prevent this expected insurrection. An order to commit an act of war is itself a declaration of war.

After the insurrectionary movement began Colombian troops, sent there to subdue it, were kept from landing by the superior military forces of the United States. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says that our action was intended to "prevent war." Secretary Hay says that Colombian troops were excluded from the Isthmus "to prevent civil war."

This was not to prevent a state of war, for that existed from the moment the standard of insurrection was raised; it was simply to prevent the Republic of Colombia from using her forces against the insurgents. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] frankly confesses that the insurrection owed its success to this action of the President of the United States. Thus we have the admission from the Administration and its spokesmen that the dismemberment of Colombia was not brought about through the acts of its own insurgent citizens, but through the armed interference of this Government.

Every nation has an inherent right to defend its own sovereignty over its own territory, and when one nation by force resists the exercise of that sovereignty it is a belligerent act—an act of war. To deny that it is such is to speak the language of folly and to deny the plain meaning of words. The fact that the nation thus treated submits, out of sheer helplessness, to the wrong does not in the least change the character of the act.

Unless the President can find some express authority for resisting by military force the exercise of Colombia's sovereignty over her own territory, he has committed an act of war without authority from Congress and has violated the Constitution.

The only pretense of justification is that this Government had a right, under the treaty of 1846, to protect the freedom of the transit across the Isthmus, and that by virtue of that right the President might exercise any power he thought proper, even to the exclusion of the most ordinary and necessary acts of sovereignty on the part of Colombia.

Even if that treaty did give this country the right to protect the freedom of transit, it would be stretching it very far to use that power to the extent of supporting an insurrection. But if it shall appear that not only did this country not possess any such exclusive right to protect the transit, but that by the very terms of the treaty the right to defend the transit belonged to Colombia and not to us, then the President's armed resistance to the exercise of that right was not only a violation of the Constitution, but a violation of the treaty itself.

The language of the treaty is that "the government of New Grenada (now Colombia) guarantees to the Government of the United States that the right of way, etc., shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States."

This language speaks for itself, and on the very face of it imports an engagement by Colombia to itself protect the freedom of the transit. This treaty has been construed again and again by our Presidents and Secretaries of State, and has been twice officially interpreted by other treaties.

In 1873 Secretary Fish said:

> This engagement, however, has never been acknowledged to embrace the duty of protecting the road across it from the violence of local factions. Although such protection was of late efficiently given by the force under the command of Admiral Almy, it appears to have been granted with the consent and at the instance of the local authorities. It is, however, regarded as the undoubted duty of the Colombian Government to protect the road against attacks from local insurgents. The discharge of this duty will be insisted upon.

Secretary Bayard stated our interpretation of the treaty as follows:

> On several occasions the Government of the United States, at the instance and always with the assent of Colombia, has, in times of civil tumult, sent its armed forces to the Isthmus of Panama to preserve American citizens and property along the transit from injuries which the Government of Colombia might at the time be unable to prevent. But, in taking such steps, this Government has always recognized the sovereignty and obligation of Colombia in the premises, and has never acknowledged, but, on the contrary, has expressly disclaimed, the duty of protecting the transit against domestic disturbance.

President Cleveland spoke of our having sent troops there at a time of local disturbance, but said that it was "in aid of the sovereignty of Colombia" and that the act was "highly appreciated" by that Government.

Thus it plainly appears that where we have undertaken to protect the transit it has been with the consent of Colombia and on her behalf and always with the recognition of Colombia's right and duty to herself protect the transit, and a disclaimer of any obligation upon our part to do so.

In the treaty of 1857, which was for the adjustment of claims for loss suffered by American citizens through the failure of the Colombian authorities to properly protect the transit, the following language is used:

> All claims of * * * citizens of the United States upon the Government of New Grenada, * * * and especially those for damages which were caused by the riot at Panama on the 15th of April, 1856, for which the said Government of New Grenada acknowledges its liability arising out of its privilege and obligation to preserve peace and order along the transit route.

Colombia has the "privilege and obligation to preserve peace and order along the transit route." We compelled her in the treaty of 1857 to expressly acknowledge it and to pay damages. Did the President recognize any such "privilege" on the part of Colombia "to preserve peace and order along the transit" when he refused to allow Colombian troops to be landed on the very ground that there might be a disturbance of peace and order along the transit route?

I now desire to call special attention to a clause in the Panama Canal treaty which was ratified by this Senate, the very treaty whose rejection by Colombia was the cause of all this trouble.

ARTICLE XXIII.

> If it should become necessary at any time to employ armed forces for the safety or protection of the canal, or of the ships that make use of the same, or the railways and other works, the Republic of Colombia agrees to provide the forces necessary for such purpose, according to the circumstances of the case, but if the Government of Colombia can not effectively comply with this obligation, then, with the consent of or at the request of Colombia, or of her minister at Washington, or of the local authorities, civil or military, the United States shall employ such force as may be necessary for that sole purpose; and as soon as the necessity shall have ceased will withdraw the forces so employed.
> Under exceptional circumstances, however, on account of unforeseen or imminent danger to said canal, railways, and other works, or to the lives and property of the persons employed upon the canal, railways, and other works, the Government of the United States is authorized to act in the interest of their protection, without the necessity of obtaining the consent beforehand of the Government of Colombia; and it shall give immediate advice of the measures adopted for the purpose stated; and as soon as sufficient Colombian forces shall arrive to attend to the indicated purpose, those of the United States shall retire.

I shall not refer to the debates that occurred in secret session when that treaty was considered, but every man here knows the history of the clause I have just read. The protection of the canal was more important a thousand times than the protection of the Panama Railroad. The effect of any injury that might be done to it and the opportunities and temptations to inflict such injury would be vastly greater. We expect that canal to be freighted with the commerce of the world. It is to be the means also of quickly transferring our war ships and military forces from one coast to the other, instead of having them go to the tedious journey around the Horn, as the Oregon did. Yet this Government was expressly denied the right to employ its military forces for the protection of that canal except with the consent of Colombia, because the exercise of such a power would be in derogation of Colombia's sovereign rights and would be a power which she could not grant under her constitution.

Many of us, as Senators know, felt that this article did not give us sufficient power for the protection of the canal. We felt that we ought to have a right to land our forces there for its safety and protection, and to keep them there as long as we thought proper without asking the consent of Colombia. How were we answered? The answer was that this would be a grant of sovereignty which Colombia, under her constitution, had no right to make. The utmost we could possibly ask was a treaty right to act without the consent of Colombia in case of a sudden emergency, but with the express stipulation that our forces should be withdrawn as soon as the Colombian forces should arrive.

This, I say, was the very utmost that we felt we had a right to ask, because it was the very utmost that Colombia had a right to grant. In this case, when Colombian forces did arrive they were ordered not to land upon her own territory. How can Senators who then claimed that Article XXIII contained all that we could rightfully ask, and all that Colombia could lawfully give, now claim that we already possessed the treaty right to invade Colombia with our armed forces and deny to her the right to employ her troops upon her own soil to protect her own sovereignty?

These provisions of Article XXIII were not intended to surrender any rights which this Government already possessed, nor were they intended to enlarge the rights and powers of Colombia. If anything that article would have given us larger powers than we had under the treaty of 1846. It was, at most, a recognition of the sovereign rights which Colombia already possessed by the mere fact of her sovereignty and under existing treaties with the United States.

Mr. President, this Administration has itself authoritatively interpreted the treaty of 1846 in a dispatch sent by Secretary Hay to Consul Ehrman after the recognition of the new state of Panama. I have once before read this dispatch, but I will read it again:

> When you are satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form, and without substantial opposition from its own people, has been established in the state of Panama, you will enter into relations with it as the responsible government of the territory and look to it for all due action to protect the persons and property of citizens of the United States and to keep open the isthmian transit in accordance with the obligations of existing treaties governing the relation of the United States to that territory.

In other words, Panama inherited the rights and obligations of Colombia under the treaty of 1846, and under that treaty was herself required to defend the freedom of the transit. Panama could not inherit from Colombia any treaty right or obligation which Colombia herself did not possess. If there was likely to be a local disturbance which might interfere with the freedom of the transit, did not Colombia have a right to bring her troops there under the very terms of the treaty of 1846 as we ourselves have interpreted it, as this Administration itself has interpreted it?

What marvelous, but what convenient, changes in the interpretation of the very plain language of this treaty!

First, we say to Colombia, "The 'privilege and obligation' of defending the transit belongs to you, and you must pay us heavy damages for failing to do it."

Next we say, "The privilege and the obligation of defending the transit belongs to us, and you shall not land a single soldier on the Isthmus, even though your own sovereignty over your own territory is at stake."

Then, when by this act we have set up an independent government, we say to this new government, "You have inherited all the rights and duties of Colombia under the treaty of 1846, and by that treaty the 'privilege and obligation' of defending the transit belongs to you." According to old-fashioned notions, both these interpretations can not be right; but I suppose it is answer enough to say that by the first interpretation we got money, by the next we got land, and by going back again to the first we have prepared the way to get more money and more land.

It will take but few such "interpretations" to wipe the proud and imperious Republic of Panama from the map of the world. If there shall be, as there will be, trouble in Panama, we have our election between these two interpretations, according as it may suit the mood or the interest of the moment. We may say to Panama, "It is your duty to prevent a disturbance of the peace and you must pay us damages for not doing it." Or we may say, "You have no right to fight on your own territory or to use your troops for suppressing a rebellion." Then we may quietly go in with the insurgents and annex the country. I say that we have our choice to do either of these things, and if we have four more years of this strenuous Administration we shall probably do both.

I ought not to forget that the President quotes from President Buchanan and his Secretary of State, Mr. Cass, some expressions which he takes to be an assertion of this country's right to seize by force and violence the territory of other countries for the construction of a canal. It might be a proper retort to suggest that the President is appealing for support to the author of the Ostend Manifesto which declared in favor of the forcible seizure and annexation of Cuba. This manifesto was fiercely denounced by the Republican party and was once described by the present Secretary of State as the sum of all villainies. It is at least a little strange to find this gentleman now drawing his rules of conduct from such a source and acting in the very spirit of that once hated doctrine.

But Cass's language will bear no such meaning as that which the President would put upon it. Cass was speaking of existing modes of transit with respect to which we had definite treaty rights. In a subsequent dispatch, he expressly referred to and interpreted the very dispatch quoted in the President's message. In this he says: "Nor do they (the United States) claim to interfere with the local governments in the determination of the questions connected with the opening of the routes;" and then he proceeds to set forth what we do claim, and that is, in substance, that we will not permit these countries to wantonly violate the treaty rights of the United States or the contract rights of their citizens. There is no comfort here for this new doctrine of "international eminent domain."

But even supposing that Cass meant to assert the right of this Government to force its way by military power across the territory of another country, he did not mean that the President himself could commit such an act of war without authority from Congress. President Buchanan had occasion again and again to discuss questions relating to transit rights across both Nicaragua and Panama. We had a treaty with Nicaragua which gave us larger powers in the matter of protecting the transit than any that can be found in the Panama treaty of 1846. In his second annual message Mr. Buchanan said that "the executive government of this country * * * can not legitimately resort to force without the direct authority of Congress;" and that it has "no authority to enter the territory of Nicaragua even to prevent destruction of the transit and protect the lives and property of our own citizens on their passage."

He could not enter the territory of that country with an armed force without its consent or approval, because to do so would have been an act of war. He appealed again and again to Congress to give him authority by law to protect the transit across both the Panama and Nicaragua routes, claiming that Congress had a right "to confer authority to make war in order to meet future cases under circumstances strictly specified." "To make war." President Buchanan recognized that in asking Congress to give him authority to send the forces of the United States into Colombia or Nicaragua, even to protect the transit, he was asking for the right "to make war."

Congress took the same view. It not only held that the President had no right to exercise such a power, but that Congress itself could not grant the power, for the reason "that Congress by conferring it would violate the Constitution, that it would be a transfer of the war-making, or, strictly speaking, the war-declaring, power to the Executive." This is the language in which President Buchanan himself states the objections of Congress to giving him the authority he asked. Thus the very authority to which the President appeals condemns his acts as unwarranted by any law or any treaty, and as a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Thus, Mr. President, it appears beyond a shadow of a doubt, from the authoritative interpretations made by our own Government, that Colombia possessed not only the general right of every sovereign to quell domestic disorder, but that her "privilege and obligation" to employ her forces upon the very line of the transit for its defense and protection is expressly recognized in existing treaties. The President in defending himself against the charge of violating the Constitution appeals to the treaty of 1846. The only effect of this defense is to call attention to the fact that in violating the Constitution he has also violated the treaty.

I have charged that the President violated the very statute which he was professing to execute.

The act known as the Spooner law charged the President with the duty of negotiating a treaty with Colombia for a canal across Panama, and in the event of failure to do so within a reasonable time to arrange for the construction of a canal by the Nicaragua route. If he failed to negotiate a treaty with Colombia and then refused to proceed upon the alternative of the statute, he violated that law. It would be no excuse to say that he obtained an opportunity to secure the canal through Panama, if that opportunity was itself obtained by unlawful means. No man can found a right upon his own wrong. He can not by violating one law discharge himself from the obligation to obey another.

The President claims that because he had a chance to make a treaty with the revolted province of Panama he was not bound to go to the Nicaragua route. It seems to me that there are some serious difficulties in the way of this argument. The President in his message professes to give "a statement of my action up to this time in executing" the Spooner law. The Spooner law had no more to do with the then unborn and unbegotten State of Panama than it had with the moon. The President may argue that Congress was just as willing for him to make arrangements with this new State of his own creation as with the one expressly named in the statute; but that is a conclusion of his own mind and not a conclusion of law.

The President may, indeed, recognize and negotiate a treaty with this new country, which was never in the contemplation of Congress, but he does not do it in the execution of the law. That law and every dollar of appropriation contained in it dies with the ratification of this treaty. He has "executed" the law indeed, but it is in the hangman's sense of the word.

There is another fatal fallacy in the argument that by recognizing the State of Panama and making a treaty with its Government the President has absolved himself from any obligations to regard section 4 of the Spooner act. That fallacy relates to the principle I have before stated that no man can found a right upon his own wrong.

How did the President get to Panama and avoid going to Nicaragua? He admits that he made a "departure" from a great principle of law in order to get to Panama, and he bases this departure upon the ground of necessity—it was the only way to carry out the will of Congress and secure the canal. But as I have before shown it was absolutely necessary to expunge and obliterate section 4 of the Spooner Act before any such necessity could be assumed to exist. So long as that provision remained in the law there was no necessity to justify such "departure." The President had to treat that provision as a dead letter in the law and to walk over its dead body in order to get to Panama. He disregards this provision of the law in order to get there, and then excuses himself for disregarding it by the fact that he is there.

He claims that he has placed himself in a position where he is no longer required to execute a mandate of the statute, but he only reached that position by violating a fundamental principle of international law, by violating the Constitution, by violating the stipulations of a solemn treaty, and by kicking out of his way the very law in question.

But, Mr. President, the Secretary of State has made quite an ingenious plea in behalf of the President's course in this matter. In his correspondence with General Reyes, Mr. Hay says:

> In recognizing the independence of the Republic of Panama the United States necessarily assumed toward that Republic the obligations of the treaty of 1846. Intended, as the treaty was, to assure the protection of the sovereign of the Isthmus, whether the government of that sovereign ruled from Bogota or from Panama, the Republic of Panama as the successor in sovereignty of Colombia, became entitled to the rights and subject to the obligations of the treaty.

In other words, by the treaty of 1846 we were bound to guarantee Colombia's sovereignty over the Isthmus as against any foreign country; but the President, by the mere act of arbitrary recognition, having made Panama independent and Colombia a foreign country with respect to it, we are now bound, on the principle of a "covenant running with the land," to guarantee the sovereignty of Panama as against Colombia.

The Administration can override constitutional, statute, treaty, and international law with its "mandates of civilization," but how extremely nice and technical it can be when occasion requires! When we guaranteed the sovereignty of Colombia over the Isthmus I wonder if it entered into the mind of any statesman, in either country, to conceive that the President of this country might "recognize" a dozen political desperadoes, in a single town, as an independent government of a revolted province; might then forbid Colombia to assert her sovereignty over it, and base his action upon the very clause of the treaty by which we bound ourselves to uphold and defend that sovereignty! I make no pretensions as a lawyer, but I do claim to have a plain man's understanding of the obligations of a contract.

I know that I can not enter into a contract with A under which for a certain consideration I agree to perform certain services, and then discharge the obligations of that contract by performing the services for B while receiving the consideration from A. The Secretary of State says that the treaty was intended only "to assure the protection of the sovereign of the Isthmus," no matter who that sovereign might be. This is one of the numerous provisions of that treaty which this administration has written between the lines with the point of a bayonet. Our obligation was to defend the sovereignty of Colombia over the isthmus and was based upon certain considerations plainly named in the treaty. Some of these concerned the transit, but others did not. Among other things, the consideration of our guarantee was "as a special compensation for the favors acquired by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of this treaty."

The fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of the treaty had nothing whatever to do with the transit and no particular relation whatever to the territory of Panama. They gave certain rights and privileges to American merchants and American vessels in all the ports and all the territory of Colombia. Panama was only a very small part of Colombia, and can not discharge the obligations of the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of that treaty, and therefore can not claim the corresponding rights for which these articles were expressly named as an important part of the consideration. We did not bargain to guarantee sovereignty over the isthmus to any government that might be in control of it, but only to the government that could execute the terms and obligations of this treaty, and especially the particular provisions named as the consideration of that guarantee.

Panama can not fulfill the obligation of the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of the treaty, and she therefore can not claim the corresponding obligation of protecting her sovereignty over the Isthmus. She can not claim that obligation unless she can fully discharge the corresponding obligation.

As this Government had no treaty obligation to interfere between Colombia and Panama, it had no right to interfere. Even though by the President's act of recognition he had given Panama a nominal and legal, though not an actual, status of statehood, that did not give this Government any right to interfere between it and the parent government any more than it had a right to interfere as between any other two independent nations.

But, Mr. President, there is another fault in Secretary Hay's argument—he assumes that the President of the United States is the Government. In the passage which I have quoted he is answering General Reyes's protest against the President's action in resisting Colombia's efforts to recover her sovereignty over the Isthmus. Secretary Hay's letter was a defense of the President's action. Let us suppose that this Government is bound by treaty to make war in behalf of the sovereignty of Panama. Who can exercise that right? To declare war, or to begin war, is the exclusive right of Congress under the Constitution. Can the President "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate" abrogate that provision of the Constitution?

Can you, by treaty, transfer the war making or the war declaring power from Congress to the President? Could the President enter into an offensive and defensive alliance with England against Russia and by virtue of such a treaty plunge this country into a foreign war without the consent of Congress? I do not believe it. In the time of President Buchanan it was held that both Houses of Congress, with the approval of the President, could not authorize him to commit acts of war upon the happening of a future contingency.

No matter what may be the terms of any treaty which the President and Senate may make, he can not commit an act of war against either the greatest or the smallest nation without the consent of Congress.

But, Mr. President, the obligation to execute section 4 of the Spooner Act was upon the President long before there was any insurrection in Panama. In his eagerness to defend himself from suspicion of complicity in that business he tells us that he had prepared a message to Congress at a time when no such insurrection was anticipated, and in that message he officially recognized the hopelessness of any treaty with Colombia, and yet refused to proceed upon the alternative of the statute. Indeed, he tells us in his message that he had long anticipated Colombia's rejection of the treaty and had planned his course of action with reference to that event, utterly ignoring that provision in the law.

I am compelled in dealing with the official information sent to us to speak only of such parts as we are allowed publicly to discuss. Other important documents we can only speak of in executive session because it is "incompatible with the public interests" to discuss them otherwise; by which is meant that their publication will be "incompatible" with the interests of this Administration and "incompatible" with the statement of facts by which it has attempted to justify its course. I will simply say, and that is all I can say, that before there was any insurrection in Panama the hope of securing a treaty with Colombia had been abandoned, the expiration of "a reasonable time" had been officially recognized, and yet the Administration deliberately refused to execute the law.

Such is the record as it stands upon the law and upon the facts officially known; but there are other facts which give a deeper blackness to this transaction. By the treaty of 1846 this Government was bound to guarantee Colombia's sovereignty over the Isthmus. I will admit that this has no reference to domestic broils; but on the other hand the pledge is not confined to attacks by nations. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] in his very able speech correctly said that we were bound by it to resist "foreign aggression."

The senior Senator from Wisconsin correctly said that this would include a mere filibustering expedition by private persons, even though no government or sovereign power were joined in the attack. Any scheme or conspiracy, originating in a foreign country, and especially in European countries, to seize upon the territory of Colombia would be such an attack as we were bound under the treaty of 1846 to resist. There may have been several independent movements, which finally coalesced, against Colombia, but there is strong reason to believe that the insurrection was promoted by a French corporation and a syndicate of French stock gamblers; that it was supported by their money and their intrigues.

By our treaty with Colombia, to say nothing of the Monroe doctrine, we were bound to resist such foreign aggression. Instead of that, the Navy of the United States was joined with French money and French intrigue to promote the interests of a French corporation by disrupting an American republic, and the chief of these foreign conspirators, a citizen of France, an agent of this French corporation, receives the office of highest dignity and greatest influence in the government of a so-called American Republic which he helped to create for the purposes of his corporation.

Bunau-Varilla, now minister from the State of Panama, but a citizen of France, was one of the earliest and most active supporters of this conspiracy against the integrity of Colombia. This much we know. This man was connected with the old Panama Canal Company, and the official records of his own country, including the report of the minister of justice, show that he was one of the worst of the crew whose thieving operations bankrupted that concern, brought the gray hairs of De Lesseps in shame and sorrow to the grave, and covered the French Government itself with odium and disgrace. I shall not cumber the record with quotations from official French records, but they are as I have said.

These extracts have already been published in the newspapers, and their authenticity, so far as I know, is undenied. I presume that no man here will deny their authenticity. This man is also connected with the new company, a penniless concern, organized simply to sell the wreckage and débris of the old company to the United States for as many millions as it could get and, incidentally, to gamble in its own stocks. This company was to get $40,000,000 by the ratification of the treaty with Colombia, and not a dollar if that treaty should fail. As the time fixed by law for the ratification of the treaty began to approach, with every prospect of its being defeated, the stocks of this company rapidly declined. Then it was that Bunau-Varilla left France and came to the United States.

He at once entered into relations with certain disaffected persons in Panama to bring about an insurrection in that province. The charge is made in a reputable newspaper that Bunau-Varilla agreed to furnish money, and did furnish money, through his stock jobbing French syndicate to promote this insurrection by the bribery of Colombian officers and soldiers. The very amounts of money sent by him to the conspirators in Panama are given, the very dates on which it was sent and received, and the names of the banking firms and corporations through which it was paid.

And this is not all nor the worst. Bunau-Varilla engaged with these conspirators to bring the Government of the United States to the support of their conspiracy. This statement is not based upon rumors nor the anonymous reports of a yellow newspaper. It is based upon the admissions of the conspirators themselves and upon the authority of a gentleman of the highest character and standing, Mr. Merrill A. Teague, a staff correspondent of leading Republican newspapers. His statements have been published broadcast, in the very organs of this Administration, and no man has denied them.

A committee of this Senate can have the witnesses before it and it can have the very originals of the telegraphic communications in which Bunau-Varilla assured his confederates in Panama that they could proceed with their insurrection in perfect confidence that he would redeem his promise to have the war ships of the United States on hand to support them.

Mr. President, I am willing to treat it as simply an unfortunate coincidence that every statement made by Bunau-Varilla as to the future action of this Government, the movements of its war vessels and the part which they would play in an insurrectionary movement if one should occur was verified by the event, that every promise made by this French adventurer in behalf of the United States was fulfilled to the very letter.

But there are some facts which I can not ignore. I can not ignore the fact that this man is still an acceptable representative of a foreign country to this Administration. We know how quickly De Lome was compelled to get out of this country for an insulting reference to President McKinley. We know how the British ambassador was sent packing by Mr. Cleveland for merely expressing a private opinion as to the merits of a Presidential contest. This man Bunau-Varilla holds his position here as a reward for his own claim that he had seduced this Administration into a foul and secret conspiracy against a Government with which it was then conducting friendly negotiations. I have a right to ask why it is that this characterless adventurer, whose representations, if false, are the foulest slander upon the honor and integrity of this Government, continues to be persona grata with this Administration.

It is vain to heap denunciations upon American Senators for calling attention to facts and asking for explanations so long as this base intriguer and defamer of the Government's honor is received as a diplomat and a gentleman in the city of Washington. The President declares that his Administration had no complicity in the Panama insurrection. Bunau-Varilla assumed the right to declare the plans and purposes of the Administration, and he represented it as playing the leading part in that conspiracy. I am ready to take the President's word, but to do so I must believe that Bunau-Varilla is one of the basest slanderers that ever lived or died. I am quite willing to believe that, but I want to know why he is still permitted to hold a diplomatic position here and why when he calls at the White House the President of the United States is "delighted" to see him.

Mr. President, there are some facts which, for the time being, may be more or less obscured by party passion, but which will not read well in history. One of these facts is that the treaty which we have under consideration was not made between the United States and the Government of Panama, but between the United States and the French Panama Canal Company. The regularly appointed treaty commissioners from the Government of Panama were on their way and within an hour's ride of the city of Washington when Mr. Hay and Bunau-Varilla hastily concluded and signed that treaty. While Bunau-Varilla was acting as minister of the new Government of Panama, as a reward for his alleged influence with this Administration, his sole object was to serve the interests of his French corporation.

Mr. Hay seemed anxious that no citizen or resident of Panama should have any lot or part in framing that treaty, and so he and the agent of a French corporation, between them, proceeded to fix it up without any regard whatever for the people or the Government of Panama. When the treaty went back, the junta, which represented the only thing in the way of a government in the new State, were in a most distressing plight.

If they declined to ratify the treaty, the President and Bunau Varilla, whom they considered all-powerful with the Administration at Washington, might withdraw their support from the new Government, and, as a result, the Government of Colombia would have quietly resumed its sovereignty over the Isthmus and would have hanged every man of them within forty-eight hours. To save their necks they ratified the treaty—the treaty between the Administration and the French Panama Canal Company. Some amendments to that treaty, as we know, were intended by the Administration here, but they have been abandoned, because it is not thought desirable that the newly constituted Government of Panama should have it under consideration. The treaty is not very satisfactory to the people of Panama; but it was never intended to be satisfactory to anybody except the Administration and the French Panama Canal Company, between whom its terms were arranged.

Mr. President, this Senate will ratify that treaty and the President will no doubt rejoice in his triumph over justice, honor, and the law. But I do not know the temper of the American people if the sober second thought, of which the Senator from Wisconsin spoke the other day, does not condemn his action from first to last. When that time comes the fruits of his victory will turn to ashes upon his lips. The people of the United States will come to see, if they do not now, that a nation's strength is in its honor and that only righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people. History will contrast the action of President Roosevelt in this matter with that of his illustrious predecessor.

Mr. President, a few days ago, upon an occasion that will be ever fragrant in my memory, at the home of my distinguished friend the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], I had the pleasure of listening to a very strong and lucid speech on the Panama Canal by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS]. I heard him tell of the laborious efforts made by President McKinley to remove the obstacle of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty with Great Britain. That treaty for fifty years had barred the pathway of commerce and civilization across the Isthmus. Leading Republican statesmen, like Secretaries Blaine, Frelinghuysen, and others, had declared that that treaty was obsolete, and that Great Britain herself had violated it again and again.

Yet the Senator from Indiana told us of how long and patiently President McKinley had labored to secure the peaceful abrogation of that treaty, in order that no suspicion of dishonor might attach to the construction of the canal. Let me say, Mr. President, we shall get small honor for our punctiliousness in dealing with a mighty power when it is so swiftly followed by an act of brutal aggression, of violation of international law and treaty rights in dealing with a puny nation. Great Britain for fifty years barred the pathway across the entire Isthmus with a dead and violated treaty—a treaty she herself had violated and destroyed. Colombia acted strictly within her rights when she rejected our treaty and left us free to construct a canal as we ourselves had provided in our own law.

Who will believe us if we say that we endured British insolence from a keen sense of national honor, where the canal itself was at stake, and trampled upon the plain rights of Columbia from a sense of justice where only the arbitrary will of one man was concerned? When history comes to judge of our action in this matter it will not discriminate between McKinley and Roosevelt, but judge us as a nation.

We are frequently told, Mr. President, that the act has been done, that it can not be undone, and that it is vain to protest against it. We have heard this argument before. I believe there are not now half a dozen Senators on either side of the Chamber who do not in their hearts regret that this country took upon itself our Philippine possessions, which have cost so many hundred million dollars, and which are not and never will be worth one single cent to the United States. I believe there are few if any Senators here who do not agree with the opinion once expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that our Philippine possessions would prove a source of military weakness and danger to the United States; that they would be of no commercial advantage, but a vast burden upon the industrial resources of the country.

Yet we were told that the act had been done and that it could not be undone. And so we continued to squander money by the hundred millions and to destroy human lives by the hundred thousand and to make the land a desert of death and famine. We are met now with the same argument, which seems to me most singularly contradictory in its very terms. We must do this thing because it has been already done.

Such an argument in its consequences can not be confined to any particular case. It means that every violation of the Constitution, the law, and the nation's honor that may be perpetrated in the future must be permitted to stand simply because it has been done.

I believe that the greatest thing that could be done for the national honor, for the rights of the people, and for lawful government would be to defeat the whole of this nefarious business and compel the President to respect and obey the law.

There are people who say that while the President's act was unlawful the means were justified by the end. I trust that no Christian Protestant who asserts this doctrine of doing evil that good may come will ever refer to it hereafter as "Jesuitical." What were the means, and what was the end? The means were a violation of international, constitutional, statute, and treaty law, joining with French adventurers to disrupt an American republic, and sowing the seeds of fear and hatred among all the countries to the south of us.

These were the means. What was the end? Not to secure a canal, but to secure a particular route favored by the Republican party and by the President for reasons of their own; to secure a route most favored by the continental railroads and least advantageous to the people, and to put $40,000,000 into the hands of a criminal French corporation, and I know not how many million dollars into the campaign fund of the Republican party.

Mr. President, I have not argued this question from a partisan point of view. In so far as I have considered the relations of the Democratic party to this question, it has been only with a desire that it should maintain its historic position as the party of constitutional government. It is necessary to the country, it is necessary to the Democratic party, that it do so. Those who despise law and righteousness in government are too well satisfied with the Republican party to leave it for a party which can never free itself entirely from the restraints of conservative traditions and which, in spite of itself, must still keep some remnants of a political conscience.

A party which has the audacity of its wickedness will always prevail over a party which has not even the courage of its convictions. The Democratic party can not succeed—it can not even live—by imitating the vices of its adversary. It has no future, it has no hope, except as the unfailing champion of those great principles that gave it life.

So long as men love truth and justice and the doctrines upon which our forefathers founded this Republic there will be a necessity for a party through which they can speak and act; and if love of righteousness and respect for law are to perish, God forbid that the Democratic party should survive!

I ask permission to print as an appendix to my remarks some letters of Mr. Merrill A. Teague, to which I referred in the course of my speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that certain letters to which he referred in his speech may be printed as an appendix. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

IN PANAMA, THE NEW REPUBLIC—AMERICAN'S STAFF CORRESPONDENT ON THE ISTHMUS—MR. TEAGUE'S FIRST LETTER—BEGINNING OF A GRAPHIC STORY OF THE REVOLUTION THAT BROUGHT ABOUT SECESSION FROM COLOMBIA AND GAVE THE UNITED STATES THE RIGHT TO BUILD A CANAL ACROSS THE ISTHMUS—MONEY WAS THE MOTIVE OF THE REVOLUTIONISTS, AND THEIR FAITH IN THIS GOVERNMENT MADE THEM CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS—ALL WANT THE CANAL BUILT.

[By Merrill A. Teague, staff correspondent of the American.]

The Republic of Panama stands to-day with one foot upon the wreck of Colombian maladministration, oppression, and perfidy, and the other upon the ruins of French efforts to cut a commercial waterway through the narrow isthmian strip, while both of its arms are extended in hope and supplication toward the United States.

In this strange and strained attitude the Republic is not more to be envied than it is to be pitied. Born of a revolution effected without bloodshed, it faces prospects more roseate than were ever before held out to any other nation within twenty-three days of its birth. In fact few governments, even among those whose maturity is of the ages, are more fortunately situated than is this, the baby among nations. Straight ahead of Panama, with realization of them all guaranteed by the protectorate which the United States has assumed, lies the certainty of a plethoric treasury, freedom from debt, nominal taxes, absolute security in independence, a prevailing peace, and the unlimited enrichment of her citizens through the early and inevitable development of the country's natural resources. These are advantages very few nations have ever enjoyed, but over against them must be placed the catalogue of disadvantages and deterrents—a catalogue, which excites the keenest pity.

Panama is to-day a land of indecision, hesitation, and chaos. In all the Republic's domain, comprising an area about equal to that of the State of Indiana, there is not one man, native Panamaian, who has ever demonstrated the possession of abilities of that order required of one who would successfully lead a people to the accomplishment of a great purpose. Of able business men, astute politicians, adventurers, and schemers in general there are more than any country requires; but of statesmen, diplomats, and other real leaders there are practically none at all. The very men who brought the Republic into existence—and we are speaking now of the native or quasi-native element among them—are novices in everything pertaining to the science of government. These men are now in charge of the Government, and, while there is no suspicion of their integrity or of the sincerity of their purpose, they are woefully lacking in ability to do the work they have undertaken in the way it should be done according to the situation which confronts them. The result is that upon every hand the inquiring visitor encounters ignorance, doubt, and uncertainty where there should be, if the independent movement is to be carried to its full fruition, intelligence, determination, and fixed ability.

Careful investigation shows that there is more or less reason for this condition, which stands first in the pity-exciting catalogue. This new Republic came into being without any definite political purpose. It was conceived solely of a determination to have the canal connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific constructed across the Isthmus, and at no other place. Had Colombia ratified the Hay-Herran treaty the revolution of the 3d of November would never have taken place. That is freely admitted by everybody in any way concerned in bringing about the independence of Panama. The inevitable conclusion is that the Panamaians were not sufficiently displeased with Colombian sovereignty and administration to have revolted because of any desire for real independence. That, too, is conceded by the leaders in the revolutionary movement. It is true that a strong indictment is drawn by these men against Colombia for her sins of omission and commission; but that indictment is more of an afterthought, framed for purposes of political justification, than it is a statement of independence-provoking grievances.

MONEY WAS THEIR MOTIVE.

The motive underlying the creation of the Republic was, consequently, more selfish than patriotic; more sordid than sentimental. The people of Panama, knowing better than do any other people the enormous value to them of a ship canal across the Isthmus, played for that advantage instead of for any real improvement in the condition of their Government. The riches they will realize from the construction and operation of the canal were more weighty considerations with them than was thought of political liberty; and fortunately for their purpose they found the United States ready to join hands with them. The effect of bringing a Republic into existence under such circumstances is daily becoming more and more apparent. The instigators of the movement for independence, having no such thing as Panamaian patriotism to appeal to, were forced, in order to carry out their project, to wield an influence as sordid as were their own motives. These men, who figure now as the responsible heads of the republican government, will very frankly admit that they proceeded with the scheme for independence not by addressing themselves to the desire of the Isthmians to be free from Colombia, but by secretly corrupting those who were in position to hinder execution of their purpose.

So freely are admissions of this nature made that last evening one of the members of the governing junta, frankly and without hesitation, and in return for the simple asking, gave to your correspondent a list of the men who were bribed to support the revolutionary movement, and the amount paid to each one. These bribes are termed bonuses here, and the payment of them is freely talked about in the streets and hotels; nor does any Panamaian seem to think that the men who sold their influence for stated sums in Colombian currency have in any manner compromised themselves. To such an extent was the plan of winning by corruption carried out that every dollar of public money in the former Department of Panama was attached by the revolutionists, and has since been paid out to those men who accepted bonuses from the instigators of the movement for independence. Nor was this sum sufficient to insure the success of the plan. It was used as far as it would go, and when it was exhausted the revolutionists resorted to promises, which have since been redeemed by the payment of sums taken from the loan of $300,000 made about the middle of the month to the new Republic by J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York.

FAITH IN THE UNITED STATES.

The promoters of the revolution are, therefore, compelled by experience to distrust a large proportion of those men upon whom they are now forced to rely. They know that the army and the police force was purchased to support the revolution, and, knowing that these factors are susceptible to corruption, they do not know to-day whether the military and police officials are true or untrue to the Republic. The Panamaian naval establishment stands in exactly the same position as does the army and the police force, and since it is upon these agencies that the new Government must depend in greater or less degree for its security, there is fear and suspicion discover-able upon every hand. The weakness of the present Government, its lack of purpose and indecision, are, therefore, excusable in a measure.

The real revolutionists know that they have to deal with a good-sized company of Colombian Benedict Arnolds, and they deal cautiously and suspiciously. All they hope for is that they can keep things going as they now are until after the canal treaty is signed by the members of the junta. That act of ratification accomplished, the revolutionists will have little interest left in the Republic; and just here there enters into this consideration an element which must, perforce, be little understood in the States. That element is the bland and childlike faith of the revolutionists in the Government of the great American Republic.

It matters not what statements may be made at Washington or what stories may be current in the States, all Panama believes that the revolution was made possible by Washington's foreknowledge of what was proposed and an expressed determination by the Government at Washington to give moral and physical support to the revolutionists. There is reason for this belief, for it was not actually decided to attempt the coup which resulted in the creation of the Republic until advices were received from the States to the effect that if it should be attempted the United States would back it up. These advices were not official, so far as the Administration was concerned, but they were of such a character, as will be shown in subsequent letters, as to convince the revolutionists that all they had to do was to take the initiative and then rely upon the United States to insure the success of the project. This they did, and their earlier confidence in the support to be afforded by our Government was justified by the occurrences of the 3d and 4th of November at Colon, when marines were landed from the Nashville and employed to prevent Colombia's military interference for the suppression of the revolution.

THE CANAL ALL THEY WANT.

Having, therefore, had ample proof that the United States stands ready to guarantee the independence of the Republic, the revolutionists now place all their trust in America. For themselves, they are helpless in their ignorance of ways and means and in their distrust of their own people. To no other reason is attributable the decision to permit ratification of the canal treaty by the junta instead of waiting the election of a congress and the formal creation of a republican government. Upon such a contingency as an election the revolutionists dare not wait. The treaty will therefore be ratified by the junta, which has no existence in fact so far as the Republic of Panama is concerned, and the Panamaian ratification will have been deposited at Washington by the time this letter is published. Why such haste? Simply because the revolutionists look forward to only one thing beyond what they have already accomplished, and that one thing is to get the United States so bound by contract that it will be compelled through self-interest to protect the Republic against invasion from without and against interior disturbances.

So keen is this desire that it is not stretching fact in the slightest to say that once the treaty is ratified and contractural relations with the United States assumed the revolutionists will practically lose interest in the fate of Panama. They will, as a matter of course, be compelled to proceed with the erection of a regular government, but that duty will be one in which they will have little enthusiasm. The treaty will insure the canal. The canal is all that Panama wants, and with it assured, the Panamaians would be content to drift along for an indefinite period without proceeding further toward realizing the fruits of independence. Proof of this lackadaisical interest in the Republic itself is nowhere concealed. Everybody in Panama, including the members of the junta and the cabinet, will declare, if interrogated upon the point, that Panama wants nothing except the canal; that the United States can have anything it wishes if it will only construct that waterway. So free are admissions of this nature that I have had it from those high up in the Government that had the United States demanded sovereignty over the entire Republic it would have been ceded without question. As a matter of fact, the Panamaians would very gladly have relinquished the duty of organizing a government and attempting its administration. It is to this sentiment that the certainty of immediate ratification of the treaty is due.

AFRAID OF TOO MUCH MONEY.

The Panamaians wish to be relieved of responsibility for the integrity and security of the Republic they have created, and although the treaty is more liberal in its concessions to the United States than was ever anticipated it would be, the junta has not for a moment considered such a thing as rejecting it or caviling over its terms. "We would have been entirely willing to have signed our names to blank paper," said a member of the junta last evening, "and to have left it to Secretary Hay to fill in over our signatures whatever he wished to write, stipulating only, upon our part, that the covenant should contain a pledge by the United States to build the canal." That statement exactly expresses the state of affairs in Panama to-day, and in the hope that subsequent negotiations with the United States may result in that Government assuming even more responsibility than it has assumed under the canal treaty, the Panamaian revolutionists are proceeding with halting steps toward the organization of the Republic.

They are afraid of themselves, of the people with whom they will have to deal, and thoroughly suspicious of their own abilities. Señor Espanoza, one of the members of the junta, exposed the nature of this trepidation yesterday, when he said to your correspondent that Panama has only one substantial objection to the canal treaty.

"We are in a dilemma," said Señor Espanoza, "because our revenues will be reduced about three-fifths by that clause of the treaty which makes Colon and Panama free ports, thereby cutting off the import taxes now collected, but our chief objection to the treaty is that by its terms we are compelled to accept the $10,000,000 canal payment in cash. We must, in some way or other, by subsequent negotiations relieve ourselves of that requirement. It is too much money for us to undertake to handle; it is certain to be wasted and misspent if it is turned over in bulk to the Government, and in self-protection we must devise some scheme whereby not more than $2,000,000 in cash comes into our hands for current use. The remainder must be so invested and so secured and held out of the country that it will stand as a revenue-producing asset for the Government, no matter what changes may take place or who may be in charge."

THEIR UNUSUAL POSITION.

The spectacle of an independent nation being afraid to assume responsibility for the handling of such a sum as $10,000,000 in cash is doubtless unique in the history of governments, but it affords an accurate key to the situation on the Isthmus of Panama. Starting with that sum in its treasury, having no funded debt, and but $300,000 of a floating debt, with the taxes at a nominal figure, revenues sufficient for all requirements guaranteed by the canal treaty, and the peace and integrity of its domain assured by United States protection, Panama is actually helpless. Her helplessness is born of an absence of patriotism; knowledge among the more intelligent classes of the corrupt and unscrupulous character of the majority of the people of all Latin-American countries, and of the thoroughly mercenary motives for her own creation into a republic. Envy and pity must therefore play equal parts in any consideration of the state of affairs on the Isthmus. Envy for the opportunity which stretches away before a people whose independence has been so easily won; pity for the moral, physical, and personal conditions which combine to make it almost impossible for this people to avail themselves of their opportunity. Any other people would, under such circumstances, bring themselves very quickly to the enjoyment of an indeterminate season of prosperity and dignity. Cuba, with fewer substantial advantages than Panama enjoys, is doing that very thing, while here in Panama there is nothing more inspiring or admirable than an alleged republic in which the leaders have no more patriotic sentiment than a wish to avoid responsibility and a hope that the United States may do for them that which other people, from the beginning of time, have gloried in doing for themselves—secure and preserve their political independence.

[By Merrill A. Teague, staff correspondent of the American.]

PANAMA, R. P., December 10, 1903.

As has already been stated in this correspondence, the Republic of Panama owes its existence to nothing which bears any resemblance to Panamaian patriotism. The new nation is the child of greed, conceived of the project for a ship canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific. The story of the Republic's conception and birth reads like a fairy tale. Panama—that is, the better class of Panamaians—has for years dreamed of independence of Colombia and immunity from Colombian oppression; but they lacked the power of initiative, preferring to put off until "mañana" the attempt other people would have made to-day.

The canal project forced the issue, however, and the leaders among the Panamaians met it in a manner which must, in time, win the admiration of the world, for as a political trick they did that which is without an equal—overturning a government and setting up their own independence without firing a shot or spilling a drop of blood. That success was made possible because of the certainty of support by the United States does not lessen the magnitude of the Panamaian achievement.

Early in the current year Mutis Durand was governor of the Department of Panama. He had been sent to preside over the Department from one of the other Departments in the Colombian federation, and was essentially an anti-Panamaian. It happened, therefore, when the Hay-Herran treaty had been ratified at Washington, and when the question of ratification was about to come before the Colombian Congress, that he—who had the power of appointment of the representatives of Panama—saw to it that there should go to Bogota a delegation which would not oppose any scheme Colombia might evolve. Panama, enthusiastic for the canal, recognized at once that Durand had named men who were inimical to the paramount interest of the Department, and at that moment the scheme for Panamaian independence began to assume shape.

A RAILROAD'S HAND IN IT.

This was in May last. Common report and formal statements made by those who were in the movement at the time of its inception gave to Dr. Manuel Amador Guerrero, who is now in the States in company with Frederica Boyd and Constantine Arosemena, as a member of the commission appointed to negotiate a canal treaty, credit for having launched the independent movement. But while Doctor Amador is deemed the father of Panamaian independence, it is doubtful if so much credit actually belongs to him. Rather is it logical to assume that the officials of the Panama Railroad, nearly every one of whom is an American, are the more responsible parties. The railroad corporation, which owns a splendid piece of property and which is doing a thriving business, has for about fourteen years been devoting the whole of its net earnings to defraying the expenses of the work necessary to keep the canal concession held by the New Panama Company alive. The stockholders have realized nothing from their investment in that period, and as the United States has agreed to purchase the property for $7,000,000 everybody connected with the railroad as stockholders and managers have been feverishly anxious for actual consummation of the canal project. Upon that consummation depends their ability to unload their holdings on the United States Government, and those who are really in the secret of Panamaian independence give to the influence wielded by this road the actual credit for what has been accomplished.

Every Liberal in Panama knew when Durand appointed y Soto and Teran as senators from Panama to the special session of the Colombian Congress, convened on July 20 last to consider the Hay-Herran treaty, that the canal project was in jeopardy. These two men did not represent the sentiment on the Isthmus, a fact proved by their open fight against ratification of the treaty, as well as by the fact that they have not returned to Panama since the adjournment of the Congress. At the time these two men were named as Panamaian senators Jose Agustin Arango was a senator of the Colombian Congress, representing Panama. No sooner did Durand announce his appointments than Arango announced that he would not go to Bogota to be outnumbered in the delegation by anti-Panamaians. Now, it happened that Señor Arango was then, and is now, the 'special agent" of the Panama Railroad; in other words, the company's confidential agent and lobbyist. In this capacity Señor Arango has twice visited Bogota in the interest of the canal project, to keep the concession and promote ratification with the United States Government. The evidence seems conclusive that when he refused to go to Bogota—a refusal uttered in May last—he at the same time advanced the idea of independence for the Department in case the treaty should fail.

WORK OF DOCTOR AMADOR.

Arango was not, however, the man to openly or evenly secretly foster the scheme. That duty devolved upon Doctor Amador, who is deemed the wealthiest man in the Department, and therefore who has more to gain from American occupation and the completion of the canal than has any other individual. That Arango acted as the agent of the Panama Railroad in proposing to Amador the idea of Panamaian independence is proved by subsequent developments. Amador was readily disposed to advance the project, even though it may not have originated with him, and the fact stands that he took the formal initiative as long ago as May last. At that time a meeting was held at Doctor Amador's residence, fronting the cathedral in this city. There were present Doctor Amador, Señor Arango, and Señor Tomas Arias, three men who may be set down, without danger of any contradiction, as the original instigators of the revolution of the 3d of November. At that meeting—and my informant is one who was in the scheme from the beginning and whose statements have been fully corroborated—it was decided by Amador, Arango, and Arias that if the Hay-Herran treaty should fail of ratification at Bogota a blow should be struck for Panamaian independence.

This decision reached, the plan progressed rapidly. Needing assistance in working out their plan, the original trio of conspirators carefully selected four other gentlemen who might be taken into their confidence. These four were Constantine Arosemena, a civil engineer; Ricardo Arias, brother of Tomas Arias; Frederica Boyd, and N. A. de Obarrio, the last three named being merchants in this city and men of wealth and substance. The circle of conspirators included these seven men as long ago as the 1st of July. They met frequently, but in secret, holding their meetings in the private residence of one or the other of their number, with an occasional gathering in the office of the electric-light company, which is principally owned by Tomas Arias. All of the plans of these conspirators were predicated upon the rejection of the canal treaty, an hypothesis which had resolved itself into a certainty before the middle of August. Standing back of the conspirators, as advisers and counselors, were four Americans: Col. J. S. Shaler, superintendent of the Panama Railroad; H. G. Prescott, assistant superintendent of the railroad, in charge of the Panama end; Capt. John R. Beers, superintendent of the Panama Railroad terminals at La Boca, the Pacific terminus of the proposed canal, and Col. William M. Black, United States Army, the engineer who represents the United States Government in the work now in progress at the great Culebra cut.

SOUNDING THIS GOVERNMENT.

These four Americans were never present at a meeting of the conspirators, which meetings were held as often as two and three times a week, but they were kept fully advised as to all that was done by Señor Arango, who reported in his capacity as special agent of the railroad company. They also advised, communicating through Señor Arango, as to the different steps to be taken, and it was stated to me last evening by one of the seven that not a single thing was done by them or decided upon except it was first given the sanction of the four Americans who were privy to the scheme. It was under these conditions that the plan for Panamaian independence progressed up to the middle of August. The moment for decisive action being then in sight, it was agreed by the conspirators and their counselors that to insure the success of the project it was necessary to sound the United States Government and learn what attitude it would assume.

With that object in view, Doctor Amador sailed from Colon in September, going first to Jamaica, and thence to Boston. From Boston he journeyed to Washington without passing through New York, so that neither his presence in the States nor his visit to Washington might be known to the Colombian consul at New York. Doctor Amador's visit to Washington was for the purpose of conferring with Secretary Hay, but that official was in New Hampshire on his annual vacation, and Doctor Amador left Washington without acquainting the State Department of what the Ithmians (seven in number at that time) proposed doing. About the same time J. Gabriel Duque, a native of Cuba, but a naturalized American, now domiciled in this city, editor of the Star and Herald, of Panama, and principal owner of the Loteria de Panama, the chartered lottery of the Isthmus, also visited Washington. Mr. Duque saw Secretary Hay and discussed with him the idea of Panamaian independence, but it can be accepted as an indisputable fact that his visit was wholly unofficial and made upon his own responsibility, as he was not at that time in the secret of what Amador, Arango, Arias, and the others proposed.

VARILLA IN THE GAME.

Doctor Amador's visit to Washington having proved fruitless, and there being no longer any necessity for secrecy, he went to New York and took apartments at the Waldorf-Astoria. There he fell in with M. Philippe Bunau-Varilla, who had resided on the Isthmus as a canal engineer, and with whom he was acquainted. Varilla was then in the States in the interest of the New Panama Canal Company, and their sentiments being more or less the same, Doctor Amador unfolded to Varilla the plans of the conspirators at Panama. From this point the project progressed rapidly. Doctor Amador returned to the Isthmus early in October, and at a meeting of the seven conspirators, who gathered in the office of the electric-lighting company in Panama, he related the result of his visit to the States. He had received no assurances from any official of support, but communicated to his fellows the fact that Varilla had assured him in the most positive terms that any stroke in favor of independence, having as its primary object the grant to the American Republic of a canal concession, would be supported by the United States Government. So elated was Doctor Amador over Varilla's assurances, and so great was his confidence in the French engineer's ability to influence the Government at Washington, that he was not liable to see any further difficulties in the way of executing the project. Arango, Arias, Arosemena, and the others were slow to accept Doctor Amador's assurances, however. Varilla had not talked with them, and realizing that death for each would be the penalty should they attempt and fail, and that their only hope of success lay in support to be given them by the United States, they counseled caution and further delay.

Their views prevailed to such an extent that it was decided to defer the launching of the movement until after the Colombian Congress should have finally adjourned. Adjournment would, they argued, sound the death knell over the canal treaty and simultaneously give to the United States an incentive to support the independence of a republic on the Isthmus. The project was accordingly held in abeyance, although there was no cessation in the matter of working out the details. Realizing that if it should become necessary to deliver the blow, a commission would have to be sent to the States, the conspirators, late in October, took into their confidence Señor Manuel Espanoza, with the idea of substituting him for Federica Boyd as a member of the provisional governing junta which would have to be created, and which it was decided should be composed of Arango, who wielded all the influence of the Panama Railroad; Arias, who had been a departmental senator, federal representative, and a general officeholder, and Boyd, who represented the heavier vested interests on the Isthmus. Doctor Amador was reserved to be the candidate for president of the new republic; Constantine Arosemena was selected to be the expert member of the commission to the States to negotiate a canal agreement; De Obarrio was slated for the ministry of war, which he now holds, and Ricardo Arias was to be the active fiscal agent of the proposed new government.

None of these details were neglected, the systematic manner in which the conspirators went about their work showing that they possess unusual ability in political scheming and that they were ably advised. Proceeding in the same careful way, with a view to leaving no stone unturned to insure success, the conspirators reached, about October 27, that point at which they realized that they would need a declaration of independence. The pot was boiling then in earnest. All Panama was talking of a scheme for independence, rumors of every sort being current, but nothing definite being known. To have prepared a declaration of independence, ready for use the moment the Colombian Congress should adjourn, the conspirators took into their confidence three lawyers of Panama, all enthusiastic supporters of the canal proposition. These men were E. A. Morales, who was advised that if the scheme should go through he would be made minister of government (domestic affairs) in the provisional cabinet; C. A. Mendoza, who was slated for the ministry of justice, and J. Henriquez, whose official status has not yet been defined. Morales, Mendoza, and Henriquez undertook the work of framing in secret the declaration and to have it ready for immediate use.

CHOOSING A FLAG.

Another thing was the flag for the new Republic. The conspirators consulted over this several times. It was desired to evolve an emblem which should signify the unification of the Liberals and Conservatives into a party standing for Panamaian independence. A number of designs were submitted, but it was finally decided to adopt the combination of one red and one blue square with two white squares, one bearing a red star and the other a blue, red being the color of the Liberals and blue of the Conservatives. The design being agreed upon, a colored plate showing the proportions of the flag and its color scheme was prepared and intrusted to Doctor Amador, who advised his niece, Señorita Maria Emilia Ossa, daughter of the Chilean consul-general in this city, that there might soon come a time when a new flag would be needed in Panama and that she should have the honor of making it.

THEN ALL WAS READY.

There remained, then, only the army and navy and the police force to be looked after. Isaac Brandon & Bro. and Henry Ehrmann had charge of the departmental money, and from them it was learned that there would be no trouble in getting hold of the $145,000 on deposit belonging to the Department the moment independence should be declared. Trusted agents were then commissioned to "fix" the military and naval establishments and the police force. General Huertas, who was in command of the Colombian battalion, the garrison of the Isthmus, was approached, and was discovered to be willing to join the movement for certain stipulated considerations, chief among which was a bonus of $25,000 (silver) for himself. Gen. Ruban Varon, who commanded the Colombian gunboat Twenty-first of November, formerly the Padilla, which sunk the Lauterro in the battle in which Governor Alban lost his life, and which, since the revolution, has had her name changed to the Third of November, was also approached. He, too, was willing to become a Panamaian patriot in exchange for $25,000, and the officers and men under him on the gunboat were equally susceptible to influence, the chief engineer and chief of artillery each bargaining their support for $10,000, and the others for smaller sums. None of this money was paid in cash; but promises were made to pay it after the Republic was established, and it has since been paid.

In General Huertas's battalion were a number of officers and men whom he distrusted, so a story was artfully concocted that a revolutionary party of seventy men had landed on the coast of Chiriqui, the western province of the Department, and the officers and men under Huertas's suspicion were dispatched to quell the disturbance. Whether they know of the establishment of Panamaian independence or not at this time is a matter of conjecture, as they have not yet returned from hunting the revolutionists, nor have they been heard from. Other individuals and agencies were manipulated in manner similar to that employed in handling Huertas, Varon, and the others referred to, and so thoroughly was the work done that when the Colombian Congress adjourned on October 31 without having ratified the treaty the powder train for a Panamaian revolution had been laid and the match had actually been lighted to ignite it.

VARILLA PLAYED A CLEVER GAME—HURRIED PANAMA REVOLT BY A VAGUE CABLEGRAM—LOOKED FOR AMERICAN AID—UPON HIS ASSURANCE PANAMAIAN PLOTTERS FOR INDEPENDENCE DECIDED TO TAKE THE LEAP FOR POLITICAL FREEDOM—FULL STORY OF THE REVOLUTION OF NOVEMBER 3—PLAN WAS NEARLY UPSET BY WARNING SENT TO BOGOTA, BUT IN THE CRITICAL MOMENT GENERAL HUERTAS AND HIS SOLDIERS STOOD TRUE TO THE SECESSIONISTS—THE PANAMA OF TO-DAY.

PANAMA, R. P., December 12.

President Roosevelt has assured the American Congress that his Administration was not privy to the scheme to establish an independent republic on the Isthmus. There is absolutely no evidence discoverable here to controvert that statement in the slightest degree, yet it is an indisputable fact that the conspirators for independence at Panama believed implicitly, before they made a single open move for independence, that advance assurances of support had been given by the Government at Washington. This belief is so fixed that those in the conspiracy do not hesitate to say that the first move would never have been made had it not been that Washington had given a promise of support. For this leading of the Panamaians into striking for independence credit could be given to M. Bunau-Varilla, as it was because of a cablegram from him promising most certainly American support that the revolution was actually effected.

A cable from Bogota was received at Panama early on the 31st of October announcing the adjournment, sine die, of the special session of the Colombian Congress and the definite failure of the Hay-Herran treaty. This news was no sooner received than the conspirators, whose names have already been given in this correspondence, gathered in the parlor of the residence of Doctor Amador.

The crux of the situation had been reached, and it was the consensus of opinion that if the blow for a transisthmian canal under American ownership, and, incidentally, for Panamaian independence, was to be dealt at all it should be dealt at once. The situation having been thoroughly gone over, all accounts having been cast, and a balance having been struck by the conspirators to discover their exact status, Doctor Amador penned a telegram to M. Bunau-Varilla, and it was immediately dispatched.

In this telegram it was stated that all the plans were perfected, and that if Varilla could give any assurance of American support there would be no further hesitation. As he finished writing this cablegram Doctor Amador remarked to his fellow-conspirators:

"If this man (referring to Varilla) can move an American war ship so as to place it at the Isthmus to help us, we need hesitate no longer."

From that moment the whole plan waited on the reply from Varilla. It was received on the 1st of November, although dated the previous day. As to its contents, there are two versions, and since Doctor Amador, who has possession of the original, is in the States, the dispute as to its contents can not be settled. Enough is known, however, to justify the assertion that it was this cablegram from Varilla which actually precipitated the revolution, and that because the message contained an assurance of American support. One version of the message given to me by one of the original conspirators, who was present at the meeting on November 1 when its contents were made known, is that Varilla telegraphed, in substance, addressing the message to Doctor Amador:

"Go ahead. There will be an American war ship on either side of the Isthmus within forty-eight hours."

The other version, for which another of the original conspirators stands sponsor, is that the message was in terms about as follows:

"Go ahead. America will send ships at once to either side of the Isthmus to maintain the freedom and security of transit."

THE ARRIVAL OF A WAR SHIP.

Whether Varilla spoke with anything like authority or whether he was merely risking an assurance upon the known policy of the American Government in protecting the transit of the Isthmus is not discoverable here, but his message confirmed the conspirators in their determination to attempt the coup, and it was at that meeting decided to take the leap toward independence on the 4th of November. The plan was to turn out the garrison in Panama at 3:30 o'clock on the morning of that day and send it marching, with bands playing, through the streets to paste up printed copies of the declaration of independence. Orators were to accompany the soldiers to harangue the crowd which would gather, and it was expected that by daylight Panama would be in a ferment of excitement, when it was planned to hold a mass meeting in the cathedral plaza and, with the people thoroughly aroused, proclaim the independence.

Fate threatened, however, to upset all of the plans of the conspirators. Miss Ossa having completed the flag, there was no longer any occasion for secrecy about the plans, and the entire Isthmus was alive with the rumors of secession. Everybody at this time was aware that the plan was to be attempted, and at the meeting of the original band of conspirators, held on the evening of November 2, in the office of the electric lighting company in Panama, it was agreed that there should be no drawing back, and that the republic should be launched the second morning following. Dismay took the place of confidence, however, on the morning of November 3, when the Colombian gunboat Cartagena steamed into Colon, having on board 450 Colombian soldiers. Back of the arrival of this ship there is a story the details of which are not clear.

COLOMBIA WAITED TOO LONG.

It is stated that when the talk of secession became open, some four or five days before the revolution took place, Javiaer Janguito, the Catholic bishop stationed at Panama, wired information of the conspirators' plans to the Government at Bogota. This charge is denied by Bishop Janguito; but its accuracy is insisted upon by those who are in the secret of the details of the secession. Whether the charge be true or false, it is certain that Bogota had full and complete information in advance of the Panamaian proposition to secede; but the spirit of manana, with which the whole of Central and South America is afflicted, proved fatal to the interests of the Colombian Government. She started to lock the door after the horse had been stolen. Had the Cartagena arrived on the 2d of November the revolution would never have taken place. As it was, it came very near an abortive attempt, for the conspirators, all except Amador, halted when the arrival of the Cartagena was telegraphed to the city.

There was good reason for this indecision, for the garrison at Panama numbered only 200 men and would have been no match for the force delivered by the Cartagena at Colon. So accurately had Colombia discounted the plans of the conspirators that she was prepared to balk them at every turn, and speedy death would have been the penalty for the movers in the enterprise. On board the Cartagena was Gen. Pompilio Guitterrez, who bore a decree appointing him governor of the Department of Panama, in the place of Jose Domingo de Obaldia, who was unjustly suspected at Bogota of being implicated in the plan for secession. Accompanying Guitterrez were forty-two officials, clerks, and others, the plan being for the troops on the Cartagena to arrest Obaldia, install Guitterrez in the governor's palace, and then turn out of office every man connected with the former administration, substituting in his place a trusted Colombian, who could be relied upon to show no leniency in dealing with the Panamaians. The soldiers sent on the gunboat were to do this work and were then to relieve the garrison at Panama, which is considered the flower of the Colombian army. The majority of the men in the Panama garrison were recruited in the southern Departments of the Republic of Panama; but they have been stationed here so long as to have become Panamaians in fact. They have married here. Nearly every one has some little business enterprise to swell his income. They have been paid (when paid at all) in Colombian silver and are entirely satisfied with their lot, caring little for anything except an opportunity to remain here.

It was this desire to be kept in Panama that eased the way for the secessionists to secure the army's support. For some weeks before the plan for independence assumed definite shape it was intimated to General Huertas, commander of the garrison, that his battalion was to be transferred to Barranquilla, on the Caribbean coast of Colombia. This meant that the men were to be taken from their homes and sent to a part of the Republic where their arrearages of pay and current wages could be satisfied with the worthless paper currency which is printed by the millions at Bogota and without regard to stability of value. The men were accordingly ripe for revolt, and their support was secured by the secessionists upon the promise to pay up the arrearages due them, to pay them steadily in the future under the Republic, and to keep them in Panama. This promise has been kept, the amount already distributed among the men of this garrison aggregating more than $100,000.

COLONEL SHALER'S DIPLOMACY.

But in laying this plan to insure the continuance of Panama as a Department of the Colombian Government Bogota counted without estimating the adroitness of the Americans on the Colon side of the Isthmus. The troops landed from the Cartagena on the morning of November 3, and a demand was immediately made by General Tovar, who was in command, upon Col. J. R. Shaler, general superintendent of the Panama Railroad, for transportation for the entire body across the Isthmus. Colonel Shaler was most diplomatic in his handling of the situation. He could not move the troops unless he had an order from the governor of the Department, upon which he could claim compensation for his company for the service to be rendered; but his telegraph wires were at the disposal of the two esteemed Colombian generals, Amaya being second in command, to communicate with Governor Obaldia at Panama and procure the needed order. Would they be so kind as to avail themselves of the telegraphic facilities? The two Colombian generals needed no second urging, and the wires were soon carrying their demand for an order for transportation to Governor Obaldia. But Obaldia is a native Panamaian, and, most conveniently, he was unable to understand why the Colombian Government should be sending 450 men to Panama without first advising him of its intentions. Would the two generals kindly take the train, come to Panama, and confer with him?

The dilemma was a serious one for the Colombian commanders, but with Shaler suave but obdurate and Obaldia 47 miles away and equally obstinate there was nothing for them to do but leave their troops and go in person to Panama for the necessary order for transportation. Colonel Shaler was more than pleased to assist them in every way possible. The regular morning train was just about to leave for Panama. He would hold it until Tovar and Amaya could prepare for the journey. He would, and did, attach a special private car to this train for the convenience of the two distinquished travelers, and so it was that the two commanders journeyed across the Isthmus in comfort. Arriving at Panama, they were welcomed in a way becoming their dignity. The battalion garrison, with General Huertas in command, and with the band playing a lively air, was at the station to meet them and escort them to the governor's quarters. The governor himself was at the station with his private carriage to greet the two Colombian soldiers, and it was a brilliant procession that passed through the streets of Panama. Then came the consultation with Governor Obaldia. He was obtuse and could not understand the motive in sending the soldiers, but if the generals would excuse him he would go and write the order, as what the Government at Bogota ordered must, perforce, be right and proper.

GENERAL HUERTAS TAKES A HAND.

Governor Obaldia left Tovar and Amaya and walked into the arms of a detachment of Colombian soldiers, who quietly arrested him and conveyed him to his rooms in a hotel, where he was kept a close prisoner for two days. Tovar and Amaya, having waited in vain for Obaldia's return, and becoming suspicious, repaired to the barracks to be near the soldiers, upon whom they could certainly rely. They were received at the barracks with honors. The battalion was paraded for their reception and General Huertas, of whom more hereafter, escorted them to his own rooms and charmed them with his conversation until about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. But all this palaver was lost on Tovar and Amaya. They had themselves been through revolutions and knew the signs that are carried by the air, and they demanded the truth of Huertas. Was there on foot a revolutionary movement? Huertas answered that he had heard some talk of that kind. Was he implicated? The value of concealment was lost, and Huertas answered: "To tell you the truth, Generals, I am."

"Then consider yourself under arrest," cried Tovar, to which Huertas replied:

"Very good, sir! I will step into the next room to get my sword that it may be surrendered to you."

Opening the door as he spoke, Huertas disclosed to the view of Tovar and Amaya, now thoroughly amazed, half a company of soldiers fully armed. As he threw open the door, Huertas cried to his men:

"Arrest those two men!" and in an instant Tovar and Amaya found themselves prisoners of the Colombian battalion. Almost at the same moment Jose Tovar, nephew of the general and commander of the Colombian gunboat Bogota, stationed at Panama, and a man whom the secessionists had not dared to approach, was arrested as he was passing through the plaza in front of the cathedral. The die had been cast—secession was a fact—and there was no drawing back. The seven original conspirators for independence immediately took charge of the situation. The flag Miss Ossa had made was sent for in haste. The proclamation of independence was produced, but as the occurences were secret to the city of Panama, it was not until the next day that a public meeting was held in the plaza to declare the independence of the Republic of Panama. The formalities of the occasion were discharged by the city council of Panama, the eleven members of which were advised of what was expected of them, and all of whom were willing and eager to join the movement which meant the construction of the canal.

AND ONLY ONE WAS KILLED.

Night was falling as this meeting was convened. The proclamation of independence was read, and each member of the city council signed his name to it. The citizens were then given an opportunity to append their signatures, and a large number availed themselves of it. Immediately after signing the proclamation the members of the city council crossed the street to the municipal building, and in their regular chamber went into formal session. The proclamation had previously been engrossed in a large record book, and the councilmen signed it again, permanent preservation being planned in that form. Sitting behind closed doors, the council passed a decree appointing Señors Arango, Arias, and Boyd as a provisional governing junta, and intrusting to them the direction of the affairs of the new Republic.

The moment, according to the reports of eyewitnesses, was not a particularly inspiring one. The affair was conducted after the fashion of any business proposition. The streets were filled with people, but there was neither shooting, shouting, nor enthusiasm, the whole transaction being viewed by the populance most phlegmatically. The city council remained in session during the evening to deal with any situation that might arise; the saloons were ordered closed for the evening; the soldiers were turned out to do patrol duty, but there was no violence or disorder, the Spanish population failing entirely to live up to its reputation for excitability. The success of the movement, so far as the city of Panama was concerned, was easily assured. Gen. Ruban Varon, commander of the gunboat Twenty-first of November, hoisted the flag of the new Republic over that ship as the meeting in the plaza was in progress. The Bogota had not been "fixed," and when he learned what was in progress Paymaster Martinez, the only officer remaining on board, took command of that vessel and steamed out of the harbor, returning about 10 o'clock the same evening to throw six or eight shells into the city, sacrificing the life of one Chinaman—the only bloodshed in the revolution—and doing an inconsiderable amount of damage to property.

From that time down to the present Panama has hardly had an opportunity to realize it is the capital of an independent Republic. The governing junta has been directing affairs, Obaldia having been relieved of his governorship; but, aside from this change in the direction of the administration and the plentitude of money, due to the payment of the bonuses agreed upon, things are to-day in Panama exactly as they were before the secession from Colombia.

[By Merrill A. Teague, staff correspondent of the American.]

PANAMA, R. P., December 1.

All the necessary formalities for the establishment of a Republic, when the prime consideration was the securing of the commercial advantages to be derived from the ship canal, having been completed at Panama on Wednesday, the scene of action was suddenly shifted to Colon, where the leading officials of the Panama Railroad were keeping a close watch upon events. On the morning of the 3d of November (Tuesday), when the gunboat Cartagena appeared at Colon, these officials sent a mandatory order by telegraph to Capt. John R. Beers, the company's representative closest to the Panamaians, directing that under no circumstances should the scheme to win independence be abandoned or allowed to miscarry because of the arrival of a force of Colombian soldiers. This order was obeyed, and Captain Beers and Superintendent Prescott wielded an influence in forcing the original clique of conspirators to proceed with the execution of their project.

Of what happened in Panama that day, when Governor Obaldia and Generals Tovar and Amaya were arrested and the independence of the Republic proclaimed, Colon was kept in entire ignorance. All of these happenings were delayed in the execution until after the departure of the last train from Panama to Colon on that day, so that persons arriving at Colon on Tuesday evening had nothing of importance to report. The only other medium of communication across the Isthmus is by the telephone and telegraph lines controlled by the Panama Railroad. The officials of this corporation exercised a close censorship over all messages passing back and forth, and it is a fact which can not be disputed that while the independence of Panama was practically proclaimed on the evening of the 3d of November, the people of Colon—only 47 miles away—were in total ignorance of what had taken place until the arrival of the first train from Panama at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 4th of November.

When that train arrived, bringing passengers from Panama with more or less exaggerated reports of the occurrences in the metropolis of the Isthmus the day before, Colon prepared at once for the shock she had reason to expect, because of the presence of 450 Colombian soldiers within her limits. The train from Panama brought an order from the governing junta dismissing General Cuadros from the office of governor of Colon and appointing Señor Mollendes, a mulatto of some ability, to succeed him. This was in accordance with a scheme arranged on the 2d of the month, when Mollendes was called to Panama by telegraph to meet the conspirators, at which meeting it was arranged that he should be appointed governor of this province, and he was directed to stand ready to assume the office the moment the order for his appointment should be communicated to him.

LOOKED BLACK IN COLOMBIA.

Mollendes needed no great amount of encouragement, and when the train arrived from Panama at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 4th he immediately announced himself governor of the province by appointment of the junta, and took charge of the local government. This had hardly been done when Colon was thrown into a state of great excitement by the general circulation of the news that Generals Tovar and Amaya had been arrested and were even then in prison in Panama. The 450 Colombian soldiers were quartered in the Colon barracks, a large building formerly used by the railroad as a passenger station, and these soldiers at once assumed a threatening attitude. Colonel Torres, who was left in command when Tovar and Amaya went to Panama, was most obdurate, insisting that what had been done should be undone and the mischief repaired, and promising to visit upon all concerned the direst penalties. The situation looked black for the American and other foreign element in Colon, for the number of men who could be mustered to oppose any attempt by the Colombians to work vengeance upon the town was so small as to be almost insignificant in the face of the Colombian battalion, which was well armed and equipped.

The U. S. gunboat Nashville, with her jackies aboard, was swinging at anchor in the harbor; but the one thing for which the secessionists and their American allies on the Isthmus were most desirous—actual American intervention—had not been accomplished. Captain Hubbard, of the Nashville, had, it is true, issued on the evening of the 3d an order to the Panama Railroad forbidding it to transport armed men in either direction across the Isthmus, but no American force had been landed. It was at this juncture that Governor Mollendes executed a little coup of his own, to which American intervention is directly traceable. Mollendes invited Colonel Torres, the Colombian commander, to meet him in conference at the Hotel Washington, another isthmian institution which is controlled by the Panama Railroad. Employing all his persuasive abilities, Mollendes urged Colonel Torres to reembark his troops and sail away, leaving the Isthmus to pursue its own course. This line of argument only increased Torres's bitterness. He became more defiant, even bombastic, and at half past 12 made a vehement threat that if Generals Tovar and Amaya were not given their liberty by 2 o'clock, he would turn his battalion loose and slaughter every American in Colon.

Nothing could have suited Mollendes and the other secessionists better than this threat. Mollendes waited not a minute after hearing Torres's avowal. Despite his excessive avoirdupois, he broke from the conference room in the Hotel Washington, and running all the way, covered the 300 yards to the general offices of the Panama Railroad in remarkably fast time.

AN EXCUSE FOR INTERVENTION.

There he communicated to General Superintendent Shaler the nature of Torres's threat, and in a moment more a signal was going from the small tower on top of the railroad's general office, by wigwag, to the Nashville to the effect that the life and property of all Americans in the city were endangered. The long-desired excuse for American intervention had at last been discovered by the secessionists, and before Torres could have communicated with his force, jackies were going over the Nashville's sides, constituting a landing party, small in numbers, but matchless for grit and ability to shoot. There were forty men in this party, under command of Lieutenant Commander Witzel, executive officer of the Nashville, and they came up to the railroad wharf with the long swinging oar pull common among man-of-war's men. They landed with a rush and double quicked to the freight shed of the Panama Railroad.

This building—a heavy stone structure—was admirably fitted for purposes of defense. It faces directly down the street, along which the Colombian troops would have had to come to attack the Americans in Colon, and the only entrance to it is a large arch, through which the trains pass. Into this arch was run a common flat car with bales of cotton laid across the end. Other bales of cotton were used to close the remainder of the opening, and the entire front of the building was barricaded with the same material. This part of the work was superintended by Colonel Black, United States Army, who happened to be in Colon from Culebra, and who cheerfully tendered to the naval force the benefit of his engineering skill. The Nashville's landing party had brought with them arms and ammunition those for civilians who might be disposed to assist in the work of defending American interests, and about twenty employees of the Panama Railroad and other foreigners volunteered for this service.

THE AMERICANS WERE COOL.

The situation is pronounced by Colonel Shaler, a civil-war veteran, who has been in more than one close place, to have been one of the most desperate he has ever known. Against a force of 450 Colombian soldiers there was opposed not more than 60 American sailors, marines, and civilians. A brave dash, had it been attempted by the Colombians, might have put them in command of the situation, by enabling them to overwhelm the defending force, but for some reason the dash was not attempted. All of the afternoon of the 4th the antagonists waited. The Colombians were kept closely in their garrisons, while the American force did not stir from the barricaded freight house. The latter realized that if they should be assaulted victory would almost certainly rest with the superior numbers; but they were prepared to sell their lives dearly, and their deportment at this critical stage was such as to deserve the admiration of the nation. The little company of 40 jackies was there to do the work necessary to keep transit on the Isthmus open, and never for a moment did they falter in their determination. Colonel Black and Lieutenant-Commander Witzel were cool throughout the ordeal, directing operations as calmly as though they had an army back of them, and Captain Hubbard, of the Nashville, did not hesitate for one instant.

While the American sailors and civilians were preparing to defend themselves and all American interests on the Colon side of the Isthmus, Governor Mollendes was continuing his negotiations with Colonel Torres. Earlier in the morning Colonel Shaler had played his cards so adroitly as to have cleared the situation of the menace offered by the presence of the Colombian gunboat Cartagena. When that boat reached Colon on Tuesday morning she was short of water. There was plenty of coal in her bunkers; but of water there was virtually none, and the entire available supply of fresh water for stocking ships at that port is controlled by the railroad company, which maintains and operates its own waterworks. Wishing to refill his water tanks, the Cartagena's commander called upon Colonel Shaler to negotiate for the needed supply. Colonel Shaler is a most kindly disposed gentleman, always ready to help a fellow-being out of a dilemma; but when the Colombian commander made his desires known, the Colonel happened, just at the moment, to remember that the Colombian Government was indebted to the railroad company to the amount of $7,000 gold for coal, water, and other supplies furnished Colombian naval vessels from time to time.

Knowing what had transpired at Panama, Colonel Shaler thought that it would be wise to collect the debt and exact payment for the water needed by the Cartagena before assuming the rôle of a benefactor to the Colombian naval establishment. He remembered, too, that he had received positive orders not to furnish further accommodation to Colombian naval forces, and with much regret he explained his inability to aid the Colombian commander.

ALL VERY NEATLY DONE.

The latter opined at once that Governor Obaldia, at Panama, would undertake to see to it that the delinquent bill was paid, and after some discussion upon that point asked permission to telegraph to Obaldia. Colonel Shaler was quite willing to facilitate the Colombian commander to attainment of his desires; but glancing out of his window he saw rolling into the railroad yards the morning train from Panama. The time had come when censorship over the telegraph and telephone was useless to prevent knowledge of the secession from Colombia being communicated to the troops from that Republic, so when the Cartagena's captain was about to telegraph to Governor Obaldia, Colonel Shaler remarked, almost casually:

"There is no governor of Panama."

The Colombian captain was naturally dumfounded at this statement and asked for an explanation, which was readily given him by Colonel Shaler, who maintained his placid demeanor and quality of gentle speech. Carefully and quietly he detailed the circumstances attendant upon the revolution of the day preceding, and clearly demonstrated to the Cartagena's commander that there was no governor of Panama, hence there was nobody on the Isthmus who could guarantee the payment of the railroad's bill for $7,000. It was all nicely done and the Colombian was brought to appreciate just why it was that the railroad could not refill the Cartagena's tanks. There was some further talk between the two men and the Colombian naval captain then left Colonel Shaler, going directly to his ship, which sailed out of the port a few minutes later, without having communicated with Colonel Torres, and leaving the troops she had landed the day before to shift for themselves.

With the Cartagena gone, and with the freight house in control of and strongly barricaded by the American force, Colonel Torres consented, late on the afternoon of the 4th of the month, to incline his ear to Mollendes's arguments. He, too, was brought to see the futility of opposing the inevitable and already accomplished independence of Panama, and at last consented to reembark his troops and sail away from Colon in return for $8,000 gold. The Royal Mail steamer Orinoco (English) was at her dock at the time, and as the charge for returning the Colombian battalion to Cartagena was only about $3,500 gold, there was a good margin of profit in the bargain Torres had driven; but to the discouragement of such patriots, it may be stated that the Colombian Government, learning of the transaction through the wide publicity given to it, compelled Torres to disgorge when he reached Cartagena. The deal having been made, the question was to raise the $8,000 necessary to make it effective. That amount in gold is not to be had on the Isthmus of Panama upon demand, and Mollendes was in somewhat of a quandary. There are, however, various ways out of a dilemma, and Mollendes bethought himself of Colonel Shaler.

It happened, very fortunately, that the Panama Railroad had $8,000 gold on hand at the time, but that corporation is not engaged in the business of transporting Colombian soldiers at its own expense. The money was forthcoming, however, and a very pretty story was then fixed up and sent to the press in the States about the generosity shown by the merchants of Colon and the promptitude with which they raised $8,000 gold (equal to $20,000 in Colombian currency) to satisfy Colonel Torres. That story was pure fiction. The fact is that when Mollendes reported his demands to Colonel Shaler that gentleman telegraphed to the firms of Isaac Brandon & Bros. and Henry Ehrmann, bankers, of Panama, who held on deposit all the public money on the Isthmus. In this telegram Colonel Shaler stated that the Isthmus could be cleared of Colombian soldiers by the payment of $8,000 gold, and asked if the bankers would reimburse the railroad from the public funds if it advanced the sum needed. Brandon & Bros. and Ehrmann lost no time in answering in the affirmative, and the $8,000 was delivered by the Panama Railroad to Governor Mollendes, who turned it over to Colonel Torres.

LOOKING AHEAD.

This transaction completed, the Colombian troops marched from the barracks to the Royal Mail dock to board the steamer for Cartagena. This dock runs at right angles to the freight house of the Panama Railroad, distant only about 100 feet, and the Colombian troops had no sooner marched out onto the dock than Lieutenant-Commander Witzel and Colonel Black swung the line of the American barricade out so as to close and command the dock on which the Colombians were massed. It was the morning of the 5th of November before all of these details had been attended to, the opposing forces having rested on their arms during the night of the 4th. After reaching the dock and being just ready to go aboard the English steamer, the Colombian troops threatened to revolt because the captain of the Orinoco demanded that they surrender all their arms into the ship's charge before coming aboard. The delay was protracted, the American force standing guard behind its barricade while it lasted.

The Colombians conceded the point in the end, however, and stacked arms on the dock, leaving it to the stevedores to take charge of and store them in the hold. Very soon thereafter the British steamer sailed away, and the secessionists were left in absolute and unopposed possession of the entire Isthmus, not a shot having been fired by them in the achievement of their independence.

Such is the story, in its various phases, as I have given it in this and the preceding letters, of the recent revolution on the Isthmus. That it brought into existence a new republic is a matter of secondary condition to the Isthmians, who count only upon the fact that they have brought about a condition under which the ship canal is certain to be constructed.

For their political liberty they care nothing: for the canal they are willing to play in desperation, no matter how high the stakes may be fixed, and now that they have accomplished their primary purpose and secured the establishment of an American protectorate over the Isthmus they are willing to abandon the Isthmus to its fate, serenely confident that the United States will preserve its integrity and independence and regulate whatever may, perchance, happen to go wrong.

Among the isthmians themselves talk is already current of the coming of that day when the United States will, from self-interest, be compelled to annex this country and create it into an American territory; and that prospect stretches away in the distance just as certainly as does the construction of the canal by American enterprise, ingenuity, and capital. Measuring this prospect against all that has been done in the last few months, culminating in the revolution of the 3d of November, one must set down the Republic of Panama as a contradiction of the most stupendous character.

ANOMALIES OF THE NEW NATION—EXISTS UNDER AN ORDINANCE OF PANAMA'S COUNCIL—THE PEOPLE NOT CONSIDERED—THOSE IN THE SEVEN PROVINCES ON THE ISTHMUS WERE NOT ASKED THEIR OPINION AS TO THE WISDOM OR UNWISDOM OF SECESSION, THE CITY COUNCIL OF PANAMA ASSUMING ENTIRE RESPONSIBILITY FOR DECLARING THE ISTHMIAN TERRITORY A FREE AND INDEPENDENT STATE—DEMAND FOR A GOVERNMENT FOUNDED UPON THE CONSENT OF THE PEOPLE.

[By Merrill A. Teague, staff correspondent of the American.]

PANAMA, REPUBLIC OF PANAMA, December 16.

It is not necessary to go far afield when seeking justification of the judgment that the Republic of Panama stands as a contradiction among nations. The American colonies revolted against England and set up their independence under the provocation of lesser grievances than Panama for years has been charging up against Colombia; yet Panama never found cause for rebellion and secession in Colombian oppression.

That the new Republic was born without the incentive of patriotism and with no higher purpose in view than the purely commercial one of securing the construction of a ship canal across the narrow isthmian strip has already been shown in this correspondence. Lack of resentment toward Colombia because of her oppressive administration, lack of patriotism, and lack of a national purpose political in character constitute three striking contradictions that rest at the very foundation of this new Republic's existence, and that serves to isolate it from other nations that have won their independence. The entire absence of anything resembling self-reliance and the implicit confidence shown in the United States, upon which the whole republican structure leans absolutely for support and maintenance, is a fourth in the list of strange contradictions discoverable here. There are others equally striking that may be traced without in the smallest way compromising the fact of the Republic's existence, an existence as actual as it is welcome to the people of the Isthmus. These contradictions form a vital chapter in any story which purports to cover the situation in Panama in its various phases, and they must be considered.

THE COLOMBIAN FEDERATION.

In order to get at and present them properly it may be well to start with the general proposition, anomalous though it may seem, for the Republic is a fact, that, judging by accepted standards, the Republic of Panama is nonexistant. The territory known to the Colombian Federation as the Department of Panama, and now embraced by the Republic, is a long, narrow strip of land extending in a generally easterly and westerly direction. It is about 475 miles long, measured in a straight line, and varies in width from about 47 miles between Colon and Panama to something more than 100 miles at its eastern extremity and along the eighty-first parallel of longitude. On the west it is bounded by Costa Rica, with which nation there is a long-standing boundary dispute, while on the east the Gulf of Darien and the Atrato River mark its separation from the South American mainland and the great body of the Colombian Republic. The coast line, considerably more than 1,000 miles in length, is rough and broken. The surface of the country is generally mountainous, although immense swamps and stretches of treeless upland are frequent.

Except along the coast, the country is almost entirely uninhabited, all of the towns and cities of any importance being located next the sea or very near to it. In the interior are bands of Indians, two or three of the more important tribes of which have rarely been communicated with. Vast areas in the extreme eastern and western portions of the country remain wholly unexplored, and the knowledge of what the interior holds is most limited. In this territory there are supposed to live, including Indians, about 300,000 persons. No attempt has ever been made to take a census of the population, so the figure named can only be taken as a more or less accurate estimate.

PEOPLE HAD NO VOICE IN IT.

This territory, while it stood in the Colombian federation as the Department of Panama, and therefore at the time of the secession, was divided into seven provinces, viz, Chiriqui, Los Santos, Veraguas, Panama, Colon, Bocas del Toro, and Cocia. Each of these provinces was governed by a governor, subordinate to the departmental governor. Each had its council, and each was entitled to representation—by senators and representatives—in the two branches of the Colombian Congress, which sat at Bogota.

It will be seen from this explanation that no matter how corrupt, inefficient, and oppressive the old order of things may have been, the fabric of the State was complete in all its details, the governmental structure having been carried down as perfectly in theory as it is in our own Union. It follows from this as a natural presumption that in the secessionist movement all of these provinces should have had a voice. It happens, however, that, natural as that presumption may be, it is wholly groundless in this instance. The natural corollary of the last statement is that the Republic as it stands does not represent the people of Panama—speaking now of the entire Department—and such is actually the case. It may represent them in the sense that the sentiment of all the people concurs in what has been done, but it is an indisputable fact that outside of the city of Panama the people of the new Republic had no voice whatever in the establishment of the Republic.

WERE NOT IN THE SECRET.

In previous letters I have sketched the story of the secessionist movement. It began with three men, and was executed under the supervision of those three and four others, the seven working under the advice and counsel of four Americans. Before the coup d'état others were, perforce, taken into the secret; but so closely were the plans guarded that those who were really in the secret and knew definitely the details might be counted on the fingers of the two hands. This brings us to the revolution itself, and introduces the strangest of all the contradictions discoverable in connection with the birth of this national infant. The uprising took place on the 3d day of November, being initiated by the arrest of Generals Tovar and Amaya and Governor Obaldia, which occurrences took place in the city of Panama. That city knew, of course, what had occurred the moment the arrests were effected, but Colon was kept in ignorance of the secession until the following day. It was on the 4th of the month that the public meeting was held in the Cathedral plaza, Panama, the independence of the Republic proclaimed, and the declaration of independence—or manifestation, as they call it here—was signed.

Bearing in mind the fact that seven men, aided by the soldiers and others whose support for the movement had been purchased with dollars, were alone responsible for the sudden revolution in the political status of Panama, one may wander away down a stretch of not uninteresting inquiries. Were the people of the other provinces consulted as to what it was proposed by the secessionists to do? They were not. Were the people, speaking in general terms, of the provinces of Colon and Panama let into the secret? They were not. They knew, by general rumor, that a revolution was on the tapis, but they had not been consulted nor their advice asked as to the wisdom or unwisdom of what was contemplated. Was a provisional congress, composed of delegates from the several provinces, held for the purpose of debating the project and framing a bill of separation? Nothing of the kind was ever thought of. How, then, was the affair carried through? In this simple and unique manner:

DONE BY A MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

The little band of secessionists let the members of the city council of Panama into their secret late in October, when it became evident that a blow would have to be struck very soon or forever withheld. These city councilmen, eleven in number, were willing to further the project, so that when the public meeting was held in the Cathedral plaza, Panama, on November 4, they were all in attendance. They, too, were the first to sign the declaration of independence, and immediately after that formality they adjourned across the street to the municipal building and went into session behind closed doors. Their first act then was to pass the declaration, which had already been engrossed in a book of record, and to append their names to the engrossed copy. This done, the city council appointed the three members of the provisional governing junta, authorizing them to take charge of the affairs of the new Republic. The junta assembled at once and named the members of the provisional cabinet, and the new Republic became a fact. On the same day Porfilio Mollendes had taken charge of affairs at Colon as provisional governor, appointed by the junta; but outside of the cities of Panama and Colon and along the line of the Panama Railroad the people of the new Republic were in entire ignorance of the fact that they were no longer subjects of Colombia.

It seems almost incredible that the municipal council of a city of fewer than 25,000 people should take unto themselves the right to create a republic out of a territory equal in area to the State of Indiana; but that was what was actually done in this case. Instead of a provincial congress, the city council of Panama passed the act of independence. Every legislative formality incident to the creation of this Republic was performed by these city councilmen, no portion of the new Republic except the city of Panama having a voice, by representation, in what was done. Nor has any other portion of the new Republic had such a voice to this day. No Congress has been called to ratify the secession, nor has any one of the seven provinces been requested to assemble, in council or by mass meeting, to pass an act of ratification. There might be a parallel for this procedure if the municipal council of one of our own cities—Indianapolis, for instance, since the area of Indiana is about the same as that of Panama—should pass an ordinance declaring the State of Indiana a free and independent nation; but the average American imagination is impotent to summon such a spectacle as that into being.

But it was that very thing which was done here when the municipal council of Panama legislated for the 300,000 inhabitants of this territory in severing all their obligations of fealty to Colombia, making them free and independent, and doing these things without consulting any of those 300,000 inhabitants save an insignificant minority, restricted in numbers practically to the original band of secessionists.

HOW IT WAS PROCLAIMED.

It is not intended by the foregoing to impeach or compromise the existence of the new Republic. Such an attempt would be fatuous, for the new Republic is actual. The purpose is merely to show the incongruity of the procedure, although no Panamaian can be brought to see that there is anything national, incongruous, or contradictory in the fact that a Republic has been created by an ordinance passed by a city council. This inability of the Panamaians to realize what impresses Americans as little short of ludicrous is doubtless due to the fact that measures have been taken, though not by legislative steps, to bring the whole territory to accept the new form of government. Immediately after the creation of the Republic and the appointment of the junta by the city council of Panama the junta took steps to this end.

Emissaries were sent into the different provinces to proclaim the establishment of the Republic. These emissaries were effective orators, as are nearly all the people of these southern countries. They toured along both coasts, east and west, stopping at the principal cities. Their coming was unannounced in these cities, which, until the arrival of the emissaries, were without knowledge of the fact that Panama had seceded from Colombia. David, Chiriqui, Santiago, and other cities and towns along and adjacent to the Pacific coast; Bocas del Toro, Nombre de Dios, Porto Bello, etc., on the Caribbean shores, were visited in this way, and reports have been received from all of the emissaries, although some of them have not yet returned to Panama.

In each of these cities the emissary would, upon his arrival, employ the local band of musicians. Taking a stand in the principal plaza, he would draw his crowd by the band's efforts, and when a number sufficient for his purpose had assembled he would read the declaration of independence.

Following the reading would come his harangue, the burden of which was that the establishment of the Republic meant the construction of the ship canal by the United States across the Isthmus, and that the construction of this canal meant that the United States would pay to the Republic a sum of money sufficient to make all of the people rich and prosperous. This was done in every instance, and the orator's argument, being addressed to a people among whom poverty in its most abject form prevails, never failed to elicit enthusiastic responses in approval of what had been done. The business of the emissary was then to report to the junta that the people of that town accepted the Republic and gloried in its creation. This procedure has been followed in treating with all of the people of the Isthmus. In a more formal manner some of the provinces have communicated with the junta through their governors.

Support has been tendered in this way of men and arms to support the Republic's independence, and while it is not pretended that anything like all of the people of the Republic have been communicated with, the assurances, through the emissaries and the governors, have been sufficient in number to carry the conviction that the people of Panama generally approve the severance of their relations with Colombia. If they lack patriotism of their own, they certainly have no love for Colombia, and are glad to escape her dominion; their willingness extending to ready acceptance, after the event, of all that was done by the city council of Panama, which enjoys the unique distinction of having by simple ordinance created a republic, so far as the formal structure of this Republic is concerned. From this it will appear—and such is the indisputable fact—that the Republic of Panama exists to-day, in its governmental features, because it is unopposed. The junta is governing without opposition, and while the allegiance of none of the people, except the soldiers and sailors, has been pledged to the new Republic, the junta constitutes a governing body de jure because there is no dispute as to its authority.

A REACTION IS CERTAIN.

Into the situation created under and by these contradictory conditions and methods there enter several elements of danger. The first and most important of these is delay in giving to the Government the form of more certain acceptability to the people. The people are acquiescent now because the condition is new and novel; but how long they will remain so is problematical. The conviction is universal among them that the United States will begin actual canal operations at once. Everybody is expecting money to flow freely within the next few days, because they have been encouraged to believe that the establishment of the Republic means the immediate beginning of work on the canal. This is seen in divers ways. Hotels whose bars have been closed since the cessation of canal work by the French, fourteen years ago, are preparing to open them within a few weeks. Owners of renting property in Panama and Colon, who have accepted nominal rents from the natives and nondescripts, are turning these people out of their premises in the expectation that within a few days there will be such an influx of Americans as to send rents booming. Speculation of every sort is rife, based upon this belief, and upon every tongue is the slogan, "The canal is coming." To Panamaians, who saw and participated in the riot of French extravagance and corruption, the fact that "the canal is coming" means flush times, and Panama can hardly restrain itself until the moment of actual operations arrives.

From this condition there is certain to be a reaction. The United States will not begin canal operations for months, for if the advice of men like Admiral Walker, Col. William Murray Black, the army sanitary expert, and other Americans now here is to be accepted months must elapse, even after the ratification of the treaty by the United States Senate, before sanitary conditions can be so improved as to permit the work of canal construction to begin. This means that a season of dire disappointment, inviting to dissatisfaction with the Government is certain to prevail, and facing this prospect the Government lacks proper recognition by the people. All thought of creating a government by the formal adoption of a constitution and the election of administrative officials waits upon Dr. Manuel Amador's return from the States, but the wiser heads believe a serious mistake is being made in thus delaying. The demand that a constitutional convention, with representatives from all the provinces, be called is becoming insistent, the more farseeing among the Panamaians believing that it is essential that the republican government be given a more substantial foundation and something upon which it can more certainly claim the adherence of the people than is possible through the mere fact that it exists now because it is without opposition.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Another disturbing factor, and one bound to assert itself sooner or later, is the conflict over the relations between church and state. The policy of the Conservatives, who for years governed the country, was that the state should support the church. The Liberals opposed this, and the sentiment among the leaders of the new Republic is that, while there should be no interference with the established religion—the Roman Catholic—the church must look to its communicants, and not to the state, for support. Among a people so poverty stricken as are the Panamaians the support of the church would mean the imposition of a serious burden; and as the padres are sure to encourage the people when the new policy shall have been actually inaugurated to think that they are being imposed upon, the religious unrest will assuredly provoke problems with which the Government will have to deal.

Already there are rumors of dissatisfaction. Jealousies are beginning to crop out among those who stood shoulder to shoulder in the creation of the Republic. The sentiment, prevalent a few days ago, that Doctor Amador should be the unopposed choice of the people for the first President of the Republic is beginning to modify, and an Arango party, fostered by powerful influences, is coming into existence, and when we remember that down here political campaigns are carried on in the form of revolutions, there is every necessity for the United States to insist upon immediate action toward the formation of a stable government chosen by the people and to which all the people will give their allegiance.

The Republic of Panama being nonexistent so far as the people are concerned and existing only because the provisional junta's authority has not been disputed, it is required, to correct this contradictory condition and to enable the serious problems which will shortly arise through disappointment and religious unrest to be properly and effectively handled, that a government be quickly established upon the consent and free participation of the people. Until that is done the Republic of Panama will continue as an anomaly, secure only in the fact that the interests of the United States are such that that Government will not permit this one to be destroyed, either by invasion from without or by disturbances within.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I had not contemplated participating in this discussion until within the last few days. I do not purpose going widely into the discussion even now; but sitting here, as I have been doing, listening to the various arguments that have been advanced on each side of the questions in issue, a clearer conception of the vast importance of the work in which we are here engaged has come to me. We are here to-day engaged in preparing the way for the greatest enterprise the world has ever known, both in its magnitude and in the beneficial results that must come from it to mankind.

The completion, Mr. President, of this great work means the connection of two oceans, furnishing a highway for the ships and the navies of all nations throughout all the ages of the future. Nations will rise and fall, empires will flourish and decay, but this great work, once accomplished, will endure forever, and I confess that I have been unable to suppress a desire to go on record as one who was willing to contribute his mite to do what was in his power to advance this great work.

I do not expect to be able, Mr. President, to contribute anything in the way of argument or suggestion to what has been said. I shall content myself in briefly outlining my views without attempting to go into detail.

I have no hesitancy, I have found no difficulty, in indorsing the position the Administration has taken on this question in giving to it my full and complete indorsement for every step it has taken, for every attitude it has assumed. But I contend that under the Constitution Congress has not the power to inquire into the circumstances or the conditions under which a coordinate branch of the Government shall exercise the powers granted to it under the Constitution.

The Constitution has divided the governmental powers among three distinct and independent branches. To the Congress it has given the legislative power, to the President it has given the executive power, and to the Supreme Court the judicial power; or, in other words, in the language of the Constitution, all judicial power is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may establish, while all the executive power is vested in the President.

Now, I shall not undertake to go into an argument to sustain the proposition that the President is empowered by the Constitution to recognize the independence of new states. That proposition has been argued so clearly, so fully, and so convincingly and unanswerably by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as set forth in Executive Document No. 56, of the Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, that I do not believe anything can be added to it. I know very well that I can add nothing to it, and I shall not attempt to do so.

But assuming, Mr. President, the correctness of the position taken there, and which I believe unquestionably is correct, that the power to recognize a new foreign state is vested by the Constitution in the President, it follows conclusively that he is the sole judge of the circumstances under which that power shall be exercised. If he is the sole judge, then, of the circumstances under which that power shall be exercised, we have no right or authority to go behind the finding he makes, and must necessarily make, that the conditions justify the act when he performs the act. No more right have we to inquire into the question by what authority, upon what evidence, or by what right he exercised such power in a given case than we have to inquire upon what testimony and upon what evidence the Supreme Court of the United States have arrived at a certain conclusion in a given cause.

Suppose, Mr. President, that an action were instituted in the name of the United States to condemn a certain tract of land for the public use, and the court should determine in that action that A was the owner of a certain interest in that land, and then it became our duty to make an appropriation to pay for that interest, and B should come here and say, "No; A was not the owner of that land; he had no title or right to it; the title was in me; the evidence upon which the court so found was false, and the court violated the law in coming to the conclusion it reached." Will it be said that we could listen to the statement of B in that regard? Will it be said that we could properly go behind the opinion of the Supreme Court and endeavor to ascertain upon what facts and upon what evidence they reached the conclusion they announced?

To put another case, Mr. President, suppose a bill shall pass though this body by a majority of one vote. Suppose prior to that time there had been a contest here as to whether or not a certain person is entitled to a seat in this body, and under that provision of the Constitution which says that each House of Congress is the sole judge of the elections, the returns, and the qualifications of their members, we determine that that party is entitled to a seat here, and he joins in voting for that bill. The President is required to either approve or disapprove all measures that pass the Congress, and the bill is sent to him.

Will it be said that he is authorized, under the law and the Constitution, to send here and inquire upon what evidence and under what circumstances we permit that man to occupy a seat in this Chamber? If the President may not do that, by what right do we pretend to criticise or condemn his action in arriving at any conclusion that he shall reach in the exercise of his powers under the Constitution, or rather, that when he, moving within his constitutional sphere, having taken a certain action, having reached a certain conclusion, by what right do we question the correctness of that conclusion? But, Mr. President, I do not deem it necessary to defend the action of the President on constitutional grounds. I have no hesitancy in saying that, in my judgment, he was warranted by the facts, warranted by the circumstances in doing exactly as he did.

What are the facts and what were the circumstances? We had a treaty with the Republic of New Granada entered into in 1846. By the terms of that treaty we are required, among other things, to guarantee to New Granada sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama. It was never contemplated by either party to that treaty that this Government in making that guaranty was required to protect the Republic of New Granada against uprisings of her own people. That is clearly shown in the correspondence in the very early years and life of that treaty. In support of that assertion I wish to read a statement that I think has not yet been read in the course of this discussion. I read from a letter of Mr. Pombo to Mr. Seward, May 29, 1861.

Mr. Pombo was the chargé d'affaires ad interim of the Granadian Confederacy. In this communication he relates to Mr. Seward certain conditions that he says are prevailing on the Isthmus. He goes on to show that the revolutionists have taken charge of the situation there, and states that he thinks it is important that the Government of the United States in its own interest should send troops to the Isthmus, but he says—and that is what I wish to read:

> The undersigned does not mean to insinuate that the United States should interfere in the political contest which is carried on in New Granada, but, as the two Governments have become allied in what has reference to the security of the transit across the Isthmus of Panama, in virtue of the mutual guarantics, stipulated for in the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1846, still extant, and, as doubtless the transit is threatened with a complete stoppage of all traffic, the undersigned believes that the time has arrived when the Government of his excellency ought to cooperate with that of the Granadian Confederacy to prevent the necessity of closing the interoceanic route.

What I particularly call attention to in that statement of this representative of New Granada is that—

The undersigned does not mean to insinuate that the United States should interfere in the political contest which is carried on in New Granada.

Later on, however, another minister of New Granada applied to Mr. Seward and asked him to send troops to the Isthmus of Panama to suppress the revolutionists. Mr. Seward, answering that application, under date of May 9, 1865, said:

Mr. Seward to Mr. Burton.

No. 134.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 9, 1865.

SIR: The question which has recently arisen under the thirty-fifth article of the treaty with New Granada, as to the obligation of this Government to comply with a requisition of the President of the United States of Colombia for a force to protect the Isthmus of Panama from invasion by a body of insurgents of that country has been submitted to the consideration of the Attorney-General. His opinion is that neither the text nor the spirit of the stipulation in that article, by which the United States engages to preserve the neutrality of the Isthmus of Panama, imposes an obligation on this Government to comply with a requisition like that referred to. The purpose of the stipulation was to guarantee the Isthmus against seizure or invasion by a foreign power only. It could not have been contemplated that we were to become a party to any civil war in that country by defending the Isthmus against another party.

Mr. President, the two extracts which I have read show that such was the view of both Governments at that time. If that be true, then it must have been contemplated that if by force of a revolution by the people of Panama an independent government should be established on the Isthmus the United States would in the nature and in the reason of things extend recognition to that new government. I say that this must have been contemplated by the parties who entered into the treaty. Just exactly that thing came to pass. In the course of time a revolution did occur. But I might say that that was not anything new on the Isthmus.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That was a normal condition.

Mr. FULTON. That was a normal condition, as the Senator from Indiana suggests. Indeed from the time of the entering into and the execution of this treaty the history of the people of Panama, and, indeed, of the entire Republic of Colombia, is but a chronicle of one revolution following quickly on the heels of another. Finally, however, a revolution occurred down there which was joined in by practically all of the people. Without dissent, so far as I have been able to discover, on the part of any particular portion of the people of Panama, a government was established and the revolution was complete.

I will admit, Mr. President, that if there had been any large proportion of the inhabitants of Panama in opposition to that Government, and if there had been any serious contention there as to whether or not the Government had been established, or as to whether or not the people resident there had given their allegiance to that Government, then there might be ground upon which to criticise the action of the President in recognizing the independence of that people. But when the people of Panama with one voice rose up and indorsed that Government, gave their allegiance to it, I ask on what authority and by what right could the President refuse to recognize them as a free and independent state? Some say: "Oh, well, there was not any need of being in a hurry about it; why should we have acted so hastily?" Let me say, in answer to this, that in the first place it is the duty of the President, under the Constitution, to determine when and under what circumstances he will exercise his constitutional prerogative.

But I undertake to say, in view of all the history and of all our relations with the people of Colombia and the Government of the Republic of Colombia, no one can fairly criticise the President if he was in somewhat of a hurry—I do not say that he was—but I say that he would have been justified in being in something of a hurry to change the conditions down there and enter into relations with the new Government.

During all the time that we have sustained relations with the people constituting the Government of the Republic of Colombia there has been constant turmoil, strife, and revolution, which has been a constant source of annoyance and irritation to the Government of the United States.

Senators, I think, will almost universally, and probably unanimously, indorse the proposition that when the Government of the United States lent its aid to the people of Cuba, secured for them their independence, and drove Spain away from the shores of the Western Hemisphere, it did right. That, I think, will be pretty generally conceded.

Why did we do right? Why were we authorized and justified in taking that step? We are told that we were justified in taking that step because of the fact that the government of Cuba, as conducted under Spanish rule, was a continuous source of disturbance, annoyance, and irritation to our people, and that, as a matter of self-protection, this Government was justified in taking the step that she did take in regard to Cuba.

I say, then, for a greater reason we would have been justified in going down there and assisting the State of Panama in securing its independence; we would have been perfectly justified in doing so upon the same doctrine and upon the same ground that we were justified, or that we justified ourselves and were justified by the entire civilized world, in extending aid to Cuba. For more than half a century the people of Panama had been struggling for their independence; struggling just as desperately as was Cuba struggling for hers; struggling against a tyranny and oppression that was just as cruel as that under which Cuba struggled and against which she fought. But the Government of the United States has at no time extended them aid.

For years the people of Panama had themselves been divided to a great extent, but finally, in this last revolution, they were entirely united, and being united, they formed their present Government.

What was the duty of the President under those circumstances but to extend to them the recognition that is due to an independent state when it has the support of all the people throughout the country over which it pretends to exercise authority? It is clearly his duty to recognize existing conditions. That is what the President did, and that is all he did.

I do not know, and I do not pretend to say, whether or not the people of Panama are made of that character of material, that sort of fiber, which, given more healthy environment and purer atmosphere in which to live and thrive, will develop a higher regard for public and private virtue in the future than they have manifested in the past.

I say I do not know what the truth is in that regard; but if such be the case, then surely it is a most fortunate thing for them and for every person who shall have anything to do with them that they have severed absolutely and finally their relations with the Republic of Colombia, for I have no confidence that any good can come out of the people of Colombia. It is a nation composed largely of highwaymen and bandits, if we may judge them by their history. Having a certain enthusiasm for the name of liberty, they have no conception of what constitutes liberty, or what the attributes of liberty are. As I have said, their whole history is a history of revolution, a history of wrongs and outrages perpetrated by the dominant party on the minority.

Nor is it true that the people of Colombia in this turbulent spirit that they have shown throughout their history are simply evidencing the unrest of a primitive people struggling up through the darkness of ignorance and savagery to the light of civilization. If that were true, we would have some patience with them and some confidence that ultimately they might arrive at a state of equilibrium. But it is not true. The real truth is, and their whole history demonstrates it, that this unrest and turbulence which has characterized them throughout all the years they have had a so-called government is but the native diabolism of a race of instinctive buccaneers.

Their territory was one of the first sections of the Western Hemisphere occupied by a European people. True, it was for some centuries under the baneful and corrupting influence of a Spanish colonial government, but for over eighty years it has been an independent state. Yet its history during that period is but a history of revolutions, of cruel and devastating civil wars, in which no principle higher than the right of the ins to plunder the outs seems ever to have been at stake.

As indicative of the character of the people and their government at the present time, I wish to read only one of a vast number of like instances reported by our minister at Bogota in 1902 before any question had arisen about this treaty:

I wish to cite a case that recently came under my personal observation: On the 3d instant Mr. Albert B. Dod, a citizen of the United States, was in Bogota on some business, intending to leave early the following morning. His two riding mules, with saddles, bridles, saddlebags, waterproofs, etc., he left at the stable of a foreigner named Turner. Mr. Dod took noon breakfast with me at my residence, after which he went to look after the animals, and there found that his saddles, bridles, etc., had been taken by a Government official, who had left a receipt for the property, fixing its value in the receipt at 1,000 pesos. It was impossible to trace the property that day, so that Mr. Dod was therefore compelled to go to a saddler and buy another outfit, which, although substantially no better than the one taken, cost him about 5,000 pesos.

Aside from the inconvenience and vexation of such a seizure, Mr. Dod is certain to be a large financial loser, for the Government insists upon its right to arbitrarily fix the value of expropriated property. Even with the good offices of this legation, I do not believe that he can get more than 1,000 pesos for his property, and even that only after months of perseverance and waiting. I am quite of the opinion that such a claim should go through the diplomatic channel.

There are dozens of stores in Bogota selling saddles, and hundreds of saddles for sale at a fair price. Therefore whence comes the urgent, immediate, and pressing emergency that would justify the forcible expropriation of Mr. Dod's property? Certainly under the system of arbitrarily fixing the value of such property it is much cheaper to get it in this way, and the day of payment is indefinitely postponed; but I can not believe it consistent with the guaranties of public treaties nor the law of nations.

And he continues commenting on the case. I do not care to read it further. I simply read it to show the character of the government that was conducted by Colombia. I submit that a government that has no higher regard for the rights of the individual and for the obligations that are imposed by common honesty is not a government out of which any good can come; it is not a government that it becomes the United States of America to encourage.

Now, what was the treatment by the Colombian Government of the people of Panama? I do not intend to take the time to read it, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an article that I have taken from the Morning Oregonian, under date of December 8, 1903, written by a special correspondent from the Isthmus of Panama.

This correspondent goes on to detail the treatment that was meted out to the people of Panama by the Government of Colombia. Taxation was the only purpose for which the people of Panama were used. The only purpose for which they were employed was to pay the expenses of the Government at Bogota. The Panama Railroad, by the terms of the agreement under which it was constructed, was supposed to pay $250,000 a year, and did pay that amount. Twenty-five thousand dollars of that money was required under the agreement to go to the treasurer of Panama; yet not one dollar of that money ever found its way into the treasury of the State of Panama; every dollar of it was taken to Bogota. Taxes were collected, yet not one dollar of them was paid into the treasury of Panama or expended for its benefit; and when taxes were not sufficient, when the amount required by the Government at Bogota could not be raised by the ordinary methods of taxation, they had another method of getting money. I call attention to that.

In the article in the Morning Oregonian to which I have referred the correspondent says:

> Some twenty-five or thirty prominent conservatives of Panama gathered at Governor Alban's residence one morning in answer to an invitation to breakfast with the governor.

Then the correspondent goes on to say that after they had been invited there, and after they had assembled there, they were notified that the grounds were surrounded by soldiers, that the Government was in need of something like $100,000, and they were required to raise it, and they did raise it because of the grounds being surrounded. That argument was unanswerable. I shall not take the time to read a description of all of the abuses that are set forth in this article, but I ask permission to attach the article as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not think the President of the United States requires any defense at my hands because of the position he has assumed in our relations with the Republics of Panama and Colombia. He certainly does not require any defense from me, and if he were wanting a defender he would not call upon me. Yet, as I have said before, I have no apologies to offer for any position he has taken or for any attitude he has assumed in our relations with those Republics.

Many severe criticisms have been passed on the President during the course of this discussion. We heard a very severe castigation administered to him to-day by the very able and eloquent Senator who preceded me in the discussion [Mr. CARMACK]; but, Mr. President, whatever may be the political future of the present occupant of the White House, whether he shall be called again by the people of this nation to preside as their Chief Executive, he will go down into history as one of the greatest, one of the purest, and one of the most patriotic men that has ever occupied the high office of President of the United States. He will have many great achievements to his credit; but, in my judgment, the one upon which his fame—his enduring fame—will rest more than upon all others will be the high, patriotic duty he performed and the service he rendered this nation in assuring to it and to the civilized world the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. President, during this discussion a number of Senators on the other side, and I do not know but most of them, have spoken in kindly, even eulogistic, words of the lamented McKinley. I listened to those words of kindness spoken of him with the greatest interest and pleasure, because they were spoken of one whom I have ever honored, reverenced, and loved. But I could not help remembering that it had not always been so. Roosevelt is the tyrant, the Napoleon of to-day, but it was only a few short months ago when McKinley was denounced in one breath as a weak, willing, and pliant tool of designing men, and in another breath as a wicked tyrant, who was engaged in the business of oppressing a weak, an unfortunate, and a defenseless people.

But, sir, all those things have passed away. McKinley has gone to his last account; the smoke and dust of partisan strife have cleared away, and through a clearer atmosphere and with a clearer vision it is seen that McKinley, instead of having been a tyrant, was a great, noble, heroic soul, and that the people, whom it was charged he was oppressing, are to-day, under the policies inaugurated by him, enjoying a higher prosperity and greater tranquillity, public and private, than they ever painted or pictured for themselves in their wildest dreams.

I do not speak of this in any spirit of unkindness, Mr. President, but I can not but think, nor can I refrain from expressing the thought, how pleasing to him it would have been if, when surrounded by all these perplexing questions, when weighed down by the terrible sense of responsibility that these questions imposed, some of these beautiful sayings and kind expressions in his behalf might then have been uttered.

Mr. President, I sat here the other day and listened to a great speech by a great Senator on the other side of the Chamber, a gentleman to whom I always listen with interest and usually with profit, but on that day he gave utterance to a sentiment that I could wish he had failed to utter. I would not refer to it were it not for the fact that I have heard the same statement made here and elsewhere a number of times. In referring to the present President and the probability of his nomination to the Presidency this year he spoke of him as the man whom everybody is for and whom nobody wants. Does the Senator mean to tell us that all sincerity has gone out of the land and departed from the people? What means this universal voice that is going up from the Republican hosts all over the land? Do they not mean what they say, and do they not say what they mean?

The other day away out on the shores of the Pacific sea in the State of Oregon the legislature was called in extraordinary session, and the very first day they met, as if actuated by one common impulse, the Republican members of both houses met in joint assembly and unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt and demanding that he be nominated to lead the Republican party in 1904. Do you suppose that those men did not mean what they said or that they did not say what they meant?

The other day there was in this city an assembly of the leading editors of representative Republican newspapers of the United States—strong men, independent men, the men who do more than all others toward molding and making public sentiment in this country. They resolved in favor of Theodore Roosevelt for President the next time. Did they not mean what they said? Did they not say what they meant? What is meant by this statement that everybody is for him and nobody wants him when men of that character and organizations of that character tell the world that he is their choice for the Presidency?

Let me tell you, sir, if you have any doubt about whom the people are for or who their choice is, go down and ask the laboring men of this or any other city. Go ask the hewers of wood and the drawers of water whom they are in favor of, and they will tell you, and the name they will give you is Roosevelt. Go down in the anthracite coal regions and ask the men who labor there whom they favor. They will tell you, and the name they will give you is Roosevelt. Go down among the dwellers in the tenement houses of the great cities of this country and ask them—they who were threatened only a few short months ago with indescribable suffering because of a shortage in the fuel supply.

Ask them who it was that came to their relief, who had the courage to bring the contending forces together, and to see that justice was dealt out to both sides and the country was saved the cruelty and suffering that would have been upon it but for that action. Ask them who did it, and ask them whom they are for and whom they want to see elected to the presidency. They will tell you, and the name will be Roosevelt. And if you are still in doubt, wait until the evening of the 8th day of November next, until there are counted the ballots that will rain into ballot boxes all day long with the name of Roosevelt electors on them, and when that result has been announced your doubt will vanish as the mist before the rising sun, because there is going to be the greatest majority, in my judgment, given to Theodore Roosevelt in November, 1904, that was ever given any man in all the history of this country.

APPENDIX.

[From the Morning Oregonian, Saturday, December 19, 1903.]

BORE MANY ILLS—PANAMA WAS EVER BLED BY COLOMBIA—NO ONE WAS SPARED—CANAL STRAW BROKE THE CAMEL'S BACK—SECESSION WELL PLANNED—LIBERALS RULED WITH HIGH HAND THEY WERE USED TO—AN ARMY RAISED BY FORCE—ADROIT WAY IN WHICH GENERAL ALBAN LED UP TO THE CLIMAX AT A BANQUET TENDERED HIS POLITICAL OPPONENTS—FEATURES OF THE SECESSION.

The rejection of the Hay-Herran canal treaty was the straw that broke the camel's back.

Ninety-nine out of every one hundred approve all that has been done toward establishing independence.

The motto of Colombia was to take everything from and give nothing to Panama.

In his last dilemma, General Alban, leader of the Liberals, extorted money from the Conservatives.

The Panamaian army was largely made by force.

Recruiting parties, without compassion, drafted every male above 10 years of age into the service. No excuses availed to secure their release. They were either shackled or their hands bound behind their backs.

[Letter No. 2, by Merrill A. Teague, staff correspondent of the Oregonian.]

PANAMA, R. P., December 8.

Before proceeding to a more detailed elucidation of the genesis and nature of the Republic of Panama, with which the United States is destined to have relations of the most intimate character, it may be well to explain in detail the excuses under which the Republic justifies its creation.

Like all Latin-American republics, the history of Panama is the history of strife and turbulence. The people, while fairly well educated, are dominated by the spirit of "mañana." They are at the same time low-principled, holding in slight regard any and all obligations of fealty, thinking more of their personal divertisement, which assumes the form of cock and bull fighting, gambling fiestas, and sports of more or less questionable morality, than they do of their material welfare or mental advancement. This applies, of course, to the majority.

In the minority is the better class, men of wealth and substance, of sound ideas and strict integrity, who live well, regard their homes, and are in every way commendable. It is upon this latter class that the brunt of every movement must fall. If the Government is assailed and a revolution is to be suppressed, they are the ones who are called upon to pay the expenses. If they themselves, for the sake of their country's advancement, plan a revolution, they can only make headway in their project by resort to corruption and bribery, which demand that they make heavy personal sacrifices for the sake of that which will benefit all classes.

OWES ITS EXISTENCE TO THEM.

It is to this latter class that the Republic of Panama owes its existence. The majority, which pays no taxes, lives in squalor almost indescribable, and subsists in the meanest manner imaginable and virtually without labor, cares not one whit about independence. That majority has never been made to feel, in any way calculated to excite its resentment, the rigor of Colombian maladministration and perfidy, and to it the creation of the Republic appealed more as does a holiday than as anything of a serious business and political character.

For five years and up to about one year ago the Isthmus was the scene of revolutionary strife. There are two parties on the Isthmus, or were until the Republic was formed. These were the Liberals and the Conservatives, or, in the political parlance of the States, the "outs" and the "ins." The Liberals, prior to the creation of the Republic, had a practical monopoly on culture, refinement, intelligence, and wealth. The Conservatives were in control of the sources and agencies of the government of this Department and were sustained by the Government at Bogota, while the Liberals fought incessantly to overthrow the Conservatives and free themselves from the yoke of oppression which had been placed about their necks.

During this revolution, which only terminated when the United States consul-general, H. O. Gudger, negotiated a treaty of peace about one year ago, after the naval battle of Panama Bay, in which the Colombian gunboat Lauferre was sunk and Governor Carlos Alban killed, the Government exhausted its ingenuity in devising schemes for raising money and volunteers. The whole story of that revolution will never be known, for down here revolutions are nothing more than political campaigns, elections being held according to the law of the bullet and bayonet instead of by the ballot. For the better part of the five years during which this revolution raged the writ of habeas corpus and all other processes for the legal and judicial protection of life and property were suspended, either by decrees issued by the Government at Bogota or by decree of the governor of the Department of Panama.

HOW ALBAN RAISED THE MONEY.

The Government was almost, if not entirely, bankrupt, and in order to raise money levied freely upon the people. These levies were made through the departmental administration, for Bogota was helpless, the only money known there being a worthless paper currency, while the only money known or accepted in this Department was, and still is, Colombian silver. The methods adopted for levying upon the people for money to defray the expenses incident to suppressing the revolution were most heinous in character and tyrannical in operation. Outside of Panama it is generally understood that this money was raised by "voluntary subscription." Here where all the facts are known the term "voluntary subscription" is symbolical with outrage, polite plunder, and other reprehensible means, in which might figures as a solitary virtue.

One incident, the most notable among the many that are generally known and definitely authenticated, will serve to illustrate the grotesque nature of these "voluntary subscription" schemes. The revolution having been protracted for years, and the Liberals having been so thoroughly drained of money that their resources were almost entirely exhausted, Governor Alban reached a point where it was necessary for him to raise immediately a large sum of money.

Up to that time the whole expense of the revolution, on both sides, had been borne by the Liberals, who were its instigators and promoters, and who, by the "voluntary subscription" process, had been compelled to defray the expenses of suppressing that movement for which they were themselves responsible. In his last dilemma, however, Governor Alban had resort to the resources of the Conservatives, the hour having arrived when they could no longer escape extortion. The incident can best be related in the words of a Conservative who was one of the sufferers.

LED UP IN ADROIT WAY TO CLIMAX.

"Some twenty-five or thirty prominent Conservatives of Panama gathered at Governor Alban's residence one morning in answer to an invitation to breakfast with the governor," said this former Conservative in relating the incident to your correspondent. "Breakfast was served in an elaborate fashion. The conversation was general, the revolution being merely discussed in a desultory way until coffee and cigarettes were served. At that point Governor Alban entered upon an elaborate statement of the condition on the Isthmus. He detailed the progress of the revolution, praised us one and all for the stanch manner in which we had supported the Government, and finally admitted he was exceedingly hard pressed for money, declaring after an elaborate explanation that he was compelled to raise a very large sum of money immediately. Entering then upon a circumstantial account of how he had drained the Liberals until they could no longer assist the Government, he led up in an adroit way to the climax, which was reached when he drew a paper from his pocket and remarked:

"'Now, senores, I must have this money, and I am compelled, much to my regret, to ask you to assist me in raising it. I have here a subscription list, which recites that the amounts you will put down opposite your names are given voluntarily. To show that I have no desire to act unfairly, I have headed this list with my own subscription for $50,000, and I trust you will not let me outdo you in tendering the Government generous support. Incidentally, I may say that you are all under arrest. The house is surrounded by soldiers. None of you can escape.'

"And smiling suavely and bowing gracefully, the governor moved toward the exit, saying as he withdrew:

"'With your permission, I will retire for one hour. At the end of that time I shall return, and during my absence I trust that you will arrange this voluntary subscription among yourselves with a spirit of such generosity that my imperative demands can all be satisfied without annoyance.'"

AN ARMY MADE BY FORCE.

The sequel to the story is involved in no mystery. The company of Conservatives was helpless. They raged and fumed; but Alban was not a man to be trifled with, and when at the end of the hour he returned, the "voluntary subscription" had been consummated. The only parallel for this system of raising money to defray the expenses of the revolution is found in the schemes resorted to for procuring soldiers to fight with the Government forces. These soldiers were never known by any other name than "volunteers," but they were the most remarkable "volunteers" the world has ever known. All schemes of conscription were discounted by Alban's methods for increasing the strength of his army. His recruiting parties would go into the bush, away from the Liberal forces, and without compassion draft the services of every able-bodied male above 10 years of age with whom they came in contact.

These men, whether negroes or Colombians, whether Liberals or Conservatives, whether they knew what the revolution was about or not, would be taken into custody by the recruiting parties, which were always trusted and well-paid supporters of the Government. No excuses availed to secure their release. They were either shackled or had their hands bound behind their backs, and then shackled with ropes about their ankles, and were driven like cattle into the Government camps. These men were the "volunteers" of the Colombian army on the Isthmus, and it is axiomatic here that no man ever volunteered from the Isthmus for service in the army under Alban except he appeared in camp with his arms tied behind his back and a rope about his ankles. There are in existence to this day notes written by recruiting officers to camp commanders which run like this:

"I am sending you a squad of fresh volunteers. Please return the ropes at once, as I may be able to send you another squad of volunteers to-morrow or the day after."

MEN OF WEALTH HELPLESS.

Such outrages as these "volunteer subscriptions" and the procuring of "volunteers" for the army were not isolated. They were common occurrences of the times. The men of wealth who were drained of their resources by the subscription scheme remonstrated, but were helpless. Those who were drafted into the army by the roped "volunteer" process were in the same plight. I asked one of those who stands upon the records as having volunteered during the revolution why he did not desert. His answer told the whole story of the Isthmus: "Where would I have deserted to?" Here he was and here he had to remain, and when he was drafted into the army as a "volunteer" there was nothing for him to do except accept the inevitable, for Panama, save for a few miles either side of the railroad, is an impenetrable wilderness, and the deserter from the army had no haven of refuge.

MONOPOLIES OF MANY KINDS.

Besides these two processes for filling the treasury and strengthening the army Colombia was prolific of schemes for raising revenue. By a decree issued at Bogota the sale of salt was created into a government monopoly. Every merchant in the entire domain was forbidden by law to deal in this commodity, which was vended by agents of the Government and exchanged for exorbitant prices. The Department of Panama was compelled to divert her revenues from the ordinary uses and turn them over to the Federal Government, by which they were used to pay the soldiers. The Government monopolized the sale of matches, just as it did of salt, and in a land where the smoking of cigarettes is universal among those of either sex and of all ages the revenues derived from this source were not inconsiderable.

In a similar manner a monopoly was created on the sale of cigars, cigarettes, and tobacco, one firm in this city having been granted the exclusive rights for the entire Department to deal in these articles in return for the payment of $100,000 silver annually into the treasury at Bogota. Ice, too, was a monopoly, the right to manufacture and sell that luxury of the Tropics being let at a handsome figure to a concessionaire, who used his opportunity to such good advantage that, prior to the establishment of the Republic, the normal price paid in Panama for ice was 12½ cents Colombian silver a pound, equivalent to 5½ cents American currency.

ONE OF THE WORST OUTRAGES.

One of the worst outrages, however, was that perpetrated in regard to the slaughtering of beef. Under a decree issued at Bogota, a monopoly for the slaughtering of beef was created and let out to a concessionaire. By the terms of this decree it was unlawful even for the owner of a steer to kill the animal and dress it for private consumption. He had to send word to the concessionaire, who dispatched an agent to superintend the killing, collect a fee, and take possession of the hide. Every hide became at the moment of the killing, the property of the Colombian Government, and they were carefully collected, shipped to New York, and sold for the account of the Federal treasury.

The Government at Bogota realized, also, $87,000 Colombian silver annually in return for the gambling concession, which was openly sold to a firm known as Pratt & Seymour. By this concession the firm named is given the exclusive right for the entire Department to maintain and operate gambling devices. In return for this concession the firm has been paying Bogota $57,000 annually for the Pacific side of the Isthmus and $30,000 annually for the Caribbean side, where its operations are restricted to the city of Colon. In addition to the various forms of gambling conducted by this firm, it leases to saloons and other proprietors of establishments the right to maintain poker games, roulette wheels, crap tables, etc.

OTHER FORMS OF EXTORTION.

The assertion is made upon authority and fully substantiated that the Government at Bogota let slip no opportunity to secure possession of the money in the isthmian coffers, whether it was public or private in character. There are families in Panama that can show proof of the fact that within the last five years they have paid to the Colombian Government, under one form of extortion and another, not less than $100,000, while every man of vested means has been compelled by some process to surrender a portion of his wealth.

In addition to this scheme of mulcting individuals and creating monopolies in the commodities of life, the Bogota Government borrowed virtually every cent of the revenues of the Department of Panama, amounting to about $500,000 (silver) a year. To insure the success of these projects for relieving the Federal Government of the expense of suppressing the revolution on the Isthmus, Bogota has maintained a consistent attitude in permitting none save foreigners to administer the Government on the Isthmus.

Señor Jose Domingo de Obaldia, who was governor of the department at the time of the recent revolution, was the first native Panamaian to be intrusted with that office for many years, all of his predecessors, save those who served under ad interim appointments, being dispatched to Panama from remote parts of the Colombian Republic. This process insured against any leniency in the enforcement of the decrees issued at Bogota, for the governors of the department have with one accord been in touch with the federal government, as was Alban, and ready to go to any extreme to satisfy its desires.

RENTAL OF THE RAILROAD.

There is, too, another phase of the past history of Panama which is not without interest in view of recent events. Since 1857, the year in which it was completed, the Panama Railroad has been paying $250,000 (gold) into the Colombian treasury annually. Under the stipulations of the railroad concession $25,000 (gold) was to have been paid the Federal Government and $25,000 (gold) was to have been covered into the departmental treasury at Panama. Colombia has, however, taken the whole rental for the concession. This amount in gold is equivalent to about $600,000 in Colombian silver, which circulates only in the Department of Panama, and to about $5,000,000 annually in the depreciated paper currency, which is the only money known in other portions of the Colombian Republic.

The monopolization of this sum, together with the sale of concessions and the trading monopolies formerly held by the Bogota Government, means that the Federal Government has been taking $1,000,000 (silver) annually for many years past. This amount, taken out of a country in which the entire stock of silver is to-day estimated at not more than $1,500,000, or about $5 per capita, has imposed upon Panama a burden difficult to bear.

BROKE THE CAMEL'S BACK.

While practicing this extortion, Colombia has been most neglectful of the interests of Panama. In all the years the Bogota Government has been milking the Department of Panama not one dollar of the federal revenue has been spent in the Department for public improvements. There is not in existence in the whole of Panama to-day a single bridge, street, plaza, public building, or other structure of public utility or comfort the expense of which was borne by the Colombian Government. In a word, the motto at Bogota was to take everything from and give nothing to Panama.

To cap the climax Colombia rejected the Hay-Herran treaty, under which Panama hoped to see the canal constructed. That was the straw which broke the camel's back. Panama was willing to stand all her other ills, but when the mulcting processes of the Bogota Government were carried to the extreme of rejecting that treaty, the revolution flashed out to instant success, and all that has been done toward establishing Panama independence is to-day approved by 99 out of every 100 people on the Isthmus.

Reliable advices from the seven provinces in the new Republic show that there is no disposition to contest the incumbent Government, the population almost unanimously realizing that by the coup for independence the construction of the canal is assured and freedom from the maladministration and oppression which Bogota has imposed upon the Department for years is made certain.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. At this time I should like to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate take up for consideration unobjected pension bills on the Calendar. I will say to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that if that arrangement is made, I shall see that it does not interfere with an executive session, and I hope he will give us that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will include in his request for unanimous consent, bills correcting military records.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will include those, too.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from North Dakota will add that if any Senator is then speaking in open session upon the general subject of our Panama relations he will not press his request, I shall not object.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will not press it, of course, until the address is finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock to-morrow consideration may be given to unobjected pension cases and bills to remove charges of desertion reported from the Military Affairs Committee, the execution of the order not to interfere, however, with any Senator who may then be addressing the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

Mr. FAIRBANKS and Mr. CULLOM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice to the Senate that at the conclusion to-day of the addresses upon the subject of Panama I would move that the Senate take up Calendar No. 170. I trust that will be agreeable to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TELLER. What is the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I rose for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, the purpose being to take up the treaty this afternoon. If the bill which the Senator from Indiana proposes to call up will not take any considerable time, I am willing to yield. Will the Senator from Indiana state the nature of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator from Indiana would tell us what the bill is. I have been desirous of having the Senate go to the Calendar.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is a bill appointing a commission to acquire a site for the construction of a building for the accommodation of the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. TELLER. That bill will create a good deal of discussion. There will be quite decided opposition to the bill in the form in which it is drawn.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is quite possible, and the discussion might as well begin now as later, it seems to me.

Mr. TELLER. Not if the Senator from Illinois wants to call up the treaty.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not press his request this afternoon. There are some special reasons why I desire to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for the purpose of considering the treaty.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I realize that it is important to get the treaty out of the way, and when I gave my notice yesterday I was not aware that the Senator would ask to have an executive session this afternoon. I will withhold my motion for the time being, with the understanding, however, that it will be renewed at the earliest opportunity hereafter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 10, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution for the transportation of Porto Rican teachers to the United States and return.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—CONNELL VS. HOWELL.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3, and in pursuance of a notice given last week, I now call up for present consideration the contested-election case of William Connell v. George Howell, from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 195.

Resolved, That Hon. George Howell was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That Hon. William Connell was duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth district of the State of Pennsylvania, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DRISCOLL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following resolutions as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William Connell was not elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That George Howell was elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state here that the majority and minority of this committee have agreed between themselves that the debate on this question shall commence now and continue until to-morrow at 3 o'clock, and that then the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolutions offered by the committee and on the substitute, and I ask unanimous consent that that order be now made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate continue upon these resolutions and the substitute until to-morrow at 3 o'clock, and that the previous question be ordered at that time on the resolutions and the substitute.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if the time is to be equally divided?

Mr. DRISCOLL. The time to be equally divided and to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi on his side and by myself on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, before entering upon the discussion of this case on the merits it may not be inappropriate to refer briefly to the magnitude of the task involved in the examination of the record and in the preparation of the report to the House. This contest is from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Pennsylvania, which is composed of the single and entire county of Lackawanna, located in the northeastern part of the State. The election was held on the 4th day of November, 1902. Thereafter, and within the time allowed by law, the returns from that district were canvassed and counted by the board empowered with that duty, and as the result of that canvass Hon. George Howell, the contestee, was declared to have received 13,000 votes, and in like manner Hon. William Connell, the contestant, was declared to have received 13,139 votes, and in pursuance of said count and canvass Hon. George Howell received a certificate of election by a plurality of 461 votes.

The contestant, feeling aggrieved and that he actually received a plurality of the legal votes cast, concluded to contest the election with his adversary, and within the time allowed by law filed a notice of contest, consisting of eleven counts or general charges, setting forth with much particularity and definiteness the facts and allegations on which he proposed to prosecute his case. Those allegations are contained in the record and briefly stated in the report of your committee, and would not be repeated here except to give the House some idea of the substance of contestant's claim and the grounds on which he contends that he and not the contestee was duly elected.

The contestant claims in this case that many votes were cast in said election for Member of Congress by men who were not registered and who did not make legal proof of their right to vote at said election; by men who were not of the age of 21 years on the date of said election; by men who were not citizens of the United States on the date of said election; by men who had failed to pay their taxes in conformity with the requirements of law, and by men who were not residents of the election districts in which they voted.

It also charges that there were fraudulent registrations, fraudulent voting on the basis of the same; violations of the law by judges, inspectors, and clerks of election districts; substitutions, duplications, personations; that intimidation was resorted to, moral and physical; that force, threats, and violence were used; that fraud was practiced by the election officers and other friends of the contestee, with their connivance and procurement, to such an extent as to vitiate the returns in several districts and that in those districts the law and the duty of the election officers were openly and flagrantly violated, and that the election returns were so tainted and permeated with fraud practiced by the election officers and political friends of the contestee as to vitiate the returns from those districts and render them absolutely null and void. No question was raised by the contestee's counsel but what the evidence introduced was competent and material under the notice of contest. Neither is any question raised in the view of the minority presented to this House.
